Miss Alice professed faith in Christ at Holy Neck Christian Church, when she was about the age of 13, under the preaching of Evangelist Jones, and united with that Church, where she remained a true member until some eighteen years ago when she moved to Norfolk to live, transferring her Church membership to the Christian Memorial Temple. For the past twelve years she has made her home in Portsmouth, Va., and since her residence in Portsmouth, her Church membership has been with the First Christian Church of this city, and she was thus a member at the time of her death. Wherever she went to make her home, she carried her Church membership with her, a splendid example for others to follow.

For the past ten years she had been employed by the Seaboard Railway, and because of her accuracy and faithfulness in the discharge of her duty, she won the absolute confidence and high esteem of her employers and of those who worked by her side in the same office. Miss Alice lived a sacrificing life. She lievd for others. Some weeks ago she was granted a two weeks' vacation by her employers, but instead of going to some place of quiet, she went to the Sanatorium at Charlottesville, Va., to spend the time with her little nephew, James Wesley Parker, who is a patient in that institution.

A more devoted sister and aunt never lived than Miss Alice, and she was loved in the same way. She was the quiet, unassuming type of Chrsitian, kind, gentle and patient. The impress of her beautiful life will not soon fade away. It was her pastor's privilege to be with her when she breathed her last, and she died without a struggle, her spirit went home to God who gave it.

To the loved ones we extend our deepest sympathy, and commend them to Jesus who is touched with the feelings of our infirmities and who is able to cheer our sorrow-stricken hearts. He is "the resurrection of the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live."

The funeral was conducted by the writer, assisted by Revs. H. E. Rountree, James H. Lightbourne, and Dr. H. W. Dawding, in Holy Neck Church. Interment in the Church cemetery.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

BUILDING A COUNTRY SUNDAY SCHOOL.

That which should interest, and no doubt does deeply concern, very many CHRISTIAN SUN readers is how to build a country Sunday School. A very large per cent of our Sunday Schools are country Sunday Schools. More than this. A very large per cent of our pastors for the future, our missionaries, our leaders in Church activity, are now in these country Sunday Schools. Upon the character of the training of these future leaders very largely depend the kind and character of the Church of the future. On this account, if on no other, CHRISTIAN SUN readers ought to know how to build and conduct to greatest efficiency a country Sunday School.

But there is another and a greater reason. If the country Sunday School is to hold its own against the many other attractions of Sunday morning, particularly attractions produced with and by the automobile, then the country Sunday School has got to make the effort of its life. Just saying "Go to Sunday School," and then find haphazard, indifferent, any sort of methods, or no methods, when the pupil gets there, will not do any longer. If the young person of our day in the country is to be held in the Sunday School, then there must be something in that school of efficiency, of methods, of activity, of attraction to hold and keep him there. The country Sunday School, to live and grow and achieve, must be built—must be constructed and conducted on the right basis and according to proper proportions, plans and methods.

On this account, the writer rejoices exceedingly that a long-time friend who has given many active, consecrated years to work in the country Sunday School, has thought out and wrought out from his own observations and experience a volume entitled "Building a Country Sunday School." This volume is from the pen of E. L. Middleton, general secretary Sunday School department, Baptist State Convention of North Carolina. It is certainly a worth-while book. If we knew how to do it we would induce every Sunday School superintendent, and every Sunday School teacher who reads THE SUN to send for and read this book. It can be had in paper binding for 60 cents, or in cloth for $1.00, from the Fleming H. Revell Company, New York, or of the Baptist Book Store, Raleigh, N. C. The book is in no sense denominational, and is as well adapted to the needs of our Christian Sunday Schools as to Baptist schools. It has 159 pages, packed full of the very best, most practical and common-sense suggestions and methods for building and keeping built a country Sunday School that we have found anywhere. The book does not shoot over the heads of folks, but gets right down to practical business and suggestions, good for any Sunday School and such as any school will do well to put into practice. We trust many SUN readers who care for Sunday Schools will secure and read this splendid, helpful volume. A new and better day will dawn for many of our country Sunday Schools when their superintendents or teachers read this book carefully and seek to put into practice some of its splendid plans and suggestions.

A RECENT PENTECOSTAL SERMON.

On Pentecost Sunday, in his Baltimore pulpit, Dr. Peter Ainslie, perhaps the most influential member of the Disciples of Christ in our day, preached a great sermon on open baptism as completing the highway of Christian toleration leading to ultimate Christian union. This sermon is printed in full in the June 28th issue of Christian Work. Coming from the recognized apostle of Christian union of his Church, this sermon ought to be highly productive of good results.

Dr. Ainslie says: "There are many barriers to unity, but there are three ritualistic barries to full fellowship in Protestant Christianity. These are the closed pulpit, close Communion, and closed membership. Barton W. Stone was the prophet of the open pulpit, and consequently had to leave the Presbyterian Church of Kentucky, where the closed pulpit was practiced a hundred years ago. Thomas Campbell was the prophet of open Communion, and consequently had to leave the Seceder Presbyterian Church, which practiced close Communion. These two movements formed a partial union and became the Disciples of Christ. Therefore, historically and morally, the Disciples are committed to the removal of the third ritualistic barrier, which is closed membership; else the prophetic services of Barton W. Stone and Thos. Campbell are not only incomplete, but discounted by the present-day Disciples."

Members of the Christian Church, of which Barton W. Stone was one of the triumvirate of founders, will read this paragraph with wonder. The truth it contains only serves to cloud a matter that needs clear elucidation. Some years ago, representatives of the Disciples and the Christians agreed to investigate the facts as to Barton W. Stone, and it was conceded that he left the Campbell movement, returned to the fellowship of the Christian Church, and died in its ministry. He left it because it did not practice open baptism of membership. Stone is here coupled with Campbell as having erred in his insistence on baptism by immersion only as the door of admission to Church membership. The fact is that the blame attaches only to Campbell, and that Stone returned to the movement he himself had helped to initiate because that movement embodied a feasible platform of Christian union, for which his whole life was invested.

How easy it would have been for Dr. Ainslie to have stated that Stone returned to the Christian Church, which from its beginning a generation before the Campbell movement, had embodied the open pulpit, open Communion, and open baptism (Dr. Ainslie says membership, because his thought is that Disciple ministers and laymen will continue to baptize only by immersion, though accepting on letter of transfer persons baptized by other modes), including the right of private judgment in all matters! Our Church has stood on this platform for more than a hundred years, and, God helping her, will continue to stand there.

Despite the lack of full historical statement, THE CHRISTIAN SUN welcomes Dr. Ainslie's Pentecostal sermon heartily, and wishes him well in his crusade to divest the great Disciples Church of the one barrier that now separates them from our own movement, the original spiritual democracy of the American continent, the Christian Church, which we devoutly believe leads the way to Christian union, supplying the only platform on which Christianity of all faiths and orders can ever unitedly stand.

Dr. Ainslie's great sermon, preached on Pentecost, sounds strangely familiar to the ear of a member of the Christian Church. For more than a century its positions have been consistently held by our people. We have heard this doctrine all our days. We rejoice that others are proclaiming it, too, and may the number who do so greatly increase, till the whole earth shall be filled with it, and the prayer of our Lord for the oneness of His people shall be answered in a united Christendom. Amen!

HONOR ROLL CHURCHES.

Elsewhere in THE SUN is found a list of Churches, furnished by Executive Secretary C. D. Johnston, showing which ones have paid 25 per cent and up to 100 per cent on their Men and Millions quota. These are indeed Churches on the honor roll. Men and Millions stand for and represent all that the Christian Church is, or is trying to do, in the Convention and in the world. It is our effort to show our ability to move forward as a people. It is our attempt to prove to ourselves and to the world that we can do teamwork. And this is the strength, the power, the life of any organization, namely: the ability to do team-work, to unite individual effort into co-operative activity.

When one works alone, only that which one achieves counts. When one works with others, one's own results and achievements are multiplied. One cobbler working alone does well to make one pair of shoes per day. Ten cobblers, uniting their efforts, make not ten pair of shoes, but more likely twenty or thirty pairs per day. United effort has not made the labor or the toil of either harder, but lighter, and has more than doubled the achievements of each for the day. What is true of cobbling shoes is eminently true in kingdom service, in denominational activity. Brotherly co-operation produces results that multiply the achievements of each without even increasing the toil or burden of any.

The Churches on the honor roll bespeak a brotherly, a fraternal co-operation. The work always goes more abundant and satisfactory when there is team-work—when each does his or her part for the good of the whole.

When we Christians learn to pull together to achieve results, unite our prayers and plans and purposes in serving the Lord, we shall go forward with a new, quick step.

Bro. Pastor, Bro. Captain, how about uniting our efforts now to carry your Church high in the honor column, and thus add to the achievements, the results of each one who is laboring and longing to see our dear Christian Church go forward.

WHICH SHALL IT BE?

Not long since, Will Irwin published a book on "The Next War." His book had as its main purpose to impress upon its readers the horrors of future warfare so frightfully that there would be forthwith a popular revolt against the unchristian practice. Airplanes and poison gases and big Berthas, with submarines, would annihilate whole peoples over night, he showed. It was a horrible and ghastly picture that the famous war correspondent drew; but no revolt followed. We are headed undoubtedly to another, a most disastrous war. But the end is not yet.

For we are just this day informed that H. Grendell Matthews, an Englishman, has discovered a diabolical ray, most useful in warfare, and has sold the knowledge he has unearthed, or unskyed, or unseaed, as the case may be, to the English government. Dr. T. F. Wall, of the Sheffield University faculty, announces that he has discovered a death ray, a ray which he believes will destroy life, bring motor cars to a standstill, halt airplanes in their flight, and do other dastardly service in the cause of human slaughter. This death ray, the professor alleges, is, however, of unlimited possibilities also in the service of man, in surgical operations and medical treatment.

Dr. Charles Mayo is engaged in experiments which he believes will shortly demonstrate the curative power of the X-ray over cancer. Poison gas is now being used to cure colds and pulmonary infections. It is also being used to produce rare and delicate perfumes.

According to an ancient prophecy, men are to beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks. Brought down to date, this prophecy would read that diabolical and death rays are to be made agencies of prolonging life, and poison gas the means of death not to man, but to the bacteria that prey on his vitals and bring him before his due to the grave in sorrow.

But what is the guarantee that either the ancient or the modern version of the prophecy of universal peace will be realized? There is but one guarantee—that men and nations shall cease to hate, and learn to love each other, that they shall become Christians personally and socially. Mastery of the forces of nature may lead to man's undoing or to his blessing, according as hate or love is the dominating passion of his personal and social life.

Which shall it be?

The Church of God, speaking through you and me, shall answer. Forget it not—we shall answer.

CHRISTIAN LOYALTY.

Loyalty is devoted allegiance; and this may relate to many persons or institutions. Loyalty usually implies allegiance to the best and highest things. This is especially true of Christian loyalty, and it embraces at least three things. Loyalty to Christ is first in the Christian. As man was made in the image of God in original creation, even so the Christian is made in the image of Christ by regeneration, or re-creation. "For we are His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them" (Eph. 2:10). The Christian's first obligation is to Christ, because he derives his life and his name from Him. In His call to men to become disciples, He said, "Follow me." That means more than leaving their fishing boats and going about the country with Him. It included following Him in thought, life, and work. His thought must become the Christian's thought; His life the Christian's life; His work the Christian's work. What was His work? "He went about doing good." His life was an example for others. His thought was of all men. Loyalty to Christ is the first and last thing for the Christian.

Loyalty to convictions. Every life is the subject of inner convictions on moral and religious subjects and obligations. To the unconverted, it is to awaken a consciousness of sin. Of the sinner, it may be said that he is convinced or convicted of sin. Under conviction, the sinner becomes penitent; faith embraces Jesus Christ, and the converted sinner becomes a Christian. This is a wonderful change of a human being, and results in a happy state of mind; and confession is made of the change in his life. But this does not end personal convictions; it is the beginning of convictions wrought within the Christian by the Spirit of God. Numerous questions arise on many subjects and the individual reaches definite conclusions within himself of his personal obligations. When such convictions are felt within, the Christian must be loyal to them. Outside of the authority of Jesus Christ and His Word, this conviction is the Christian's highest authority. Here is the second point of loyalty on the part of a Christian. The right of self-interpretation of Scripture and of self-determination in personal conduct is supreme in morals and religion. This implies convictions wrought in the life by the Word of God and His Spirit.

Loyalty to the Church is the third element in Christian loyalty. The Church is a divine institution organized for spiritual purposes, and composed of Christians. Its claims upon Christians are binding upon all the followers of Christ. Some of the things required are attendance, "not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is" (Heb. 10:25). Loyalty to the Church implies attendance. Contributions —"Upon the first day of the week, let every one of you lay by him in store as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come" (1 Cor. 16:2). Bearing the burdens of others—"Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ" (Gal. 6:2). To help weak Christians—"We, then, that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves" (Rom. 15:1). Loyalty to the Church requires the Christian to please others—"Let every one of us please his neighbor for his good to edification. For even Christ pleased not Himself" (Rom. 15:2-3). Loyalty to the Church means loyalty to the members, for they are the Church.

PAPINI AND THE CATHOLICS.

No doubt many other SUN readers besides the present editor were induced to read Papini's "Life of Christ." In that volume the author very skillfully (for financial reasons) kept his Catholicism obscured. It turns out that he is not only a Catholic, but dares to express his hatred of us Protestants with a candor and venor not often expressed, even in the Catholic press. Papini writes now:

"We protest, and we protest with greater vigor than all the other protests, against those Protestants of whatever congregation, sect or stall, who come into Italy to snatch away the poor ignorant Catholics from the medieval tyranny, as they say, of the Bishop of Rome. We protest against the apostles of disunion and disobedience of whatever tribe they may be—the hemorrhoids of Luther, the scabs of Calvin, the Claws of Hus, the spittle of Zwingli, the blisters of Socinius, the blotches of Wesley, the corns of Fox, the catarrh of Spencer, the chilblains of Jansen, the crusts of Arius. Leave to the Italians their poverty; it is the widow of their honored St. Francis. Leave them their ignorance; it is the same as that of St. Peter, and the same as that recommended by the imitation of Christ and by the Fool of Christ, Jacopene. . . . Leave us under the tyranny of the Pope; it is the tyranny established by Christ, the tyranny of a father, and we infinitely prefer it to the tyranny of pastors, of quacks (or Quakers), of consistories and of books. We medievalists still hold the bull Unam Sanctam, which says, 'We declare and pronounce that it is absolutely necessary to salvation for every human creature to be subject to the Roman pontiff.' "

HE SAID HE COULDN'T; BUT HE DID.

By John Jeter Hurt.

It was an all-night meeting, or nearly so, back at my old home in the hills of Virginia. A visiting preacher, Dr. William E. Hatcher, started the discussion shortly after supper. Father upheld the negative, with reluctance and vehemence. He admitted that big brother should go to college that year, but said he simply could not send him. All the money crops had failed, business was down and the thing could not be done! To us, father's conclusions were like the laws of the Medes and Persians, but that visiting preacher did not take them so.

He spoke about the solemn responsibility of holding children in trust for God. He talked about a parent's obligation to develop in them the faculties which God Himself had implanted. He prophesied bitter memories in the future should that boy feel that father preferred lands and stock before the destiny of his own son. He talked about the glory of a young man's going when he was ready to go, the dew of the morning on his brow, the light of a new day upon his face, a warm heart urging him on. And then he grew bold with plainness of speech. That visiting preacher even dared—for God and a boy. He told my father that he should sell a horse, twenty acres of land—anything—to give his boy a chance. I was sent to bed before twelve o'clock.

But the meeting went on. Mother told us about it. Father broke down at last under the man of God's urging. He loved his children devotedly, but the farm was all about him, and it had always seemed bigger than the college until now. When the weeping and praying and planning were over, they sought rest. Then came morning and the breakfast table. I shall never forget that breakfast-table experience. The preacher announced to us that brother would enter college next month. He took a collection for him—calling on each one to pledge something. I promised twenty-five cents, my first love offering to Christian education. For nearly ten years I have been president of a board of education and have attended conferences innumerable, but that breakfast-table meeting was the greatest rally I ever saw. Mother cried, father choked up, brother grew serious and everybody was happy. That was the beginning. All good beginnings are hard.

The end of it was that, out of ten children, eight of us received college training. Of the eight boys, four of us entered the ministry. Three of the other boys have become deacons. More, the young men and maidens throughout all that community began to look beyond. My father's latter days were his happiest, for the center of his thoughts moved to the kingdom. And he always put in a good word for the college. He never referred to that night's struggle with the preacher, but he loved him like a brother to the end. They are together in heaven now.

And in the land of unclouded intellect, unborn generations will thank God for the visiting preacher who was faithful and for that night when the father of many children was converted educationally.—Baptist Standard.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The ratio of human life is a fixed quantity. There are apparent differences in capacity, possessions, and station. Comparative estimates of men and women put some high and some low; and that is true in ordinary relations. We have the rich and the poor, the literate and the illiterate, the high and the low in position. But there is a deeper view of human life and human values. The race is a unit. The work of the world is a unit. Human service and human happiness may be counted as a unit. There are so many phases of human activities that the surface view of upper and lower workers will not give the true situation. It is difficult to determine who is the most useful, the most important, or the happiest.

The railroad, for example, is one of the most important institutions in the world's operation. To say who is the most important figure in the equation of railroad business would be as difficult as to determine the most important note in an anthem. In the working out of the equation, we read the result, and that is the important thing in the solution. It takes all to make the result, and the track man may be as important as the train dispatcher. The responsibility in one case may seem greater in the dispatcher, but a neglected rail or tie might wreck the train as well as a false order. The ratio of responsibility is the same in both cases, and the sense of obligation in the one is as important as the other. Envy often imagines the other happier than self; but that may be on both sides. The poor man imagines the rich man free from trouble; but death in the White House breaks the heart of parents as well as death in a cabin. "Man that is born of a woman is of few days, and full of trouble;" and trouble is in the heart, not in the house nor the station.

The Constitution of the United States declares "that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." This declaration touches the heart of human institutions and human equalities. In the outward relations and individual endowments, it is not true that "all men are created equal;" but they are equal in their rights and obligations. It is this high plane upon which human equality is based and upon which there is equality of experience. The savage enjoys his crude meals and bed as much as the civilized man his elaborate dinner and soft mattress. The simple religious experience of the uneducated believer is as sweet to him in his worship of God as the worship of the most learned and intelligent believed's worship. This does not mean that men should be left in a state of ignorance of the highest and best in life, but it does mean that all men have the same chance to live and serve the God and Father of all. "God is no respecter of persons," and He cannot be as "all have sinned." Differences are human conceptions, and they have marred the beauty and worth of human relations. Human differences and distinctions can never rob men of inherent and divinely bestowed equalities and experiences. W. W. Staley.

ELON LETTER.

What Henry Drummond achieved for the scientific world when he published his book, "Natural Law in the Spiritual World," Roger W. Babson is achieving for business in our day. He is spiritualizing the every-day experiences of life, discovering their spiritual essence.

About the dryest thing in the world to the average mind is an array of statistics, and Babson is a professional statistician. He is far from dry, however. He is warm and sympathetic. He makes cold facts vibrant with life, because he can unearth their spiritual qualities and significances. In his books, as well as in his special letters to his constituents from time to time, he is wielding a marvelous influence for righteous living. A couple of years ago he came out with the statement that the world's need is not more railroads or battleships, but more Christian education. He believes and ever teaches that righteousness pays the best dividends, and that religion is necessary to the highest achievement, personal as well as social and national. It is exilarating to read his pronouncements. It does the heart good.

He has just sent out another splendid special letter under date of July 1st. It is so sensible that I wish to quote it in full as follows: "Recently my family physician here in town passed away; that is, his body was buried, but his name and work will live forever. His memory is very dear to me because he took care of me when I had tuberculosis twenty years ago. This is especially so because he was then ridiculed for giving me the outdoor treatment in rainy New England; but he stuck by his guns and won. He was quite a philosopher, and among his favorite quotations was the following:

> "A centipede was happy quite
> Until the toad, for fun, said:
> 'Pray, which leg goes after which?'
> Which wrought his soul to such a pitch
> He lay distracted in the ditch,
> Considering how to run."

"The point of this is, of course, that we often would be better off to let nature take its course, and quit worrying. It is useless to buck either the tides of ocean or the tides of business. Our job is to be contented, whichever way the tide is running, and use this flow to the fullest extent whichever the direction may be.

"We have just had the season of graduation addresses. Our youth have been told to be good, and they'll be happy. Health, friends, and certain other worthy aims are held up to them as a goal. Yet they are likewise told that they must struggle and fight to "get on." Yes, that's the real goal today, namely: to get on. But what is getting on? In the minds of 99 per cent of these graduates, 'getting on' means getting money. Success and money are synonymous in the thoughts of most people, even though, like the poor centipede, they are worrying themselves to death. To the extent that money relieves one of worry, we know it is real wealth; but as soon as our property reaches a figure when it becomes a care, we know it no longer is real wealth. Instead of helping us truly to get on, that money is then setting us back and retarding, instead of increasing, our growth along worth-while lines.

"Those of us who are 'getting on' in age know this only too well. We realize that unless health, friends, pleasures, etc., give us contentment instead of worry, then something very important is lacking. Of course, contentment in itself is very dangerous. It is like water or any other good thing—too much of it will drown us. Nevertheless, we feel that contentment certainly should be mentioned among the other goals which were talked about last week at every school and college graduation. Moreover, it should be made clear that contentment cannot be purchased any more than can love and friendship. Contentment is the reaction of a proper mixture of work, play, friends, and the other ingredients which go to make up life. Furthermore, like many chemical products, to secure this contentment, the ingredients must be mixed in exactly the right proportion. Too little work is as dangerous as too much. Too much play is as harmful as too little. Too many friends are as questionable as too few.

"But how does this apply to us chaps who graduated from school or college nearly thirty years ago? Frankly, should we apply this doctrine to our business and investments? Let us remember that contentment is not coming from erecting a bigger building; nor from showing greater gross earnings, nor from expanding indefinitely. A balloon is not contented when overinflated—rather, it is very much worried. There is often more real contentment in giving the other fellow a chance than in putting him out of business.

"We blame our wives for wanting more houses, European trips, and new fur coats in their attempt to 'keep up with the Joneses.' We blame our children for wanting automobiles at their call with the result that they are forgetting how to use their legs. But are they really any more foolish than their father, who is winning the whole world but losing his own soul; who is worrying because of tides of business over which he has no control, are preventing him from getting all the things he desires—a new factory, bigger sales, additional financing, etc.? Really, is there not a suggestion for us hard-boiled fathers in this graduation Thought?" W. A. Harper.

BETHLEHEM LETTER.

In our fancy, we often turn back the leaves of time and reflect on those experiences which have left the most lasting and treasured impressions. Perhaps none will hold more endearing or enduring recollections than those days spent in the all-pervading atmosphere of Bethlehem College, during the first year's work, laboring under severe difficulties.

The Christian spirit of this college and its tender appeal to our youth to acquire an education, both secular and religious, has already gone far beyond the confines of the campus, farther than to the members who have obtained invaluable lessons within its sacred precincts, and has come to be recognized by our people of the great South and the entire Church as an important asset in our educational work.

Despite the handicap through limited facilities for doing college work, Bethlehem College has made a wonderful record already, and we feel quite sure that in the years to come the Southern Christian Convention will see that it made no mistake when it located the college at Wadley, Ala.

The faculty has been increased and the curriculum extended in keeping with the demands made upon the people of the State and with the requirements for a first-grade junior college.

We have now the last two years of academic work and the first two of college work, the department of music and the commercial department. We feel quite sure of all the students we can accommodate this year, but what we need is money and books. We are appealing now to the generosity and big-heartedness of the people who have the means and who have made an entire consecration of themselves and their money.

This is a Christian institution; we cannot draw money to support it from the State. It must come from folks who believe in missionary education. This is a needy field, and I know of no other which will bring larger returns in the cultivation of the possibilities in the boys and girls who may attend college; the emancipation from their surroundings and environments, to larger possibilities and usefulness.

Aristotle said: "All who have meditated on the art of governing mankind have been convinced that the fate of empires depends on the education of youth." This is our own college, and our youth are safe while attending school here. We congratulate our people on their spirit of loyalty, and would give them due credit for all progress made up to date, but as president of Bethlehem College, I would say to the Church that upon you and yours rests very largely the glorious responsibility of extending to the coming generations those educational advantages and opportunities which Bethlehem College offers to the youth of our glorious South. The building is not yet complete, but we are at work on it now and expect to have it finished in about two weeks, but we have not enough money to complete the job, and that is why we are appealing for money at this time; and we need books for the library, a list of the kind we need is given in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Then the rooms of the girls' dormitory need to be furnished. More than half of the rooms have no furnishings at all. It is estimated that $50 will furnish a room, and all who do so will have their name or names put above the door of the room they furnish. May not we hope that the Church will come to our rescue at once?

A MESSAGE FROM MILTON.

History teaches us that God has always delivered His great prophetic truths to the seer or the nation best prepared to receive it, and to express it to their less fortunate brothers. Witness God's early revelation to the Jews. From time to time, luminous stars have arisen in the ranks of the clairvoyants and a prophet has caught a glimpse of God's will and purpose with us. Such a person in our day is Roger Babson, who, in his writing, is giving deep, spiritual significance to the every-day affairs of life. Milton was just such a person. Listen to what he says of himself: "All my mind was set serious to learn and know, and thence to do what might be public good; myself I thought born to that end—born to promote all truth and righteous things. What a divine calling! It was thus that Milton described his childhood, as a poet with a great mission to accomplish and a mighty message for his brethermen. How fitting that he should spend his best years in preparation!

Milton was like Christ, in that from the very beginning he was evidently a boy of promise, and in that he spent the best years of his life in preparation for his life-work. How serious this study was may be seen from his own statement: "From the twelfth year of my age I scarce ever went to bed before midnight." It was probably from such intense study that he later lost his eyesight. We can better understand the magnificent spirit of the man by what he says in this regard, after having been warned in later life that he was straining his sight and that his only hope lay in giving up his writing; yet with Spartan courage he says: "The choice lay before me between dereliction of a supreme duty and loss of eyesight. In such a case, I could not listen to the physician, not if Esculapius himself had spoken from his sanctuary. I could not but obey that inward monitor, I know not what, that spake to me from heaven. . . . I thereupon concluded to employ the little remaining eyesight I was to enjoy in doing this, the greatest service to the common weal it was in my power to render." Oh! what a man this Milton was, and what a steadfast, unmovable faith he possessed, and what a determination to do his duty for God and his fellowmen was his! A few men like Milton, and the kingdom would be here.

Many hardships beset the poet's way in later years. The death of his wife, the ungratefulness and lack of devotion of his daughters, and, greatest of all, the loss of eyesight. Yet he was able to sing with Shakespeare, "Sweet are the uses of adversity, which, like the toad, ugly and venomous, wears yet a precious jewel in his head." Though all looked dark for him, these years of severe discipline had given him the mature judgment, the deepened understanding, and passion that he needed in writing his immortal poem, "Paradise Lost!" He had suffered, and he could feel more keenly. He had been the victim of unscrupulous plottings, and vile ways. Thus he could picture in his poem God and man, devils and angels, heaven and earth with great power. Sweet were the hardships to Milton, perhaps they will be to us also in God's tomorrow, when we shall understand our trials and sorrows.

The greatness of Milton is demonstrated in his submission to the divine will that had left him in darkness. The following lines are sufficient to make us cover our faces and shrink away in shame because of our proneness to find fault when our petty plans go awry:

". . . These eyes, though clear,
To outward view, of blemish or of spot,
Bereft of light, their seeing have forgot;
Nor to their idle orbs doth sight appear
Of sun, or moon, or star, throughout the year,
Or man, or woman. Yet I argue not Against Heaven's hand or will, nor bate a jot
Of heart or hope, but still bear up and steer
Right onward. What supports me, dost thou ask?
The conscience, friend, to have lost them overplied in Liberty's defense."

Milton's last days were spent in peace and happiness, and it may be said of him, as of another: "He being dead yet speaketh." In his steadfastness of purpose, in his submission to divine will, in his willingness to burn himself out for his fellowman, and in the beauty of his character, Milton has a message for today. Let us remember that in our present troubles we may be only passing from the chrysalis stage to a glorious and beautiful tomorrow, keeping in mind that "He who putteth his hand to the plow and then looketh back is not worthy of the service of the kingdom." THE O'KELLY MONUMENT.

DEAR BRO. EDITOR:

Your good letter in THE SUN in regard to Rev. James O'Kelly. I would suggest that you and your committee build the monument at Elon College and have his body moved there. We are all aware that Elon College is the gateway of the Southern Christian Convention and the Christian Church I feel like we can build a monument that should be a credit to Bro. O'Kelly. If you will allow a suggestion, I think we should build only one monument, but I think on this monument should be stated the beginning of the Christians in Virginia. I want to see a monument at Elon that will be a credit to the name of O'Kelly and the Christians. I expect to visit Elon some day soon, and when I do I would be glad to see this monument erected, so I could tell my people all about it when I get back.

Hope you all great success in this worthy undertaking. Sincerely and fraternally,

Ambrose, Ga. J. T. HOLLAND.

SERVICE FOR GRADUATES.

A most unique and interesting service was held at People's Christian Church Sunday morning, it being in the nature of a "recognition service," possibly the first of its kind ever held in Dover, and planned by the pastor, Dr. R. C. Helfenstein.

The service was in recognition of nine members of People's Christian Church and Sunday School (seven members of the Church and two of the Sunday School) who graduated from Dover High School last week. Also in honor and recognition of three additional members of the Church who graduated this year from the University of Delaware, at Newark.

That some of the graduates might assist in the morning service, Dr. Helfenstein gave over the entire opening services of the morning to four of the graduates—Miss Esther Ruston, a graduate of University of Delaware, led in the responsive reading; Zebulon C. Hopkins, valedictorian of the high school class, read the scripture lesson, while Robert Ruston, the third highest in the graduating class of Dover High School, led in prayer. Alson Helm, another Dover High School graduate, who is a musician of considerable ability, rendered a violin solo during the offertory. The innovation was most favorably received by the audience of People's Church, who gave expression to their appreciation of having such a class of young people as members.

Dr. Helfenstein, the pastor, preached a most appropriate sermon in recognition of the honors conferred upon the twelve college and high school graduates, his subject being "The Open Door of Opportunity."—Dover Index.

FROM MOUNT OLIVET.

We are still growing at Mount Olivet. There is a steady increase in our Church attendance, and the different departments of our Sunday School and our Christian Endeavor are making splendid progress. The home department of our Sunday School, which is under the supervision of Bro. Herbert Morris, has added more than twenty members to its roll. Our teacher-training course, which is under the direction of our pastor, Prof. Flowers, is creating sufficient interest to bring in such men as Prof. A. S. Bowlinger, superintendent of the Brethren's Industrial School, with Rev. Driver and Rev. Knight. Also we have the hearty co-operation of the faculty of the Blue Ridge Industrial School, all of which we fully appreciate and by which we feel much encouraged.

Our pastor is a very unassuming man, but a steady worker and a sound thinker. He has introduced a course along the line of religious education into our Sunday School for the benefit of our young people. He has also introduced a course along industrial lines into our Young People's Christian Endeavor, and of the fourteen different varieties of things—most of which have not previously been grown here—that are being tried out, we are successful with thirteen so far. Prof. Flowers contends that such a course is very essential for our young people during their summer vacation because it would be very profitable in dollars and cents, and besides it will be a good training for our boys and girls in lessons of thrift, and we feel that he is correct in his views, and he is receiving the co-operation of the people; and just here I would like to add the statement that no pastor, Sunday School superintendent or teacher can succeed without the support of the people. Too many people seem not to be aware of the necessity of using what they have to best advantage in the "now."

Another thing I wish to mention with reference to the work at Mount Olivet is the Christian fellowship that characterizes the work. Of more than twenty officers and teachers in our Sunday School, about 40 per cent of them are members of other Churches. So, regardless of your denominational affiliation, you will be cordially received in our Sunday School and Christian Endeavor and given a place to work.

Our program for "Educational Day" has been completed, and with the co-operation of the other Churches and the faculty of both the industrial schools, we are hoping to make that day a very interesting occasion. MRS. B. G. SNOW.

A CHRISTIAN EDUCATION PILGRIMAGE.

BY HERMON ELDREDGE.

II. OVERSEAS—EASTBOUND.

"All ashore going ashore!" and the gang-plank went in and we were off for far-away England. A thousand good-bys, amid laughter and tears, depending on whether the parting began a holiday or a more permanent breaking of family or friendly ties. Boisterous boys and blushing brides, girls who could not hide their tears, and stolid women of a foreign build who made no attempt to do so; men who tried to look indifferent and smoke, and men who tried to hide their feelings by shoutings and hat-wavings far down the river until the "Royal Mountain City" of Montreal was lost to view and the wharf crowd had gone their hundred ways to shops and mills and to homes which seemed strangely silent and lonely.

But it is ever so that—

> "Those who go are happier
> Than those they leave behind."

And a thousand cabin and third-class passengers found themselves busy adjusting themselves to new and strange surroundings in which they were to live for a week together. Cozy little eight-by-ten staterooms, built for four or less, were to be the nearest to privacy the average passenger would find, but the decks and the "lounge" and the drawing-room and the open cabin spaces afforded every convenience for social intercourse.

After getting settled with my cabin companions, consisting of a Kansas Disciple preacher of good-fellowship, and a fine young English engineer, I moved about the decks to see if I could discover a familiar face, as I thought that, in the number going to the Glasgow World's Sunday School Convention, I might find some acquaintances in the Sunday School world. Of course, I knew that the American delegations had sailed from New York and Philadelphia, and that I must expect a less-familiar Canadian contingent on this Canadian steamer, but I knew, too, that some from the States had extended the Glasgow trip to the pilgrimage to the shrines of freedom, and were planning along the lines of my own pilgrimage. Dr. Albertus Perry, of St. Louis, the director of our tour, advised me that there were fifty-one of our party on board, and in looking over the list I discovered two Missouri Sunday School workers with whom I served last summer on the faculty of our Palmer College Summer School—Miss Beard and Mrs McWilliams, of St. Louis. They brought me the welcome news that Palmer had started its school this summer with over double the enrollment of last summer. I was honored by being assigned to the same table in the dining-room with Dr. Perry, as all other tables had six—an assignment which may have barred me from the social enjoyment of a larger group, but which permitted me to monopolize Dr. Perry and to dig out of him the many things that a tenderfoot in Europe needs to know. Dr. Perry proved to be a veteran European traveler and a mine of information on Great Britain and the continent.

Our good ship "Doric," of the White Star Line, is one of the newer and modern one-cabin boats of sixteen thousand tons, and while its capacity and dimensions are a wonder to one as uninitiated as I, yet I know that the new great New York-Liverpool liners are two and even three times larger than the "Doric," and outspeed it by days in the trip across, and that they have luxuries which far outshine this new little sister-ship as the mansions on the avenue outshine our more modest home. But in spite of that knowledge, I am impressed with an ocean home like this which has a length of over a city block and a capacity of carrying a thousand passengers with comfort, besides as much as four hundred carloads of freight, over its three thousand mile shore-to-shore journey.

There are advantages and some disadvantages (principally a liquor license) in going to the old world via Montreal and Canada. Montreal and the province of Quebec is almost a bit of the old world to begin with. While Toronto and the province of Ontario are overwhelmingly English and Protestant, Montreal and the province of Quebec are overwhelmingly French and Roman Catholic. Four-fifths of its inhabitants are French, and you are surrounded by its foreign language and foreign shop signs and newspapers and architecture and ways until you feel the truth of the saying that the province is a bit of the old world in the new.

If all I do not know could be written in books, it would take more than a Carnegie to buy the books and to house them in any adequate library. I am getting to know this more and more as the days go, and especially has this trip opened my eyes to it.

For instance, I had no conception of the fact that Montreal was a full two days' sail of an ocean vessel from the open sea. But such it proves to be, and our journey began along the quiet waters of the St. Lawrence River, bordered for hundreds of miles with hills, beautiful farm country and little French villages, with a group of houses around the inevitable stately French Catholic Church and all so nearly alike that they might have been cast in the same mold. These zealous Catholic devotees have something to teach us along the line of Church building, and this first lap on my Christian education pilgrimage tells me this. Stately Catholic Churches and parochial schools in connection tell us without words of both the sacrifice of these common people for the Church, and their appreciation (in their parochial schools) of the fact that if they lose their children their Church is doomed. An American Catholic priest said to me fully fifteen years ago: "If the Catholic Church in America should treat its children for one generation as the Protestant people treat their children, there would be no Catholic Church in America in the next generation." I believed him then (making some allowance for exageration of statement), and I believe him more now than I did when I heard him say it. Thank God, the Protestant Church is awakening to its sense of responsibility to childhood and the future of the kingdom! But, oh how slow we are, and how much there is to do!

It was twilight as we passed under the great bridge span at Quebec, and there arose on our left the rugged Heights of Abraham, recalling Wolf and Montcalm and the fierce days when French and English and Indians struggled for mastery on a new continent. The old fortress still frowns from the heights, although it could make but little resistance to modern implements and campaigns of war.

But the most prominent landmark in this old city in a new world is towering Chateau Frontenac, built in exact duplicate of the French chateau from which it takes its name. It stands far and above everything on the heights and is the first great sight of the city which the European traveler sees and the last thing on the city landscape as he leaves it again for his old-world home. Particularly impressive it was in the deepening twilight with its background of a black, cloudy, sky and its growing line and banks of lights as the darkness deepened and we made our way down the river.

Now, to our bunks and to good sleep, which is all too soon over with the cry of a child in an adjoining cabin screaming, "Don't try to climb down, Mamma; you'll fall." And then the voice of a mother telling her strange woman cabin-mate that she has had ten children and of the one who was not. And then a rattle at the cabin door, and a decidedly English voice (all the crew are English) calling: "Your 'bawth' is ready, sir," and a plunge of salt, followed by a shower of fresh water, gives a feeling of virtue which makes a man ready to face the world.

It is Sunday, but there is no change in the 7:30 breakfast hour, and not only the day, but the rain and cold and impossible conditions on deck drove the company to the sheltered portions of the ship and closer together. In the lounge-room, after breakfast, a Missouri minister starts the singing of old gospel songs, and almost all joined heartily; but Father Dugan and a few whose religion you could easily guess quietly withdrew to other parts of the ship. We sang "Jesus, Lover of My Soul" and "Rock of Ages," and when we were singing "Blessed Assurance" a stately old English lady sitting near me said to her companion: "They must be Methodists," to which her companion replied with the same charming accent: "Yes, I am sure they must be; I wish they would sing 'Fight the Good Fight with all Thy Might." And then the Roman Catholic mass in the drawing-room, with Father O'Brien, and the Protestant service in the dining-room, with Rev. Dr. Jacoby, of somewhere in the Middle West, and the evening service with President Kurtz of McPherson College, Kansas, giving a sermon-lecture on "The Symphony of Life," using Peter's eight notes of the Christian scale—faith, virtue, knowledge, self-control, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and love.

And now the day is over, but the storm and fog and sea have only just begun. We may well draw a veil over much of the experience of the next few days and save the feelings of many of our friends who have been too sorely racked already. And so without any personalities (except to say that your humble servant did not miss a meal), we will say that fogs on the banks of Newfundland, the fog whistle every minute, the cold Northeast wind, with rough seas up to this last day of the voyage, were depressing enough to make a weary pilgrim who longed in vain for a square foot of solid ground on which to plant his two feet.

But the sea was grand indeed to one whose inner nature did not revolt. Every day we braved the storm on decks, and at night stood in silence before the vast tumbling expanse of sea and foam as it dashed itself in fury against our wonderful craft. A little company of us huddled in the storm, and clinging to the rail, sang:

"While the billows near me roll,
While the tempest still is high";

and

"Jesus Saviour, Pilot me
Over life's tempestous sea"; and thanked God for the privilege and the inspiration of it. And then to cabin-bunk, and literally

"Rocked in the cradle of the deep,
I lay me down in peace to sleep."

And still there were those who sat and played cards in the smoke-room and complained to one another about the storm and wind and rain, and had not the vision of Jacob, when he said: "Surely God is in this place, and I knew it not."

But today is fine, and we are off the north Irish coast, steering for Liverpool, where we land tomorrow, and then "on the Glasgow," by way of Liverpool, Furness Abbey and the English Lakes.

OUR PLEDGES
Men and Millions Sacred, Solemn and Binding.

These obligations were made through the Church to the Kingdom of God and to all that pertains to building up that Kingdom in the world, so far as our Christian Church is concerned. As Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., has so pertinently pointed out: "A Christian can no more drop his pledges than he can drop his prayers or his Church membership. Misfortune may make it impossible to meet financial obligations--'When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both' (Luke 7:42)--but not till 'they had nothing to pay.' Obligations to God are as binding as obligations to men, and God will help those who try to keep their pledges."

Many are making great sacrifices to meet these obligations and pay these pledges. Is your Church on this list? If not, let's do our best to get it there. If there, let's get it in first place.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

"After this manner, therefore, pray ye, 'Our Father, which art in heaven . . .'."—Matt. 6:6-9.

How familiar these words! The salutation of our every prayer; the finest, simplest and best relationship our Saviour could find by which He could interpret to His followers the relationship of man to God, was that of a father and children.

When parents and children realize such a relationship, both are apt to be more diligent toward one another, and as children of our Heavenly Father, we shall better enjoy our privileges and discharge our obligations.

Were Christ to come in the flesh to our home today and behold the relationship which exists between our children and us, would He still hold that this relationship of father and children approaches more nearly the divine than anything else? Would He still teach us to pray "Our Father?"

Prayer.—Dear Lord, who dost add to all human worship Thy divine presence, be with us now, and add to our earthly weaknesses Thine own heavenly power, and to Thee we will ascribe all the glory. Amen.

TUESDAY.

BE COURTEOUS TO THE YOUNG MAN WHO CALLS ON YOUR DAUGHTER.

"As ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them."—Luke 6:31.

Parents, when a young man calls on your daughter, do not make him uncomfortable by the way you act toward him.

He is doing nothing wrong coming to see your daughter, and if he is the right sort of a young fellow and she enjoys his company, why should he not call?

He is entitled to courteous treatment from you as long as he proves he is worthy of it, and is it not a compliment to your daughter that he prefers her company to that of other girls?

It should be your aim to get acquainted with every young man who calls on your daughter.

With your mature judgment, you will be better able to decide what sort of a man he is really than your daughter could with her rather limited experience, and you should get fully acquainted with him.

The young man who comes to your home is a far different sort than the one who tries to meet your daughter outside and is reluctant to meet you.

The one who avoids you is the one to oppose, not the one who comes into the light and shows himself. (Copyright, 1924, International Feature Service, Inc.)

Prayer.—Most gracious God, the fountain of our blessing, Thou hast opened Thy hand to fill us with so many good things, keeping us in the shadow of Thy wings, providing as a father, loving as a friend, may we never forget our obligations in the common courtesies to all. As Thy children, may we be unto others as Thou wouldst have us be. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

HAPPINESS THROUGH MERCY.

"Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy."—Math. 5:17.

Mercy is both an export and an import of the soul. It first goes out from the heart to others, outward, and then returns from above to the heart within, inward. It makes us twice happy: We are happy as it goes out, and we are happy when it comes in. It moves like an ever-increasing circle, rejoicing our friends, pittying the poor, forgiving our enemies, and having compassion on the heathen. It blesses not only mankind, but also birds and beasts are inclined, for "The merciful man regardeth the life of his beast." It is something obtained, and we obtain it by giving. Our capacity for receiving it is limited only by our willingness to bestow it. As we increase the measure of it to others, God enlarges the measure of it back to us. We empty it out; God empties it in. It is always fresh. The heart is not a depository to store it, but a channel through which we may pass it on to others. Undertake to hoard it, and it dies. We lose it by holding, and we hold it by losing. Mercy! Happiness! They go and increase together, and are within the reach of all. How poor and miserable is that heart that knows no pity and in mercy will not forgive another's wrong!

Prayer.—Dear Father, we pray for a heart to feel another's woe, to forgive those who have wronged us, and to pity the lost. Teach us that unless we forgive, we cannot be forgiven; and that the mercy we crave for ourselves we must show to others. In His name we ask it. Amen.—T. E. White.

THURSDAY.

THE PROPHET'S CHAMBER AND GOD'S HOME.

"Let us set for him there a bed, and a table, and a stool, and a candlestick."—2 Kings 4:8-13.

The story of how a simple invitation to the passing prophet to eat with this childless couple developed into great hospitality and spiritual fellowship, and at last saved that home from the tragedy of death, reminds one of the story of Bethany, where Jesus performed a similar miracle for His friends.

One of the canons of the Anglican Church once wrote a service of dedication for the furniture of a new house, adapting it to every room. It was a novel idea. The home plays a large part in our lives. We spend more time there than in the Church. True religion has always lifted the common things of life into spiritual meaning.

Let us today resolve to sanctify, by Christian hospitality, the things in our homes. Happy is the home that knows the coming of the prophet; the home on whose threshold the steps of the pastor are heard and recognized. Let us bless God for the bed where the tired head can find rest, for the table where the friend can meet friend, and for the chair and even the little lamp. Blessed is that home which, in the day of darkness and bereavement, can still recognize the prophet's footfall. Such a home shall not be without hope when Elijah comes.—Rev. A. E. Gregory.

Prayer.—Our Father in heaven, let us not lose ourselves among earthly thoughts and delights. May all that we have and are be dedicated to Thee. Amen.

FRIDAY.

LAMPS WITHOUT OIL.

"Ye are the light of the world."—Matt. 5:14.

"Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven."—Matt. 5:16.

What about your lamp? What light do you possess? What are you doing with it? How are you letting it shine?

An endless procession of folks who are careless with what they do and say and the influence they exert is continually passing before us. They fill our age with incoherence, neglect and folly. No apologies can cover the destitution of men and women who have let life slip away without doing their best, and like the five foolish virgins, they are not ready for the demands that will come upon them tomorrow.

The yellow diamond, no one wants. The real one every one wants. So live that God will say in the last day, "These are mine."

Prayer.—O Lord Jesus, and our God, we pray Thee to forgive us of our sins and grant that all we possess may be turned into good works. May we lay hold on eternal life and let it shine for Thee forever. Amen.

SATURDAY.

CHRIST AND NATURE AND PREACHING.

"Consider the lilies how they toil not, neither do they spin, yet Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these."—Matt. 6:28.

Jesus was always close to nature's heart. In open air, on the hillside, under the clear blue dome of the sky, by the fields, amidst God's flowers and birds, trees and clouds with the fresh air blowing through his nostrils. His texts were the lilies of the fields, His choir was the skylarks. His language and speech was with the eloquence of nature, empowered with divine and eternal truth. In the sunset and the stars of the night, in the sparrow and the grass of the fields, in the trees and the animals of the forest, He found the perfection of the kingdom and perfect obedience to His will. His congregation always left Him feeling that a mystery had been unveiled, that their sufferings had been relieved, and that their desires had been fulfilled.

Prayer.—Dear Father, we love Thee, we magnify Thee, and we worship Thee. All day long be our comrade, and our strength. So grant us that we may live so close to Thee that we may enter into Thy kingdom. In His name we ask it. Amen.

SUNDAY.

"THE SABBATH WAS MADE FOR MAN."—Mark 2:27.

"I was in the spirit on the Lord's Day."—Rev. 1:10.

To observe any day in a worthy sense, one must enter into its spirit. The true worth of Sunday to us lies in its opportunity and hope of rising above this world's things and touching the eternal. Whatever may be our place and work in life, if Sunday is to mean more to us and we are to have the most permanent good and joy in it, we must use it to learn more of our duty, our needs, our joys, His will, His ways, His mercy and His justice.

Prayer.—Our Father, teach us now and always to understand that blessed is the man who keepeth the Lord's day unto holy ends. Make us fruitful in good works, and work in us that which is acceptable in Thy sight. Sanctify us throughout and keep our whole spirit, soul and body faultless until the coming of the dear Saviour. And unto Thee shall be all praise. Amen.

HOME-COMING AT DAMASCUS.

On the third Sunday in August, 1924, there will be a home-coming at Damascus Christian Church. This is the first home-coming in the history of the Church. All members, former members, both of our denomination and those who are now members of other Churches, are requested to be present. It is the desire of the Church that all former pastors, as well as those who are and have been members of the Church, be with us.

The program will be announced in THE SUN later. It is the beginning of a series of meetings, however, and we hope as many will plan to stay throughout the week as possibly can. Let us all pray for a great day and revival.

LITTLE STORY CONTEST.

Take your time, and the first sentence in the paragraph, and write a story for your own page. Here is the block for the story:

Alittle Girl wanted—to go home; to play in the sand; to play with stars.

She went out to find them, and came to a—park; to a pond; to a city.

She could not find any stars, so she—went home; walked on; sat and cried.

She came to a—big tree; brook in the woods.

She found no stars there, so she—went home; she went on; she wept.

Soon she met—some friends; some fairies; some men.

They told her to—dry her clothes; do some work; dance with them.

She still did not find—her way home; the fairies; one star.

Then the fairies told her—to go home; to come again; just what to do.

Soon she found—four friends; a star; a horse.

Then she came to a river—edge of the sea; a big city.

"No feet" was—a flower; a fish.

He carried her to—the town; the stairs without steps.

He carried her to—climb; take the stars home.

All of a sudden—she saw; the stars; she let go.

Bang! She found herself—in the water; in her own bed; slipping.

She had been—far away; dreaming.

THE STORY OF JACOB'S LADDER.

Jacob was a boy who lived even longer ago than did Moses. Jacob lived so long ago that he never saw or heard of an automobile or train or street car. No one had ever dreamed of airplanes. When Jacob wanted to visit his aunts and uncles and cousins he had to walk or ride on a donkey or camel.

When Jacob became a young man, his mother wanted him to go and visit her brother Laban, Jacob's uncle. He would enjoy the vist, for Uncle Laban had beautiful young daughters, who would play and sing and laugh and have parties and good times for him. Jacob was glad to visit his Uncle Laban.

Lovingly he said good-by to his mother, who loved him so dearly, and to his old blind father. With staff in hand, he started to walk to his Uncle Laban's. Perhaps he patted his father's sheep and cattle good-by as he walked past. Perhaps he nodded good-by to the trees and the grass among which he had played.

Soon he came to a country that was strange and new. As he trudged along perhaps he grew lonely. Perhaps he thought of his mother at home who loved him so dearly, and of his old blind father. Perhaps he wished he were already at his Uncle Laban's, it was such a long walk and he was so lonely.

For miles and miles he walked. Then the sun went down. It was dark. Jacob stopped. How still it was, and how lonely. Nothing but earth and sky—no people, no house, no bed; not even a pillow to lay his head on. Choosing one of the hard stones, he lay down with his head on it. He was so tired that perhaps he went to sleep right away.

Presently he had a dream. It reached from the earth clear up to heaven. Angels, in glistening white garments, were ascending and descending. And at the top stood God, saying: "I am Jehovah, the God of thy father; and behold, I am with thee, and will keep thee whithersoever thou goest."

Then Jacob awoke. The ladder and angels were gone. "Surely Jehovah is in this place; and I knew it not," he said. Early in the morning he arose and took the stone that he had under his head and set it up as an altar to Jehovah. He started again on his journey, but he wasn't lonely any more. Who could be lonely after God had said: "I am with thee, and will keep thee whithersoever thou goest?"

No one need ever be afraid when God is with him—no little boy or little girl; in the daytime or night-time—because God has said: "I am with thee, and will keep thee whithersoever thou goest." The Bible story: Gen. 28.

THE STORY OF THE GLAD LITTLE RABBIT.

Once upon a time, on the edge of a deep, dark forest, there lived a sad little rabbit. His brother called him "Doleful Dumps," for he was so very sad that he was doleful.

One day when his brothers had gone off to nibble in that nice clover patch, the sad little rabbit hunched himself up under the big dead pine and moped.

Suddenly a lovely little silver-winged fairy flew toward him and lighted on his head. The sad little rabbit sat as still as a mouse. (He was so astonished that he really couldn't do anything else.)

"You poor little bunny," said the fairy gently; "I'm so sorry for you that I'm going to tell you a wonder—, wonderful secret that will make you the gladdest little rabbit in all the world." Little Doleful Dumps only gave a cross little hunch. He was too deep down in those terrible old dumps to care about anything.

"It's a Glad Hunt game," said the fairy. "Just begin saying 'I'm glad, I'm glad, I'm glad,' and pretty soon you'll think of something to be glad of."

So the little rabbit began, "I'm glad, I'm glad, I'm glad, I'm glad," he sighed. The reason the charm couldn't work was that he didn't use the right voice, for one thing. To make the charm work quickly, you must use a glad, brisk voice, and think very, very hard.

"Go on," urged the fairy; "it'll come. The forty-'leventh is the magic time—it always comes by then." Sure enough, the forty-'leventh time the poor little rabbit got it.

"I'm glad, I'm glad, I'm glad I have four legs," he said at last. For he thought of his cousin, poor little lame Three Legs, who had once been caught in a trap, and now must always limp on three legs.

And all of a sudden, as the little rabbit said the magic words, such a lovely, warm, happy feeling ran all over the little bunny from the very tip-top of his little ears to the very tip ends of his soft little paws. For now he was the Glad Little Rabbit.

"Oh! oh! oh!" Squealed the Glad Little Rabbit happily. "I just must tell somebody else; it's too lovely to keep."

"Good!" said the fairy, "that's part of the secret. You must share it."

So off started the Glad Little Rabbit to spread the beautiful secret of joy.

First he went to the farmer's house and called on old Rover. Rover was feeling very cross and growly. He had buried, a few days before, a perfectly good big bone in a hole behind the yellow rose bush. And when Farmer Smith's dog had called on Rover this morning, Rover had been shut up in the shed and couldn't get out to greet Waggles. And Waggles, waiting around, had found that hole and dug up that nice bone, and gone off with it.

"Never mind," comforted the Glad Little Rabbit when Rover had growled out his troubles. "I'll show you how to play the loveliest game you ever heard of." Rover only sniffed and looked far away.

"It's a hunt." Rover waved his tail with a little more interest at that magic word. "Hunting what?" he growled.

"Hunting the glad things." And the Glad Little Rabbit told all about it. So Rover began.

"I'm glad, glad, glad—. At first he couldn't think of anything but his dear lost bone, but at the twenty-fifth "glad," he thought all of a sudden of his nice home here at Farmer Brown's. "I'm glad I have such a kind master. He gives me meat every day. So it doesn't matter if I do lose a bone now and then. Besides, it wasn't such a very big bone, after all."

The Glad Little Rabbit clapped his paws in delight. "You're doing finely," he said; "why I had to go clear to the forty-'leventh time. Mine was a sad case."

"I'll start right off and tell all the dogs I know," said the pleased Rover.

"That's right," agreed the Glad Little Rabbit. And he went on to the barnyard where he had a number of friends.

"Cluck! cluck!" cried old Mother Plymouth Rock angrily. "Come here at once! Why don't you mind; you dreadful chicks? Dear, what a lot of trouble chickens are!"

"But aren't you glad you have your chickens?" asked the Glad Little Rabbit, as he plumped down beside the mother hen.

So he taught her the magic charm. And Mrs. Plymouth Rock did even better than Rover. She was glad she had such a big family. Mrs. White Hen had lost every one of her little chickens. A weasel had killed them all, she told the Glad Little Rabbit, at only the tenth "glad."

And the Glad Little Rabbit praised Mrs. Plymouth Rock for being such a fine hunter as to get her game so quickly as that. And he left Mrs. Hen as happy as could be.

"Why, Mrs. Pussy," what is the matter?" he asked the cat who sat in the barn door.

Mrs. Pussy growled, and bristled her tail in anger. "That wretched, horrid, miserable rat," she growled; "I've been watching that hole for two hours and have never seen even the tip of his tail."

So the Glad Little Rabbit told her about the wonderful secret. Mrs. Pussy was so mad that she couldn't find her "glad" until the thirty-eighth time. Then she owned that she was glad that she had a nice home, where the people gave her rich milk and plates of nice food three times a day, without her having to ask for it even; besides a warm, soft cushion to sleep on every night. "I'm glad I don't have to hunt rats for a living. I only do it for pastime," she owned at last. And she promised to teach every one of her seven kittens and her ten grandchildren and her twenty great-grandchildren this wonderful game, and to make Glad Little Kittens of them all.

And here is the best of this lovely secret. The more folks the Glad Little Rabbit taught the secret to, the gladder he grew himself. And when he went home that night there wasn't a happier little bunny in all the wide world than this same Glad Little Rabbit. JEAN HALIFAX.

INTERNATIONAL CREDIT AT ELON.

There will be three classes at the Elon Chautauqua this year which will present the opportunity for workers to win international credit on a diploma in the International Standard Training Course, the course in leadership training promoted by the International Council of Religious Education and adopted by the Christian Church. This course is a three-year course, and twelve units entitle one to the diploma. It will be possible to win one of these units at the Elon Summer School this year.

These three classes will hold two sessions each day, giving the required ten sessions, and assignments and work will be given by the instructors to provide for the necessary study before International recognition can be secured.

These three courses include:

A course for workers with children, probably in "Story Telling," under the leadership of Mrs. Fred E. Bullock, field secretary of children's work of the Board of Christian Education of the Christian Church. Mrs. Bullock's study of the work, her wide experience and ability as a teacher will make this an attractive course for all who wish to become more expert in children's work.

The course for young people, and leaders of young people, will be conducted by Rev. James H. Lightbourne, of Holland, Va., who may be well termed "a young folk's pastor." There will be a textbook used which will present the needs of youth, and the relation of the Church School to these needs. Lucy M. Eldredge.

AN ENVIABLE RECORD.

Dear Mr. Editor:

Do you know of any one who can beat the record of our Mr. Cash? For twenty-four years he has maintained a record of perfect attendance at Sunday School. Mr. J. L. Cash has been a member of the Sunday School of the Main Street Christian Church of Durham, N. C., for more than twenty-four years, and for twenty-four years he has not missed being in attendance a single Sunday. And though no record of tardiness has been kept, no one remembers his having been late. Mr. Cash tells of one occasion when a sister, who, according to his account, was approaching the "old-mail class," that decided to marry on Sunday morning at the Sunday School hour. When she asked him to come to the wedding, he told her that she had been waiting all that long time to marry, and that she could either change the hour or get married the best she could without his help, as he had to go to Sunday School. The sister married, and Bro. Cash went to Sunday School. Mr. Cash says that he would not miss Sunday School to attend his own wedding.

On June 26th, the Baraca and Philathea classes of the Sunday School met in joint session to celebrate Mr. Cash's twenty-fourth anniversary in the Sunday School. Mr. Dolph Long, of Graham, N. C., was the speaker of the evening. After the address, the Philathea Class presented Mr. Cash with a beautiful birthday cake, covered with twenty-four candles. While the Baraca Class presented him with a handsome silver loving cup, bearing an appropriate inscription of appreciation of his faithfulness. If Bro. Cash keeps his health and bachelorhood, we are confidently expecting him to more than double his present record. Now, Mr. Editor, did you ever hear of a more remarkable record? Stanley C. Harrell.

DO WE WANT CHRISTIAN EDUCATION?

By W. A. Harper, ..

Secretary of Christian Education.

July, August, September, and October are designated as the period for Christian education. During these four months we are to emphasize the claims of our colleges on the lives of our young people and lay out the plans of our local educational work for the next twelve months. We are at the close of the period to make our offering for the support of our Board of Christian Education.

The Sunday School year begins with the first Sunday in October. From now till then we should plan earnestly and prayerfully for the future. The Journal of Christian Education for September is given over entirely to the practical discussion of ways and means of doing this. Study it carefully, adapt it to your needs, and plan your work for the year. It will pay a handsome dividend in spiritual achievement.

During July and August the Young People's Department workers should concentrate on influencing the decisions of our young people to enroll in our colleges. The hope of our future leadership lies in these institutions of higher learning of our Church. We cannot neglect them and expect progress. We cannot neglect them and live. They are the power-houses of our growth. They are the seminaries of our progress. They are the cap-stone of the arch of our denominational greatness. In them are the issues of our denominational life or death. As go our colleges, so goes our Church, the Church we love, the Church bequeathed to us by our forefathers, great in vision and potential in power for the redemption of the world. We must man and support our colleges.

Do we really wish Christian education? Then we must support both our local work, our colleges, and our general Board of Christian Education. We have four all-time workers now, and need a full-time general secretary. No finer field secretaries man the cause of any Church than our own Hermon Eldredge, W. P. Fletcher, Mrs. F. E. Bullock and Lucy M. Eldredge. They are the peers of any. We must support and utilize them. Call on the Board of Christian Education for these workers whenever you need them. They are yours to serve. The Churches that have felt their uplifting service will never cease praising them for their splendid work.

This year we are to have but one offering for Christian education. It is to represent our Sunday Schools, our Christian Endeavor Societies, and our Churches. The date set for the offering is the first Sunday in November, which is the second day. We are asked to give $40,000 on that day for Christian education. We are well able to do it. We will give it, and more, if we really want to promote a program of Christian education in the Christian Church. Surely we want to do it!

WOMEN LEADERS ON PROGRAM AT ELON.

A glance at the program for the Elon Chautauqua program this year shows a number of capable women as instructors and leaders.

Mrs. M. T. Morrill will come to represent the foreign mission department and to lead women in missionary societies further in their study of missions. The women of the Christian Church will study Porto Rico, and our work there, in their foreign study next year. This is very appropriate, as 1925 will be the twenty-fifth year of our work on that island, and the story is an interesting one, and one which will inspire us to go forward in the great work that is being done. Mrs. Morrill was so popular at Elon last year, and on other visits to the South, that many women will wish to attend her classes again this year.

Mrs. W. T. Walters, of Richmond, will be the leader of a class in dramatization to show how this great field may be utilized in Christian education. Mrs. Walters has put on some very successful pageants in the Richmond Church recently, and is making special study and experiment in this field.

Mrs. T. G. Hyatte, of Newport News, comes to the Chautauqua at Elon for the first time this year. She is a most successful Christian Endeavor worker—"The best intermediate superintendent in the country," one of her own intermediate girls declared recently. She will have the Christian Endeavor work on the program this year, with special emphasis on the junior and intermediate work. Lucy M. Eldredge.

FIRST CHRISTIAN CHURCH, NORFOLK.

Children in our Church have been enjoying for the past three weeks a daily vacation Bible school. This is the first time our Church here has tried such a school, and everybody is greatly delighted with it. At first it was thought we would limit it to forty pupils, as that number would take all the children in our Church from the ages of four to twelve, inclusive; but we have been almost forced to enroll ten others. Our total enrollment, therefore, has been fifty, and we have averaged thirty-seven.

The pastor has been general director of the school, and he has been assisted by Mrs. J. G. Truitt. The other teachers and assistants were Mrs. Archer V. Allen, Mrs. S. K. Beaser, Mrs. H. J. Grube, Miss Emma Morgan, Miss Ray Hall and Miss Margaret Howell. Each of these has rendered fine service, and received last night a vote of thanks and commendation by the official board. We have learned through actual experience that the usual testimonies concerning the value of the daily vacation Bible school are quite true. John G. Truitt.

Before his acceptance of a Cabinet position, Curtis D. Wilbur was president of the Los Angeles County Christian Endeavor Union. He sent a message to the union a few days ago, which was read before more than three thousand Endeavorers. Secretary Wilbur is neither too great nor too busy to remember that he is still an Endeavorer. The nation needs more men like him in high places. We would then not be hedged about with so much scandal.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

DEAR FRIENDS:

It continues to rain, and the farm boys have not been able to get in the cornfield for two weeks. It has been an unfavorable year to farm. We did a wise thing in planting sixty bushels of soy beans and peas. They are looking fine and are a promising crop right at this time. If we could have a few clear days to dry off the grounds, so we could get our corn worked out and kill out the grass, we would have a promising crop of corn this year. We have had quite a time in getting our crop planted on account of the continued rains. We have three acres of corn to plant yet. We want to call your attention to the abundance of fruit this year and ask that you can some for the Orphanage. We will be glad to furnish empty cans if you do not live too far away. Write us how many cans you can use and we will be glad to ship you whatever amount you need. The good ladies have been kind to us, and have always remembered us in the canning season.

MISSIONARY CRADLE ROLL.

The Newport News Christian Church had its missionary cradle roll party on the 12th of June, with 38 present, including mothers and children. Printed invitations with pictures of babies pasted thereupon were mailed a week in advance.

The program given in the May Christian Missionary was used. The mite-box offerings amounted to $12.32. Five new members were added to the roll, making a total of 30.

Following the program, ice cream, wafers and animal crackers were served.

MRS. W. H. BAKER, Supt.

It would be a fine thing if every one would check up on himself looking for what is lacking. "If thou wouldst be perfect," said the Lord, "go sell what thou hast and give to the poor." Check up on yourself. Fill in the gaps. Make the weak places strong.

EASTERN VIRGINIA CONVENTION.

The 1924 session of the Convention of Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference will be held at Bethlehem Christian Church, four miles west of Suffolk, on the Suffolk-Franklin Highway, July 22d and 23d.

Every Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society of the Conference should be represented by a full delegation.

Every Sunday School superintendent and every Christian Endeavor president should plan to be there.

Watch for the program. You will discover that it is not a program of addresses, but a program of education, with opportunities for all to take part.

We call attention to the action of the last Convention in lowering the assessment. The dues this year are 15 cents per Sunday School scholar and senior Endeavor member, 10 cents per intermediate Endeavor member, and 5 cents per junior Endeavor member. According to these requirements, the Convention should receive approximately $1,100.00.

Bethlehem Church has recently been remodeled, and is now a great rural Church, and we are not doing our part unless we give them a great Convention. Will you do your part?

J. H. Lightbourne, Executive Secretary.

Gaston Doumergue, the new President of France, is the first Protestant ever to hold that position. The new President is a member of the Huguenot Church. There were four Catholic priests in the Parliament which voted for M. Doumergue. It is hopeful that France has chosen a Protestant to head its government, and so freed itself from more or less papal control. It is also a great honor which has come to M. Doumergue, but he confronts a gigantic task as he seeks to lead France out of the mesh of entanglements into which others have led her.

MORRIS.

Mrs. Mary A. Morris, wife of the late John Morris, of Free Union, Va., departed this life July 2, 1924, at the old homestead, where they had lived for many years. She was a splendid woman, possessing many fine qualities, loved by all who knew her. Up to the time of her death, she seemed in good health, assisting with the housework, which was always her pleasure. She retired Tuesday night as well as usual, but in the night was taken ill, called her son, Ellis, who immediately hurried to summon a physician, who came in a short while, but too late. She died in a few moments after the doctor arrived.

She leaves to mourn their loss ten boys and girls, all of whom are married and reside as follows: Ellis Morris, on the homeplace; James Morris, Harrisonburg; Arthur Morris, Clint Morris and Alex Morris, all of Sparrows Point, Md., and Hosea Morris, residing at Morgantown, W. Va.; Mrs. Cora Jolliett, of Sparrows Point, Md.; Mrs. Nora Davis, Crozet, Va.; Mrs. Mabel Via, Free Union, and Mrs. Virginia Herring, of Boonesville, Va.

She was a faithful and life-long member of the Christian Church, always true to the Church of her choice. She and her husband reared a splendid family, who are a credit to both of them, all married and doing well, and all of whom were present at her burial, besides a host of grandchildren, relatives and friends.

She was a faithful and devoted wife, a kind and loving mother, a good neighbor and a loyal member of the Church. She will be greatly missed by all, but more especially by her children, who have for years been spending their vacation at home with mother. The many kind deeds she rendered will be remembered, and this memory will be the guardian angel to lead her children home.

She was tenderly laid to rest in the cemetery at Gentry's Chapel, the funeral services being conducted by Rev. E. M. Ramsey, of Earleysville, in the presence of a large congregation. The floral decorations were beautiful.

Geer, Va. W. A. CRAWFORD.

WHITE.

At Sarah Leigh Hospital, Norfolk, Va., June 11, 1924, Joseph Henry White, infant son of E. Carl and Annie L. White, passed to his early and final resting-place. The many friends and kindred extend their deepest sympathy to this young father and mother. Sister white had been very sick and under hospital treatment.

The mortal part of this beautiful babe was placed in the family plot at Spring Hill Christian Church. May the great Physician speedily restore the mother to her health, and bless each parent in this hour of loss. JOS. L. FOSTER.

DEMENT.

Luther Dement, born 1851; died June 27, 1924. His wife died in 1895. They left two sons and two daughters. He united with the Christian Church at Mt. Carmel in 1895. His funeral service took place from the same Church on June 29, 1924. D. A. L.

HOWELL.

Whereas, on the 4th day of April, 1924, God, in His infinite wisdom, saw fit to remove from our midst our beloved brother and deacon, Jet H. Howell, one who was always loyal to every enterprise of the Church and a faithful worker in all of its organizations—we, the deacons and members of Holy Neck Christian Church, realizing our great loss, offer the following resolutions:

First, That we bow in humble submission to the divine will, knowing that He doeth all things well.

Second, That we extend to his bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy, while our hearts are made to bleed in the loss of a good husband, a faithful deacon, neighbor and friend.

Third, That a copy of these resolutions be sent the bereaved family, a copy to The Christian Sun for publication, and a copy be placed in the Church records of Holy Neck Christian Church.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By Rev. S. M. Lynam.

Education and religion ought to be inseparably bound together. Religion without education is in danger of fanaticism, and education without religion only makes one expert to do evil.

Great Building Planned.—

The finest religious education building in the world is now planned and has been authorized by the Calvary Baptist Church, Washington, D. C. The building is to be eight stories in height, and will cost approximately five hundred thousand dollars. Every where the world is waking up to the task of religious education, and the Church, like the Christ, is setting the child in the midst.

Wilson School Opened.—

A Woodrow Wilson school for the training of three thousand Armenian and Greek orphans is soon to be opened on the Greek island of Syra, according to an announcement of the Near East Relief. The school will consist of twenty buildings, and will cover about two hundred acres. As America educates the orphans of Europe, she is forging bonds of friendship. This is our chance to build love into the hearts of boys and girls. Woodrow Wilson lived and died for an ideal, but in the school which bears his name it can be made a reality. Dreams do come true and the world can be a glad place in which to live.

Great Britain Thinking Prohibition.—

The Bishop of Oxford has sponsored a local-option bill in the House of Lords. It is of a mild variety, only giving certain areas the right to limit the liquor traffic, but it and other defeated measures show that the temperance movement in Great Britain is growing. Liquor must ultimately go Let us hope and pray on for the success of our mother country in freeing herself from it.

It is interesting to remember that the first temperance society in the world was organized at Pleasant Hill Christian Church, Alamance County, N. C. The Christian Church has ever dared to pioneer and to lead. It must not fail now in leadership.

Presbyterians Refuse Women Admission.—

A petition signed by Mrs. Charles A. Blinn and others was turned down by the General Council of the Presbyterian Church. The petition asked that women be admitted to the General Assembly of the Church. The ground for refusal was that the presbyteries had defeated an overture designed to make women eligible for ordination to the ministry, and the law of the Church states that only ordained ministers and elders are eligible to the General Assembly.

It is a great thing to reflect that the Christian Church has recognized women from the earliest days, and it is significant that the Presbyterian Church is still ultraconservative in this liberal age of ours. Women are an asset elsewhere, and we are persuaded that they are in the Church.

German President Grateful.—

The President of the German republic entertained a number of members of the Friends' relief mission at a garden party. At the gathering, both President Ebert and Foreign Minister Stresemann expressed their gratitude for the relief given to the starving children of Germany by America. In the campaign, five million dollars was collected and fifty-eight thousand tons of food shipped to Germany. This was distributed by the Friends' relief commission.

Such acts of kindness as the feeding of the starving German children and the recognition of it by heads of the government of Germany does bring men closer together and make for brotherhood. Out of such things is welded a chain of love which will bind men together more inseparably than can treaties or leagues drawn by diplomats, however wise they be.

Continued Service.—

In continuance of service, the Episcopal Church of the Holy Cross, of Troy, N. Y., offers this excellent record: In its history of seventy-nine years, the Church has had but two rectors—Rev. John I. Tucker and the present incumbent, Rev. Edward W. Babcock. In fifty-two years it has had but two organists—W. W. Rosseau, and his son, W. W. Rosseau, Jr. In sixty-one years there have been only two vergers—W. F. Wagstaff, and his son, J. W. Wagstaff. This is a fine record, but it seems to us that the long service of Dr. W. W. Staley at the Suffolk Christian Church compares favorably. Dr. Staley served the Suffolk Church for forty-one years, and is still connected with it on salary as pastor-emeritus. His is a record of which he and the Christian Church may justly be proud. A man lives himself into the hearts of his people with such a service.

Men and Money Lacking.—

The Religious Education Association has adopted temporary policies due to the fact that neither men nor money are available to carry out the permanent program of the association. Dr. Clifford Manshardt, a graduate of University of Chicago Teachers' College and Union Theological Seminary, is to serve as assistant general secretary, and to have charge of the office of the association. Dr. Theodore G. Soares and Dr. Geo. A. Coe will be associated with the work.

Both these men are connected with the University of Chicago and are prominent in the field of religious education. The bi-monthly publication of the association will be continued. Dr. Henry F. Cope, who served as general secretary of the organization and editor of Religious Education for many years, died several month ago, and the filling of his place has so far been impossible.

Lutherans Begin Work in China.—

It is announced that the Lutheran Church will begin work in the Shantung province, China. A third of the desired budget is already in hand, and the rest of the money is expected without delay.

Such announcements make us remember that the Christian Church has a Chinese province assigned to it, and we wonder still why we, as Christian men and women, are not thinking and giving, looking to its occupation. Men and women continue to live in darkness, and they need the light which we can and must give them. What the Christian Church needs, what every Church needs, as for that matter, is an adequate financial program. By adequate financial program, we mean systematic giving among our people. As a Church, we must have stewardship taught and lived. If our people tithed, there would be enough money in the Lord's treasury to begin our work in China and to see that all its needs were met as well as those in our other fields. Will you be one to pledge yourself to tithe?

Dunker's Stand Against War.—

Resolutions condemning war were passed by the Church of the Brethren (Dunker's) at its recent conference held at Hershey, Pa., June 4th to 11th. The resolution against war provides that the Church join the Friends, Mennonites and other peace bodies, such as the National Council for the Prevention of War, in promoting constructive education for peace; that it join with other Christian bodies in the observance of world co-operation days; that it protest to the War Department against "mobilization Day" as a provocation of unfriendliness of other nations and a cultivation of the same militaristic sprit in our country that we condemned in the German government; that it urge the President and Congress to join the world court and the League of Nations; and that the welfare board of the Church urge the brethren of military age to register on "Mobilization Day" as conscientious objectors to war.

This advanced stand against war, taken by the Church of the Brethren (Dunker), and the stand taken by the Augustana Lutherans are hopeful signs. Every religious body should protest strenuously against "Mobilization Day," and should join in promoting constructive education for peace. The hope of ridding the world of the stalking monster, war, lies in the Church to whom Jesus gave His peace. We must set ourselves to the accomplishment of the task as followers of His. War must be destroyed.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Dr. P. H. Fleming, Burlington, N. C., is attending the summer institute of public welfare at the University of North Carolina, and is greatly enjoying the same. On Thursday, July 17th, Dr. Fleming addressed the institute on "Inter-County Welfare Work and Problems."

"People who will not work unless they are in the lead always make poor leaders. You can always tell how genuine a person's interest is by the way he works when some one else is leading. It is a serious reflection on a man's sincerity when he does less out of office than when in office."

The revival services at Union Church, Union Ridge, N. C., will begin, writes Dr. P. H. Fleming, pastor, on the fourth Sunday in July, with two services each day, one at 11 A. M. and another at 2 P. M. The pastor is to be assisted by his son, Rev. Hamilton Jennings Fleming, of Portland, Maine.

The loyal members at Sanford have lost no time in replacing a house of worship on the site where theirs was burned some months ago. The reopening services in the new building were held Sunday, July 13th, President W. A. Harper, of Elon, being the speaker at the 11 o'clock hour. The rebuilt house is similar to, but an improvement on, the former house.

Rev. F. C. Lester, who graduated recently from the Yale Divinity School, has closed his pastorate with the Christian Church at Schultzville, N. Y. Bro. Lester has accepted the pastorate of our Franklin, Va., Church as the successor to Dr. C. H. Rowland. We wish for him and the Franklin people a most happy and prosperous relationship in their work for the growth of the kingdom.

"My Church and I: It is the home of my soul, the altar of my devotion, the hearth of my faith, the center of any affections, and the foretaste of heaven. It claims the first place in my heart, the highest place in my activities and its unity, peace and progress concern my life in this world and in that which is to come. I owe it my zeal, my benevolence, and my prayers. When I neglect its services, I injure its good name, I lessen its power, I discourage its members, and I chill my own soul."

It will be a great pity for a pastor in North Carolina or Virginia to have to conduct evangelistic meetings in the week of July 28th to August 3d. This is Chautauqua week at Elon, and all our pastors should avail themselves of this great opportunity of further preparing themselves for the pastorate and for preaching the gospel. The Churches should send their pastors to the Chautauqua. Here is hoping that many will be found there for the great program and exercises to be given!

The North Carolina Tuberculosis Association has been fortunate in securing the services of Miss Theresa Dansdill for North Carolina. Miss Dansdill was formerly assistant director of the modern health crusade division of the National Tuberculosis Association, and did some most valuable work in this capacity. Among other things, she prepared much of the modern health crusade and nutrition crusade literature in connection with the director, Mr. Charles M. de Forest, and she is the author of a book entitled "Health Training in Schools," which she prepared for the National Tuberculosis Association and which is on sale by them through State tuberculosis associations. The North Carolina Tuberculosis Association considers itself fortunate in being able to offer her services to the people of the State.

R. B. Moffitt has been appointed assistant soliciting freight and passenger agent of the Atlantic and Yadkin Railroad, and will devote most of his time to Greensboro, A. L. Thompson, traffic manager, announced yesterday.

Mr. Moffitt has been with the A. & Y. for some time. His father is agent at Ramseur. Continued interest in the A. & Y. is being shown by other railroads, Mr. Thompson said. Representatives of the Illinois Central, the Richmond, Fredericksburg and Potomac, the Baltimore and Ohio and other lines have been in the city during the past few days.

The mission secretary had the privilege of being in the service with the pastor, Rev. H. Brisco Hall, at Palm Street, Greensboro, Sunday, July 13th. Bro. Hall had a class-room full of men deeply interested in the Sunday School lesson. The Sunday School is having wonderful growth. The Church has decided to improve its house of worship very materially by installing new windows, putting in new gutters and spouting, repairing the roof, plastering class-rooms, installing a new lighting system, painting the building without and within, decorating the interior of the building, and have cement steps and sidewalks in front of the Church. The Church needs this improvement, and under the energetic leadership of Bro. Hall we have no doubt but that the work will be accomplished at an early date.

If we could see the heathen, and all their gross and unspeakable superstitions; their blinding fatalism, it would affect the heart and move the purse. We would soon be enthusiastic for missionary enterprise if we saw. What Livingstone saw in Africa affected his heart until it kept him there in sacrifice. If the American tourists will stand outside one of the London prisons and see over a thousand drunken women confined there, they will not doubt the right and wrong of prohibition. It was the sight of the evils of the American saloon that eventually put it out. To see Jesus also affects the heart and it changes men. Zaccheus saw Him, and it affected his heart, and because his heart, his business, his public life and his home. See Jesus, it will change you!—Rev. A. E. Gregory.

THE DANVILLE MEETING.

We began this meeting June 29th, and continued till July 13th—two weeks. The members had held a week's prayer meeting just before and since the close of the two weeks of revival. Rev. H. W. Peck is following the meeting up with a week of Bible instruction. He is said to be a great teacher. The evangelist who did the preaching was Rev. H. C. Caviness; his sermons were strong, definite, and forceful, and he is one of the most zealous and untiring preachers we have ever had with us. We also had Prof. J. C. Yelton, an evangelist-singer, and in some respects was the best we have ever heard, and especially as a soloist; he seemed to have the singers completely under his control—the singing was fine! And I want to say, we have one of the finest pianists of her age we have ever met—Miss Collins. We will never know the amount of good accomplished in this meeting till eternity reveals it.

So far as we know, there were something near a hundred reclaimations and professions of faith together. Many of them were of other congregations. A good number united with our Church, and others will soon. There were several professed sanctification, and more than one hundred offered themselves in a consecration service to God for any work that He could use them in. The workers (members) did faithful work during the meeting. To God be all praise and honor for all the good that was accomplished. These evangelists did not allow any public collections taken. Just had a box placed at the door into which the people put their offering as they came in and went out. So you can see these evangelists are not commercializing their work. God bless them in their work in soul winning.

SPECIAL APPEAL TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

Each year an increasing number of the young people of the Southern Convention are coming to share and take part in the activities of Chautauqua week at Elon. Many will this year be interested in seeing the new college buildings, and a large number of young people is expected.

A number of courses are planned especially for them, including one in Bible study, with Rev. H. S. Hardcastle; young people's work, with Rev. J. H. Lightbourne; Christian Endeavor course, a course in pageantry and missions, and other helpful courses.

The afternoons will be devoted to recreation, under the leadership of Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, who has had experience in this kind of work in summer camps, as well as in his Church work. The "young people's happy hour" for songs and stories and stunts on the campus each evening at 7 o'clock has been one of the happiest times of past Chautauquas, and old and young enjoy its fellowship.

If you want the young people of your Church to know more about the Christian Church and its work, to become acquainted with Elon College and all it has to offer youth, to be trained in their Church work, and to be strengthened in their own Christian lives, see that they come to Elon College July 28th to August 3d, for the program promises all that, and more, to the young people who are to be there.

MEMORIAL FUND.

Previously acknowledged	$ 9.00
J. F. Hilliard, Wise, N. C.	1.00
Total	$10.00

The Southern Convention at Norfolk, in May, decided to erect monuments at two historic spots, long neglected by us Christians. One is to be at the site of Old Lebanon Church, Surry County, Va., where all party and sectarian names were discarded by our Church ancestors and the name Christian only was adopted.

The other is the late resting-place of Rev. Jas. O'Kelly, near O'Kelly's Chapel, Durham County, N. C. We should have $2,000 with which to erect suitable markers. What will you give?

COMMITTEE ON MONUMENT.

(Judge J. F. West, chairman, Waverly, Va.; Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, secretary, Durham, N. C.; W. E. McClenny, Suffolk, Va.; J. O. Atkinson, treasurer, Elon College, N. C.)

P. S.: Bro. Hilliard, in remitting, writes: "I fully agree with what Bro. T. J. Holland writes. We ought not to have any trouble in raising required amounts for a cause so worthy." All donations should be sent the treasurer, and will be acknowledged through THE SUN.

POWER OF THE HIGHEST.

In his "Ring In the New," Dr. Robert E. Speer drew attention to the recurrence of the word "power" in the Scriptures. We might do well to recall how that same word has come ringing down the years in the prayers and hymns of the Church. Our impotence is impressively painful, and we need to look away to the source of our strength. The following quotation from Dr. Speer should be helpful:

"One great outstanding word of the New Testament is the word 'power.' It is useful to count up in a concordance the number of times 'power' is used as compared with 'love' and 'hope' and 'prayer.' The word 'power' occurs nearly three times as often as either the word 'hope' or the word 'prayer,' and twice as often as the noun 'love.' The great note of Christ's work in the world, the great note of his perpetual immanence in humanity, is the note of power, the power of His resurrection. It was by His rising again from the dead that He was declared to be 'the Son of God with power.'

"We need in this day as much as anything else that larger view of Christ that will not abridge or limit His power. We need His power of fearless and penetrating diagnosis of our moral need. That is where all our schemes go wrong at the very beginning, from their superficial and frivolous interpretation of what the problem is that needs to be solved. How many times during the years that have just gone by as we felt the thrill of the great impulses that were moving across the nation and the world did men say to one another, 'We shall never be the same again!' No, we shall never be the same again, but it may be that we shall be less and worse than we were before. An experience of destruction such as we passed through will not necessarily remold and remake the character of mankind. Too often it cuts only into the structural problems of humanity, not deep down where the great streams of organic life are flowing. What we need is Christ's power of diagnosis of what the real need is, that moral and spiritual need which lies deeper than all the little nostrums of our day can reach.

"And we need that power released upon our life in larger volume to break the shackles of our old habitudes, our habit of acceptance of what is practicable, our habit of acquiescence in inadequate moral achievement in life, our habit of surrender to defeat and short-comings and more delinquency and to tame postponement of the kingdom of God.

"There are no limitations around the power of God except the resistance of human wills. God, who was able to conquer death by the resurrection of His Son, is able today to slay any foe that needs to be slain, to do any work that needs to be done, and to build in our own generation the walls of the kingdom of God upon the earth. We want a larger thought of Christ's power as unhindered, as able both to reveal the real need of modern humanity and to accomplish the work that our day needs."

Unless the Church leans heavily on the arm of the Almighty, there is little hope, no hope, of meeting the unprecedented obligations and measuring up to the tremendous opportunities of this age. Only the power of the highest can equip our Christian forces sufficiently. Not less of organization, but more of divine energy is our need. —Christian Advocate.

AGRICULTURAL NOTES.

In Virginia, all farm work is reported by the agricultural statistician as being three or four weeks later than usual. Considerable corn-planting was done during the second week in June, but not more than 75 per cent of the intended acreage has been planted, and some farmers have been unable to get all their land plowed. The condition of the corn crop is rather poor, stands being bad and necessitating much replanting. Many fields are becoming grassy. Wheat in Virginia has improved considerably, and heads appear large, but rain in many sections while wheat was in bloom will probably result in poorly filled heads. Cutting has begun in the Southern counties. Tobacco transplanting has progressed rapidly where farmers were able to prepare the land, and approximately 75 per cent of the crop has been planted. The stand is generally very good, although there is some cut-worm damage. Hay crops have made splendid growth, and the condition is unusually good, but the weather has been most unfavorable for curing the early crops and considerable quantities of hay have been lost. The digging of early Irish potatoes is under way in the Norfolk section, but yields have been smaller than expected and the general condition of the crop is lower than on the first of June. Sweet potatoes are making good progress. The fruit prospects are quite promising in most sections, and the Southwest expects the best crop for many years, but in the northern part of the State the York Imperial, the most important commercial apple, has set poorly. The weather has delayed spraying. The peach crop will be larger than usual in all sections of the State.

The planting of peanuts has been delayed by wet weather. Generally, the stand is fairly good, but growth is backward and fields are becoming grassy. The cotton crop has made very poor progress. The stand is bad, the plants are small, and fields need cultivation. Owing to unfavorable weather, replanting could not be finished in time for the crop to mature, so some cotton fields will be planted in other crops. Hot, dry weather is badly needed. Virginia lovestock is in good condition. Lambs are ready for market, and some shipments have been made. Sheep-shearing has been completed.

The agricultural statistician of North Carolina states that the farm outlook in his State is generally good, notwithstanding the belated season caused by cool weather and frequent rains. Tobacco is late, but stands are reported as unusually good. The plants are coming out rapidly and a good crop is expected. Cotton is later than for many years, and in some sections stands are irregular and some replanting has been done. Chopping is progressing rapidly. In the southeastern counties, grassiness is an important factor. The cotton acreage is larger than last year. Corn is late, but stands are generally good. The crop is grassy, especially in cotton sections, where all available labor has been used in cleaning the cotton fields.

Small grains average from fairly good to good. Some damage from rust is reported, but farmers in the principal wheat counties are optimistic on the whole, the expected yield of wheat being about up to average. Spring oats are unusually good, though winter oats are short. The fruit outlook is good, splendid to bumper crops being reported from many sections. Early peaches are already glutting small markets. Apples are generally good, but blight is seriously affecting apples and pears. Truck is fair to good, though somewhat late. Early Irish potatoes are moving rapidly from eastern counties, 1,734 cars having been shipped prior to June 14th. The Irish potato crop is expected to be much larger than last year, when a total of 3,500 cars were shipped from North Carolina. More fertilizer has been used under all crops in North Carolina this year, and a larger proportion than usual was of high grade. Live stock is generally in good condition.

WONDERFUL RESULTS.

Announcements recently made by the Southern Methodist Church show that during the Centenary Missionary Campaign in that denomination, four out of the five years being now completed, there have been larger advances in work overseas than during the previous twenty years. In 1919, when this campaign was launched, the denomination had not sent out an additional new missionary in ten years. Since that date, 274 new missionaries have been sent out, which is within two dozen of doubling the entire missionary force.

The number of mission fields occupied has grown from seven to twelve. Ten thousand converts have been added to the Church membership, and four orphanages, two hospitals and six schools founded in countries where the Church was not even represented five years ago. There are now as many schools and colleges of the Southern Methodist Church outside as within the United States, and more hospitals.

Fifty schools and a dozen hospitals have been built or rebuilt on mission fields during this period. The largest Southern Methodist educational institution is now located in Japan, and one of the largest Churches in the denomination is in Czecho-Slovakia. Among other additions, the authorities list the finest mission Church in the world, located at Havana; the best mission building in Belgium, located at Brussels; the largest mission center in Poland, situated in Warsaw; and at Prague the finest mission enterprise in Czecho-Slovakia. Three hundred new Churches and one hundred new sites have been added during this period.

These are fine results for the Southern Methodist movement. It would be such a wonderful thing if all those who pledged to Men and Millions in our own Church would rally to the support of the Church and pay, thus making possible such a report from our own loved brotherhood.

THE FOG SHALL LIFT.

By the deep sea lands I silently muse as I list to the ocean's roar,
And mark the delicate rim of lace-foam curling on the shore.
Beyond are the valleys and crested peaks of a boundless, billowy sea,
Though at my feet falls a vale of mist that hides them from me;
But the mists will drift, and the clouds will rift,
And the curtain of fleecy fog will lift.

Ah! wondrous fair are the castles we build, as we stand on the threshold of life,
And little think we of the cares of the world, with its sorrows, its toils and its strife;
Of its valleys to cross; of its mountains to climb; of the perils that often befall:
'Tis well that a hand all wise has let down a curtain concealing them all;
But the mists will drift, and the clouds will rift,
And the curtain of fleecy fog will lift.

Ah! a time will come, for come it must, when each shall be standing alone
With trembling hand and faltering foot by the shore of a land unknown;
From the ken of man concealed, there lies a region beyond the skies,
And soon shall break that light divine on my wondering, raptured eyes;
For the mists shall drift, and the clouds shall rift,
And the curtain of fleecy fog will lift.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

A GREAT CONVENTION.

The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the North Carolina Christian Conference met in annual session at New Elam, Merry Oaks, N. C., on the evening of July 15th, and adjourned, after an exceedingly busy and profitable session, on the afternoon of July 17th. Bro. C. H. Stephenson, of Raleigh, N. C., is the president, and one feels like saying also the marker of this Convention. He is an official who considers it worth while to be interested in his Convention the whole year around. He carries the Convention on his heart and boosts it the whole year through, gets up a great program for its annual session, carries the program out on time, and with a jolly good spirit, and delivers an annual address that is a classic. His annual addresses are in no way perfunctory, but reveal the spirit of progress and growth and need of the Sunday Schools of the Convention. Being a great Sunday School worker himself he knows how to inspire others and to conduct a Convention that is up-to-date in every particular and profitable to all who attend. His address at New Elam on "The Four Pillars of Sunday School Success" was practical, pointed and powerful. He claims that the four pillars of the Sunday School are prayer, program, perseverance, progress. He treated each of these in a very masterly manner. Next week's SUN will carry full notes of this splendid address.

Another outstanding feature of this Convention was a very striking and helpful devotional period Rev. N. G. Newman, D. D., of Elon College, N. C., conducted at the opening of each session. The following themes were treated: "Moments With the Master," "With the Master at the Parting of the Ways," "With the Master on the Threshold of Life's Mission," "With the Master in the Supreme Test," "With the Master in the Valley of Humiliation," and "With the Master even Unto the End."

The Convention was very greatly edified by these spiritual and uplifting devotional periods, and voted unanimously that Dr. Newman furnish, as far as possible, his manuscripts for publication in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. It is greatly to be hoped that he will do so, as they should have a wider hearing than the Convention was able to afford, and many who attended the Convention would be glad indeed to have them for future study. .

Among the very worthy and notable addresses and papers before the body were: "Sunday School Possibilities," by Dr. C. H. Rowland; "Teaching Young People to Worship," by Rev. A. H. Hook; "How Shall we Interest Young People in Missions," by Rev. J. Lee Johnson; "Christian Social Activities for Young Folks," by Mrs. W. A. Harper; "A Larger Vision of Service," Miss Lucy Eldredge; "Christian Endeavor as Seen by a Field Worker," by Miss Pattie Coghill; "Christian Endeavor's Influence on the Spiritual Life," by Miss Lucille Mulholland; "Christian Service," by Superintendent C. D. Johnston; "Teacher Training," by Dr. W. C. Wicker, and "Training for Definite Service," by Dr. W. A. Harper.

Rev. J. E. McCauley presented the report on senior Christian Endeavor; Miss Fleta Summers, that on junior Christian Endeavor; Rev. J. F. Johnson, of "Christian Endeavor's Opportunity in Country Churches"; Mr. H. M. Rhodes, on "What Our Christian Endeavor Accomplishes," and Mrs. L. L. Vaughan, a departmental report on "Primary and Beginners in Sunday School"; Miss Susie Riddick, on "Intermediates"; Mr. Geo. McCullers, on "Music"; Mr. J. A. Kimball, on "Literature"; Mrs. W. C. Whitaker, on "Missions," and Dr. N. G. Newman, on "Organization and Expansion."

On Thursday morning, Mr. L. L. Vaughan, superintendent of our Raleigh School, presented to the Convention a model program for the Sunday School, and then conducted a model Sunday School according to the program. It was an interesting period that the delegates present will not forget. Bro. J. C. McAdams, teacher of the Citizens' Bible Class, Elon College, N. C., undertook the difficult task of teaching the model Sunday School and was pronounced by many who heard him as very eminently successful. The Convention certainly profited by Bro. McAdams' teaching. Here is a teacher who thinks that some of the time belongs to him in which to explain points in the lesson and bring out the main theme in the lesson, but is not selfish or egotistic enough to think that the whole thirty minutes allotted the lesson period should be monopolized by him. Bro. McAdams does not believe in paralyzing a class by preaching at them thirty minutes. He leaves that for the preacher to do, and is content to confine his efforts to the work of teaching, and not that of so-called lecturing or preaching at the class. Scores of our Sunday Schools would certainly be better off if they follow the fine examples of this successful teacher, and give the class a chance as well as the teacher.

The song service was very fine indeed and helpful, under the efficient leadership of Bro. Geo. M. McCullers, assisted by the splendid class of singers at New Elam, and on Wednesday evening by a very large class from Wake Chapel.

The service of song was exceedingly inspirational and helpful to the Convention throughout. This body is fortunate indeed in having a song leader who is deeply interested in Sunday School music and wishes that the service of song shall be a feature in every Sunday School and in every Christian Endeavor Society.

The attendance at the Convention was fine. The representatives from the Churches was good and enthusiasm an high fom the beginning. The last session of the N. C. S. S. and Chistian Endeavor Convention was certainly a most helpful and inspiring one. Of course, the pastor, Rev. B. J. Howard, and his good people of New Elam did everything necessary for the entertainment of the Convention. Hospitality was unbounded, and the feast of good things and fine fellowship obtained throughout. The Convention theme was "Reach, Teach and Save," and one who attended and gave earnest heed to the missions was compelled to feel that the theme was emphasized and made prominent throughout. There were very many brief talks by the brethren and sisters on practical topics, and reports which were certainly worth while and manifested a very deep interest of the people of this Convention in their Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies. It was an intellectual and spiritual feast to be at this Convention. One feels that great and lasting good was accomplished through it for our Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Societies, and, through these, in building up the kingdom of our Lord.

THE GENIUS OF EFFICIENT COMMITTEES.

I.

The purpose of a committee is to function—to do the task committed to its charge. Most of the world's work is done by committees, by specially designated individuals who are to represent the group. This is true in affairs of the State as well as of the Church. The twelve disciples were in fact the Master's committee. The twelve men chosen by Moses to spy out the promised land of Canaan were in fact a committee. And thus the tasks of human service and progress have been committed to committees for their deliberations and recommendations.

And a committee can either put the organization it represents on the way to progress, or it can block the way of progress. A place on any Church committee is a sacred trust. And the fact is, no one has a right to accept a place on any committee if he is not sufficiently interested in the purpose of the same to give it his time and sympathetic attention.

The story of Moses' committee of twelve men sent out to make a survey of the promised land offers most wonderful suggestions relative to the importance attached to the province of a committee, and the care that should be exercised in selecting a committee.

Moses had led the children of Israel out from under the bondage of Egyptian servitude, and had led them to the very border of the promised land. The enthusiasm of the crowd was running high. With eager hearts they anticipated the experiences awaiting them in the promised land—the object of their hopes, the destiny of their search. And Moses appointed twelve men to make a survey of the situation—to see what advantages and what disadvantages the people might expect when they entered in.

The committee of twelve went together to spy out the land, and though they were with each other, and though they saw the same things, yet they did not agree on the validity of the promises of their promised land.

And the attitude of ten of the men reveals the tragedy of having on any committee people who have no vision and no faith. It is always perilously fatal to entrust any responsibility to men and women who do not have faith in the proposition under consideration or who are not interested in its realization; dangerous to entrust responsibility to people who are satisfied with what is easiest to get, instead of laying claim to what is best to have.

The committee of twelve men appointed by

Moses held in their hands the destiny of Israel for forty years. It was a tremendous responsibility. No personal interest or personal fears should have influenced them in their report. And yet ten of the men allowed their personal prejudices to influence their report, and as a result the children of Israel had to wander aimlessly in the wilderness of disappointment for forty years.

Two of the men, Caleb and Joshua, had the interest of the people at heart, and the faith of God in their souls, and wanted to enter in and possess the land at once. But there were ten men on the committee who were against them, and the majority ruled. The people took the opinion of the ten men who were faint-hearted and without faith, instead of the opinion of the two young men of courage and faith and vision. But they paid the price in having to wander in the wilderness for forty years. What a tragedy that a whole nation had thus to suffer because of the lack of faith and of vision of ten men! The chance of a whole generation was sacrificed. How often the same has been experienced by schools, by Churches, by communities and by nations—a whole generation has had to pay the price for the lack of faith and of vision of men and women to whom the responsibility of progress had been entrusted. "Where there is no vision, the people perish."

Caleb and Joshua were the only men of the twelve who were qualified for a place on such an important committee. They were the only men of the twelve who had vision, and faith in God and in the future. They wanted to lay claim to the best. Young Caleb wanted quick action. He said, "Let us go up at once and possess it; for we are well able to overcome it." Caleb and Joshua had iron in their blood and faith in their heart.

But the other men belonged to the species "It can't be done," and they "brought up an evil report of the land which they had spied out," and as it was a case of ten to two, the people voted with the ten, and ignored the two. No doubt, the two young men who wanted to enter in and claim the promises of God were dubbed as visionary and impracticable—dreamers—and were thought to be intoxicated with the enthusiasm of inexperience. But if the people had followed the advice of the two young men, Joshua and Caleb, they would have saved Israel the forty years of wandering in the wilderness, and all would have been permitted to see the promised land. But because Moses and the people listened to the men who had no vision and no faith, the record shows that none of the ten nor any of those who shared sympathy with their faithless attitude were permitted ever to see the promised land. Even Moses himself, because he was influenced by the opinion of the ten, or because he permitted their report to thwart his holy purpose, was denied the privilege of entering into the Canaan of his hopes. Only Joshua and Caleb were permitted to enter in with the next generation. What a pity that they had to wait forty years for the privilege; that they had to wait for the generation of reactionaries to die off before they could enter into the land which God had promised them and which he would have given them forty years before!

If the majority of the members of any committee do not have vision and faith, they can block the progress of a Church or of any organization sometimes for more than forty years—at least until after they are dead and their position of authority passes into the hands of those who are committed to progress.

The ten men on Moses' committee wanted the promised land, but they were afraid of the difficulties in the way. It was a question of the giants vs. the Lord. They saw only the giants. They were frightened by the difficulties. Caleb and Joshua saw the same giants also, but they also saw God, who would help them overcome the giants. They, too, saw the difficulties that were in the way, but they also saw the advantages that were theirs if they overcame the difficulties.

People who are committed to progress do not ignore or belittle the difficulties that lie in the way to progress. They recognize them all. But they see beyond themselves to the God who says, "According to your faith." Such people do not consult only their own prejudices and weakness, but they consult God's will and His strength, believing that His promises are true and never failing—"In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and He will direct thy paths"; "Commit thy way unto the Lord, trust also in Him, and He shall bring it to pass."

WHY A VACATION SCHOOL!

The vacation school is the answer to a great need. Statesmen, educators, journalists and Church leaders have lately combined to express an almost unanimous sentiment that, in order to strengthen the moral forces of the nation, it is necessary to begin with the generation just ahead. If the races move forward on the feet of little children, anything which might be done today to bring about the dawning of a better tomorrow, must be instituted through the school children, who will be the citizens of that better day. If we are to continue as a nation and a democracy to enjoy the fruits of our forefathers' beliefs, we must retain those beliefs. This is the way the situation was summed up. But in order that those beliefs be retained, it was necessary that a regular system of Christian training and education be brought into being, for at the present time systematic Christian instruction has been confined in most cases to one hour a week, and that boon was vouchsafed only to forty per cent of the nation's childhood.

Here it was that the vacation school found its opportunity. It is a real educational enterprise, and its primary purpose is the development of Christian character. It takes advantage of the fact that it is the use of the leisure time, the play time, which determines the character of the growing individual. Into this leisure time, the vacation Bible school brings a skillfully constructed program, designed to touch the child's life, naturally and effectively, at every point. Its devotional period satisfied the child's instinct to worship. Its music provides the necessary elements of rhythm and harmony, even while it stores the child's mind with priceless melodies. The habit talks give the child safe conduct in the real problems he is constantly being called upon to solve. Bible stories provide the inspiration and instruction, and the handicraft becomes the child's expression of the new impressions being received. He begins to live in a community—a Christian community—of his equals, and his life needs of inspiration, instruction and service are coherently provided for.

Specifically, this means that the child is not only taught the Bible stories and asked to memorize the verses, but that, in contact with his playmates who hear the same stories and learn the same verses, he is given opportunity to put those principles into practice in his playwork. He is given practice in living in a Christian community.

"That which a child is taught systematically and day by day will in the child's mind stand as the embodiment of all that is really important. This day-by-day instruction, the consecutive lesson periods, forms the foundation upon which the whole program of the vacation school rests. Christianity and Christian motives become to the child, not only "the embodiment of all that is really important," but matters of every-day life in work and play. The exercise of the highest powers, mentally, socially and spiritually, for the good of all mankind, becomes the guiding principle of the child's life, as a result of this day-by-day participation in the program of the vacation school.

Naturally, the child cannot be conscious of all this—he only knows that when he joins Jimmie and Johnnie in making a bench for the littler ones to use in Sunday School, he's having a fine time. And Mary doesn't realize that the scrapbook she is making for the poor children in the hospital is an "expression" of a well-planned "impression," but she does know the Bible verse that led her to do it. And when Richard steps out of the intermediate class to ward off a fight between two juniors, he has no technical term to apply to it—it comes as a result of something which will continue to have greater and greater effect as Richard's powers of doing increase. For the practice in Christian living which the children gain in the vacation school lays the foundations of Christian character in the individuals—and upon Christian characters rests the welfare of a Christian nation. (This article was furnished by the International Association of Daily Vacation Bible Schools, auxiliary to the International Council of Religious Education.)

THRIFT COMMITTEE REPORTS PROGRESS.

The work of the Committee on Thrift Education of the National Education Association is intimately concerned not only with the saving of money, the elimination of waste, and the teaching of these in the public schools, but with the making of a higher type of citizen. Character forms the basis of all citizenship; the better characters are those who have a wise forethought for the future, which is the end and aim of all thrift-teaching.

Arthur M. Chamberlain, chairman of the committee, says: "To integrate the thrift activities and projects with the regular school subjects is to give vitality and meaning to lessons which may seem, under the old system of teaching, to bear no relation to the life of the individual. As we have tried out the system in Oakland, Calif., the work in English is enriched and made to function in all school studies; the arithmetic is practicalized and carried over into every-day activities; the social studies, civics, citizenship, Americanization, biography, take on meaning and significance. Students are led into—not away from—a desire to save and spend wisely, to evaluate time, and to husband the resources of nature for the benefit of future generations.

"It is the desire of the thrift committee to develop further courses of study in a number of outstanding school systems throughout the country."

In the "little red schoolhouse" days of education, thrift was taught, if taught at all, only in its home economic aspects. That is, the farmer's daughter was instructed that it was "sinful" to waste food, and that only that should go to the pig-pen which was not fit for human consumption. The boy was taught that "thrift" consisted in the saving of money, rather than of effort; with money scarce, it, of course, became the great object of saving.

Thrift, as taught today, means economy of effort, of resource, of time, as well as of money. Public school teaching of thrift today is a citizenship builder, not a maker of misers. That the committee in charge of the work is so well able to spread the teaching is a source of the greatest satisfaction to all who have the cause of real character-building education at heart.

ELON LETTER.

I handed the conductor my ticket, on which was named, as my destination, Elon College. He smiled as he punched the ticket, and said: "You live in the best town in North Carolina. I have been passing your place for twenty-seven years. I have yet to see anything of an improper character around your station. The people there who board my train always treat me and my force with courtesy, and your boys and girls impress me with their good behaviour."

I was tired—fatigued, in fact—when he began his speech. But that tired feeling departed, to return no more, and some hours later when the faithful Southern landed me at Elon College, I was so full of energy that I actually tripped from the train to the car that was waiting to take me home.

We who represent our Church in places of responsibility and touch the young life of our generation at close quarters, sometimes get discouraged and wonder if it is really worth while. To have such a speech delivered to you as this honest-hearted conductor made to me, all unsought, puts new ozone in the lungs and new vitamines in the blood.

On that same trip, two men whom I did not know sat behind me. They were discussing topics of the day—the Democratic Convention, good roads, the crop outlook, the Churches, education, etc. One asked the other in the midst of his conversation relative to higher education in the State if he had ever been to Elon College. "I have never stopped there, but I pass there frequently," he replied. The first man then said: "Well, they have given us the biggest surprise at all in North Carolina. When they burned up, I felt they would never rebuild. It is marvelous what that little denomination behind Elon is doing there."

Again my feelings rose high, and despite the downpour of rain outside, all seemed bright and cheery within. This gentleman did not know the sacrifice our people have made to rebuild Elon, nor the sacrifice that is yet to be made to finish what we have so well begun. He did not know the heartache, the anxious prayers, the endless anxiety that lies behind it all; but his words of appreciation and their evident sincerity gave hope and courage to go forward.

Dr. Atkinson's great editorial a week or two ago did not state the case too strongly. We cannot support Elon and fail to grow. We can patronize other schools, just as good, no doubt, and our denomination will not prosper. The individual member of our Church who fails to do his duty is the person responsible for the future, just as he who does his duty is to be credited with the progress such loyalty insures. These summer days are telling mightily in this matter.

I am glad I met the conductor and overheard two strangers talk. W. A. HARPER.

OUR MOUNTAIN WORK.

DEAR DR. ATKINSON:

In writing you, it gives me great pleasure to state a few interesting facts about our Rocky Ford people. We began our revival on the first Sunday afternoon in June. At this first gathering the house was entirely too small for our congregation. I suggested that we secure some one else to do the preaching. But our dear people would not hear to it. Finding I was to do all the preaching, I immediately saw the need of more room. Mr. Strickland and myself began to search for a tent, but were unable to find anything but a cover, which proved to be of much help. I might say that, through the kindness of the father of the pastor, we had this tent donated to the work for the summer, after which it was to be returned to him, and we are to receive fifty dollars on our Rocky Ford building in place of the tent cover.

The meeting continued twenty-two days, having services every night and three on Sundays. The pastor was assisted in the work by Mr. C. Strickland, Bro. McCrary, Bro. Walter Edwards, Bro. Alford Pain, Bro. Willie Pain and his helpers. I might say here, while the Pain brothers are members of the Progressive Brethren, they showed no selfishness in their efforts to assist us. They worked for God like men filled with the Holy Spirit. We are thankful to have had the opportunity of having such dear God-loving and serving people in our midst. May the good Lord bless them in their efforts to lead men and women to Christ. Sister Morey gave two talks for me while I was away on other business. The people were carried away with her splendid talks. I may say here that she is doing a wonderful work here, and her faith is unmovable.

Bro. M. C. Sorrell gave us one very interesting talk and preached a powerful sermon on "Making Use of Every Opportunity." Bro. Willie Pain pictured the agony of Pilate and the willingness of Christ to give His life a ransom for us, and how our people today were taking the things of the world instead of Christ. His appeal to the lost was one that nothing but the hardest of hearts could resist. The people expressed their appreciation of these people by their large attendance and talking much about the messages that had been delivered to them. While our people seem to enjoy the preaching, yet they surely enjoyed the music. The music was extra for our section. The above-mentioned are all leaders in music in their respective fields of labor. Bro. Noah Combs and Bro. King had charge of the campaign, and they did splendid work.

We had a good meeting, the congregations were above an average from the beginning, varying from 100 to 500. The spirit of God was with us, and we received a great blessing. During the meetings, more than eighty took a stand for Christ, and while we are not certain about the number that will unite with the Church, we believe as many as fifty of this number will unite with the Church immediately. We had a called meeting the third Sunday morning. The Church voted unanimously that we put on a $500 campaign to help build a Church. This was to be for the mountain people; also in this motion it was included that we work strictly in accordance with the Home Mission Board, Dr. Atkinson and Dr. Thomas being our representatives and the ones that we were to work under in this effort to build a Church. Miss Morey was appointed secretary and treasurer of this campaign. It was also asked that the pastor assist Miss Morey. I may say that we are expecting to go over the top by fifty or seventy-five dollars, as we have already about four hundred dollars pledged.

We are also going to ask our good people out of the mountain to help us raise twenty-five hundred dollars for this work by buying one or more shares. If we can get twenty-five hundred people to give just one dollar, no one will miss it and we will have a place of worship for our dear and faithful people at Rocky Ford. One of our Catawba Springs, Wake County, members bought fifty shares in this Church. People already have given from one to fifty dollars in this effort to build the Church.

We want to insist on as many as will to send us one dollar to help us in this campaign. I am sure, could every one see how faithful and loyal the people are, and where we have to worship, it would be only a pleasure to give one dollar. All contributions should be sent to Miss Margaret Morey, Fancy Gap, Va. She will keep in touch with Dr. Atkinson and Dr. Thomas and make a report from time to time and keep strictly in accordance with their desire in this campaign.

The History of This Community.

About three years ago, Miss Clemer and Miss Gladys Lankford began teaching school and organized the first Sunday School that was ever held in this community as far as we know. One year later, the writer had the privilege of preaching in the home of Bro. Rigney, where services have continued ever since. In this home, people from the age of eight to seventy-three took a very definite stand for Christ, and from the very beginning the Church has shown great possibilities. Sunday School and prayer meeting are kept up all the year, regardless of the bad weather and the conditions under which the people have had to labor. I have been informed that just a few years before our work began here, and even up until the time of the organization of the first Sunday School, the morals of the community were very low. Now it is one of the best religious communities in Carroll County. It now has the best attendance of any rural Church in the county. They are living that life in which others can see Christ, and Christ only living in them. In sunshine or rain, heat or cold, Rocky Ford goes on. Others may flourish for a while and then die, but Rocky Ford will go on and on forever.

It is a real joy to work with such God-loving and God-fearing people. A place where you get one hundred per cent co-operation. No one can help loving these dear people—a people that have set the hillsides on fire with the blood of Christ; a people that hold the name of Christ above all other names, and a place that the old-time religion is good enough for them; a place where the people take a joy in voicing the alleluiah praises of God; a place where religion is real, and a place where the people are on fire for God. I do not feel like enough can be said about these people for their loyalty, progress and development.

The writer had a good time in this series of meetings. One person said, "We could not afford to call the place Rocky Ford any longer; but 'Happy Land.'" He fully expressed the spirit of the place and the people in these few words,

We are deeply in need of a Church building, and need it badly. May God lay this need upon the hearts of our good people. Will you help us start this building by the 1st of August?

In the blessed hope.

WAS THE BIRTHPLACE OF CHRISTIANITY UNFORTUNATE?

BY BISHOP WARREN A. CANDLER.

In a recent number of the Homiletic Review, a clergyman publishes an article which displays both a remarkable ignorance of history and an amazing misapprehension of Christianity.

He assumes that the Christian Church is justly open to the charge of theological narrowness, and then seeks to extenuate the offense by attributing it to the blank and barren soil in which the Christian religion had its origin. He seems to think if Greece, instead of Galilee, had been the birthplace of Christianity, the Church might have escaped the narrowness with which he imagines it is blemished, and inherited the love of art and beauty which characterized the Greeks. He conceives that this defect, or deformity, of the Church reflects Galilee's barrenness of beauty.

By "Galilee," he probably means the Jewish people of all the Holy Land; for he must know that in the strictest sense Galilee was not the birthplace of Christianity. Christ was born in Bethlehem and crucified in Jerusalem, both places being in Judea. At Jerusalem was achieved the first great triumph of the Christian religion on the Day of Pentecost; and for many years the most influential of all the Christian Churches was that of Jerusalem. No Church in Galilee was conspicuous in those days, and no Galilean Church ever attained to the prominence and influence of any of the Grecian Churches.

The writer of this article seems to be striving to find something to say worthy of the columns of the periodical for which he is writing, rather than to be in possession of any important truth which constrained him to utter it. He goes on to say:

"The critic charges the Church today with being circumscribed and narrow. Does he pause to realize that the Christian Church had its origin aomng a people circumscribed and narrow as perhaps no other nation ever was—a people with a gipsy heritage of laborious wanderings, with a peon's heritage of unrequited and servile toil, with a vassal's heritage of conquest and suppression? Where were the joyous interludes in the history of Israel—a history composed of Nomadic excursions, of captivity, of a generation in the wilderness, of hard and doubtful fighting, of civil war, of further captivity and transportation, of return to a devastated home, of revolt, of subjugation and tyranny? How could the heirs of such travail be the purveyors to the world of a gospel of brightness and love? If the Church has been joyless and narrow, there was excuse enough in its fiber and sinew."

He thus foolishly admits an unfounded charge of which the Church is accused, and brings a false accusation against the Jewish nation, while pretending to summarize its history and set forth its characteristics.

It is true that the Jews did not cultivate the arts of painting and sculpture. Nor did they excel in architecture, although many noble structures adorned Jerusalem in both the days of Solomon and the time of Jesus. But Jewish literature, all of which was religious, was more joyous than that of any contemporary nation. Where is anything in Grecian literature in which there is so much joy and beauty as in the Hebrew Psalms?

The Jewish religion was more pure and joyous than the religions of any neighboring nations. This contrast is quite marked between the gloomy and bloody Baalism, which Jezebel brought into Israel in the days of Ahab, and the noble faith which sings in the fervent compositions of David and soars in the lofty periods of Isaiah. The contrast is scarcely less striking when Hebraism is compared with pagan Hellenism.

The Grecian gods were conceived with a certain sensuous beauty and gladness, but there was about them nothing akin "to the beauty of holiness." They were represented as practicing the foulest crimes and indulging the most repulsive vices. Some of the Grecian sculpture, which has survived until our day, represents them in forms suggesting the merely physical and embodying their sensuous indulgences. Would such things have given to the Christian religion an added charm, or would they have imparted repulsive characteristics? Which?

The Christian art of Michael Angelo, Raphael, Rubens, Murillo, and a host of other masters, is as far above the art of ancient Greece as the blue sky is above a polluted cesspool. And Christian architecture is not less superior to the noblest buildings of Athens. What structures had the Greeks more impressive than St. Peter's in Rome, or St. Paul's in London, or the inspiring cathedral of Cologne?

The following is a most astonishing passage found in this article of amazing nonsense:

"We worship, to a large extent, in most unlovely buildings. The world is beautiful, and the world is many-colored and very much alive. But the somberness of our Churches has annulled the beauty, the artificial atmosphere of devotion has stilled the activity, and the dead level of mediocrity has caused the coloring to pale; and we have essayed a dull and uninspired task. In the name of religion! In the name of God! We are afraid that His voice cannot be heard above the babel, or the perfume of His presence rival the rose!

"If our services are dreary, if our places of worship are ugly and uncomfortable, it is not fitting that this generation should shoulder all the blame. Again we are heirs of all that went before, even to the dark rituals of the historical synagogue."

Doubtless, among the millions of houses of worship in Christendom there are many "unlovely buildings"; but not all the shrines of ancient Greece were beautiful. Some Grecian places of worship were scarcely less than hideous. Not one place of worship in all ancient Greece approached the beauty and majesty of the best specimens of Christian architecture. Where in the entire extent of Hellas was found anything comparable to the best examples of "the pointed-Gothic" Churches which are found all over the Christian world? Why did this foolish contributor to the Homiletic Review ignore or depreciate all the forms of beauty which have sprung from Christianity? Is he ignorant of them, or does he have a bias against the Christian religion in favor of Grecian paganism? Does he value art above religion?

It should not be forgotten that purity of life is the chief product of Christianity, and that beauty of art is one of its by-products.

It is well for mankind that this is true. If holiness had not been the chief end of the Jewish religion, as well as the prime object of Christianity, mankind would be now in a hopeless condition. The human race cannot be saved by art. In the times and places in which art has been most flourishing, foulest immorality has been frequently most prevalent. In a fastidious aestheticism, men have never found any purifying power. It did not save the artistic Athenians. Their Commonwealth perished when their art was most glorious. It was utterly ineffectual to save either the Grecian people or itself. It has passed away as a beautiful dream vanishes.

St. Paul, the great apostle to the Gentiles, did not appraise very highly Grecianism as a force by which Christianity might have been improved. He says the gospel of a crucified Christ was "unto the Greeks foolishness" (1 Cor. 1:23). Perhaps that which the anti-Christian Greeks called "foolishness," some modern minds call "narrowness."

The mistake which lies at the center of the misleading article in the Homiletic Review is that Christianity is a product of naturalism colored by climate and affected by soil. This is a capital blunder. Christianity is a revelation from God, and works its redeeming results with equal power in all lands and among all peoples, being to them, who believe, "both Jews and Greeks, the power of God and the wisdom of God." It is the fulfillment of the Messianic hope of Israel, which was not a conception suggested by the soil of Galilee or the climate of any land. From this "Christ idea," Christianity derives its name, and the religion of the Christ could not have originated with any other people than the Jews of Palestine.

Upon this point, Rev. Stanley Leathes, D. D., speaks most aptly and forcibly:

"The birth of Christianity would have been impossible in any other land than Palestine. Not only can we not imagine it springing into existence among the mountains of Greece or the plains of Rome; but it would have been a moral impossibility for it to have arisen there. Why? Because the very soil had not been prepared. There was nothing there for it to support itself upon, to lay hold of, or to spring from. Palestine was the natural birthplace of this religion, and it could have originated nowhere else. Why not? Because nowhere else was there the definite and fixed conception of a Christ. We too often regard the name of Christ as a personal appellation; it is not so; it is strictly and solely an official title. When we say that Christ was born in the reign of Augustus, we mean that a person was then born who was the Christ. But the personal name of Him who was so born was Jesus, and not Christ. That this Jesus was the Christ, that He had the right to fulfill the office which that name implied, was the earliest assertion of the religion which was afterwards named for Him, but that assertion would have been unmeaning where the name was not known and not understood. And yet so completely has this assertion been found and felt to be true, or at all events characteristic, that after an experience of eighteen centuries we still call the religion of Jesus Christianity—a name derived from the office He fulfilled, and do not call it by any name derived from His personal appellation. But the very name Christ alone and of itself is a witness to a mass of thought and fact, of idea and anticipation, without which it could have taken no hold and would have made no way. There was in the mind of the Jewish nation the conception of a Christ, which was the very basis and foundation that the religion so called was to rest upon, and without which it not only would not have stood for a day, but also could not even have come into existence."

If the writer of the ill-considered article in the Homiletic Review will think on these things he will come to see perhaps that Christianity could not have been improved by a birthplace in Greece. It could not have been born there at all. Its birthplace determined its nature, and its nature fixed its birthplace. Jesus was bound to be born in Bethlehem, and not in Athens. One might as well to propose to change the name of our blessed Redeemer to Jove or Apollo as to change the birthplace of Christianity to Greece and modify its essential character into Hellanism.

At last what the apostles of naturalism intend by all their proposed amendments to the Christian religion is to denature it. But this can never be done. They may corrupt Christianity or reject it altogether, but its character is too fixed for them, or any one else, to change it. An angel is not qualified to amend it. So Paul wrote to the Galatians: "Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that we have preached unto you, let him be accursed." (Gal. 1:8.)

Christianity is the final religion. Neither its facts nor its principles can be changed in this or any future age. It is the last and best hope of the world. "Christ no after age shall e'er outgrow."

Bethlehem and Calvary must ever remain the dearest spots on earth to the children of men. In the beginning of the year 1924, Christianity is the same it was in the first century when Paul preached at Athens and Corinth and Philippi. It is what it ever must remain—"the power of God unto salvation." Neither literature nor art can substitute or supersede it.—Christian Advocate.

WILL YOUR CHURCH BE REPRESENTED?

Many Churches have already decided and their representatives are getting ready for an early Monday morning start. We hope your Church is in that list. Only a few days are left, but that is time enough to arouse an interest and get some one to go from your Church.

For the sake of your Church, the work of your Sunday School, and the obligation you owe your young people, I hope you will not let this opportunity pass without having some one there to get the information, the inspiration, and the enlarged vision and take it back to your Church and people. And may I say to you who read these lines, why not represent your Church yourself? A glad welcome and hearty greeting awaits you at the Chautauqua, Elon College, N. C., July 28th at 8 P. M. W. T. WALTERS, President.

A CHRISTIAN EDUCATION PILGRIMAGE.

BY HERMON ELDREDGE.

III. ENGLAND AND SCOTLAND.

Liverpool and land were welcome sights after a week on the water, and after the customs officers asked us if we had any wine, cigarettes or liquor concealed about our baggage and acted as if they did not believe our answers, but searched diligently for hidden contraband and then allowed us to land and go to our hotel.

And now again that old smell of a beer-soaked atmosphere, although the ale and porter they drink here is said to be much heavier than mere beer. At least it smelt heavy enough, and I thanked God again for America's stand.

One of the strange feelings that comes to one here is that of turning back the wheels of time about fifteen years and seeing where we were in America about that time. Today in Liverpoor and Glasgow is a reproduction of those liquor days before the temperance wave reached its height in the United States. Saloons are occupying the prominent corners, and even Sunday is not free from its inroads. There is a fight here (an uncertain one) by the temperance people for local option, with little success, and the whole situation hardly strong enough to frighten the politicians—just about our pace a dozen or fifteen years ago, and against it the little fighting band of women and men who are called fanatics," and some temperance societies, in cluding the old Good Templars. And with it all I would venture the prophecy, judging by our experience, that England will adopt prohibition within ten years, as much as she seems to belittle it now.

I picked up a Liverpool paper the other day, in which it gave the experience of Lord Birkenhead in an American tour. His lordship states that, although he visited America with an open mind, that he could scarcely find a person in America any where who was in favor of prohibition. One can easily imagine what kind of company Lord Birkenhead traveled with in the States, and where his company led him, and what they permitted him to see. One correspondent who seems to know his lordship right well suggested that he went to America not only with an open mind, but with an open mouth as well.

Since my pilgrimage will have mostly a view of religious and social matters, I will have to skip what might be pages of description of our entrance into Liverpoor via the Irish Sea and the North Channel, and also much that one might write of the strange city of Liverpoor, with its teeming industrial and shipping life, reaching the ends of the earth.

However, I need to say at least that Sunday in Liverpoor, with open saloons, was not a pleasant introduction to England.

Last Monday, we journeyed out to the middle west coast of England to Old Furness Abbey, one of the largest and best-preserved ruins of an old monastery. The scenery along the way was a joy and a delight. Old England's homes and hedges and fields and stone walls are beautiful and satisfying beyond description. Surrounded on all sides by the ocean, and watered with rain and mist and dew continually, the freshness of vegetation, the wondrous deep and rich shades of green in the grass and shrubs and hedges and trees form a background of surpassing richness. And then where there is added quaint old stone houses and barns and outhouses (there are practically no frame houses), and flocks of sheep and herds of cows and villagers and countrymen in their different costumes, and all seemingly framed by the stone walls and green hedges, it is a picture, or a series of moving pictures—a sort of a glorified New England scene—adding to New England's beauty and quaintness and a solidity of the stone houses, older hedges and general atmosphere of age.

Furness Abbey was founded in 1127 A. D.—almost eight hundred years ago—and covered seventy acres of ground, surrounded by a stone wall and filled with buildings, the result of centuries of labor and which our millions would scarcely attempt to reproduce today. The monks who came here, poor and almost starving, finally became so rich in four centuries that they were feared by the king, who confiscated their property in 1539. The ruins of the central building is in a good state of preservation, except the roof which is gone. This building was 276 feet long and 136 feet wide, and was only one of a score of magnificent buildings on this site. Men only lived here, and no women were allowed within the sacred precincts. The men were divided into two groups, consisting of the "choir monks" and the "lay monks," and these two groups were kept apart in their eating and sleeping and worship and in their living quarters. The choir monks were the masters, and conducted all the services and prayers, and the lay monks were the servants and did all the work. A lay monk was not allowed to learn to read or to acquire any sort of an education.

What a shameful thing this all was—and then to be called Christianity! There were no services and no service rendered to the community round about them, but only service for and of themselves (although they were originally very simple). and the end of it was all for two things: prayers for the dead and personal salvation—not a word or a service or a thought for any one else.

I was impressed—greatly impressed—in wandering over the ruins of old Furness Abbey, and I was oppressed and stifled, as well as impressed, as the old guide reviewed to us the life of these monks who lived here a living death in the name of Christianity.

It was like a breath of heaven's pure air to get from the material ruins and spiritual death of Furness Abbey over to Dove Cottage, on the English Lakes, and get in touch with the great spirit of Wordsworth. If we had seen beauty in England before, we now saw it doubly beautiful. I have seen the beauties of Florida and the South, and of New Hampshire and the East, and the mountains and rivers and lakes between, but I have never seen anything surpassingly beautiful as this fifty-mile drive and twenty-mile boat ride through the English Lake region. And here again, if I were describing scenery, I would fill the pages, and must only say that we sailed up from beautiful Windmere to old England Hotel, with its stone towers covered with a mass of ivy on every inch outside of doors and windows, and from here by auto through a narrow, winding road bordered with stone walls on either side, leaving hardly more than fifteen to twenty feet between the walls, and no by-path or sidewalks, save the open road for pedestrians. A hedge generally crowns these walls, or at least vegetation grew rankly on them and around them, and back of them were vistas and glimpses and then fuller sights of the most beautiful gardens of flowers with magnificent rhododendrons in full bloom every where. Every open field clear to the grass-green mountain-top was walled and used for pasture land on which thousands of sheep and cattle and occasional goats and geese added color and quality to the picture.

In the midst of this most beautiful countryside of the world, as it is called, is the little town of Grassmere, where is located Dove Cottage, where Wordsworth 's best and most lasting work was done. As one goes through the narrow, winding street path, and enters Dove Cottage and its wonderful little garden plot, one does not so much wonder that a poet lived here, for it is hard to see how one could think in any but poetic terms with such an environment.

Here amid the hills and lakes and garden hedges, Wordsworth lived close to God and wrote some of our most beautiful poems and hymns. We went over to his old Church and pew and bowed at the grave of a great soul, made greater by his devoted sister, who understood when others jeered and stood for him where others blamed him.

Dove Cottage seems also a doll-house, so tiny it is. Its rooms are so small and its ceilings so low that I stooped as I entered and as I went out the back door to the garden in the rear. But we must hasten if we get to Glasgow in this writing.

I can only mention old Carlisle, the most northerly great city in England, where we stopped for the night and gazed on the ruins of its old Roman wall, dating back over a thousand and five hundred years, and its old cathedral, which is one of the sights of England. But a word must be said in passing that this was the home of Woodrow Wilson's grandfather, and he was for some time pastor of the Congregational Church of Carlisle. President Wilson, when in Europe, made what he termed a "heart pilgrimage" to this old city.

But we are on our way to bonnie Scotland and to the "bank of the Ayer" and the birthplace of "Bobbie Burns," as Scotchmen affectionately call him. For, while the Scotch are proud of John Knox and glory in giving Walter Scott to the world, yet it is neither of these, but the plowman of Ayeshire, who has their hearts and whose songs they sing.

But the Ayer of today is no longer a country town, and Tam-o-Shanter's Inn and "Twa Brigs" are in the heart of a bustling Scotch city of probably 30,000 people. But, praise be! the little cottage where "wee Bobbie" lived and the old "Kirk Alloway" where Tam-o-Shanter surprised the witches at dance, and the "banks and braes o' Bonnie Doon" are still out in God's open country and worth a long journey to see.

Here again I stoop as I enter the lowly door of the cottage where this farmer boy first saw the light of day. Only four rooms in this whitewashed stone house. The "barn," the "byer," the "ben" and the "butt," the barn for feed and general use, the byer with stalls for the cows, the ben or the living-room and the butt, which was kitchen, pantry and the bedroom combined. All these four rooms are side by side under one roof. If Wordsworth's surroundings tended to poetry, the surroundings of Burns' early life must have been of prosaic stuff indeed. Heavy one-story, thick-stone walls, whitewashed without and within, thatched roof of a full foot deep of straw, stone floors, in ben and butt, as well as in barn and byer, the only difference being that the cattle and cobble-stone floors, while the family had flagstone, but both sufficiently hard and uninviting.

But if there were hard lines at the old Burns cottage, there was beauty and poetry all around. Burns drew his poetry from real life, and it is a joy to go about and look on the common things which he glorified forever with the magic of his verse. "Bonnie Doon" is bonnie indeed, and its low banks and green, overhanging trees, and the lovers' lane by a path and the "auld brig" is all could desire to see. A crippled soldier played us "Bonnie Doon" at the old bridge, and another read us "Tam-o-Shanter's Ride" in the old Kirk Alloway Church-yard.

But too much crowds into my fountain pen, and I can hear the editor yell "Enough!" and I must save "On to Glasgow" for another day.

There are a hundred little things which I might write, but it is enough to say that I feel repaid already for the long journey here, and it has only just begun.

WAKEFIELD NEWS.

DEAR DR. ATKINSON:

Please give me space in THE SUN to tell about the work and good people of the Wakefield pastorate. We have at last arrived on the field, and have in some measure got settled. We shipped our furniture June 7th, and while it was coming we spent a few days with our relatives and friends. Tuesday afternoon, June 17th, we came as far as Elon and spent the night with our friend, Bro. Apple, and Wednesday morning, June 18th, we started for Wakefield, reaching here about 5 o'clock in the afternoon, where we found warm and welcome hearts to receive us. We had a very pleasant trip coming, with only one exception, and that being a storm of wind, rain and hail; but our old Ford served us faithfully. We did not have to stop for it, although it was bad traveling. We closed ourselves in and continued to drive.

This has been our dream for six long years, when we could be located in the midst of our work and when we could be fully engaged in the Master's business. We look back over our college days, and thank our loving Lord for good and faithful friends, and for His many favors which added so much joy and sunshine to us during our trying days while preparing ourselves for so great a work. Many days did we become discouraged, but going into the class-room of our dear beloved friend, Dr. John U. Newman, his messages of love and cheer, and words of encouragement would cause us, as the Apostle Paul said, "to take courage."

I shall always look back to those days with great joy and pride in my heart, thanking my dear Lord for the privilege of having been permitted to sit at the feet of such a man of God and listen as he poured his soul into the messages that he would bring to us from the holy work, which to him was his joy and delight. May the dear Master add many days to his life of service, so that he may inspire many young lives for a larger and more effective service in our dear Church.

Friday, June 20th, our furniture reached here, and we set ourselves to work making ready for housekeeping, and, as all know, those were days when the thermometer registered very high; but in spite of the heat Friday and Saturday, we worked hard, so as to be able to stay at home through Sunday. This we were able to do, with the assistance of many kind friends. As the day was coming to a close, after we had got our furniture set up, we looked, and who could be coming but our brother and sister, L. B. Faison, with a number of other friends, bringing to us gifts great and small, such as hams, sugar, lard, flour, and the like, and as the days passed they continued to come, not only the good people of Wakefield, but Burton's Grove and Barrett's, and within one week's time they had presented us with one hundred pounds of flour, eight hams, seventy pounds of sugar, ten pounds of lard, and canned fruit of all kinds. They have continued to furnish our table every day with vegetables of all kinds. For all of these things, we are grateful to our Lord and Master, and to the good people of our Wakefield charge. We ask the brotherhood to remember us to Him who is able to keep us from falling, and that we may be kept close to Him.

OUR PLEDGES
Men and Millions
Sacred, Solemn and Binding.

These obligations were made through the Church to the Kingdom of God and to all that pertains to building up that Kingdom in the world, so far as our Christian Church is concerned. As Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., has so pertinently pointed out: "A Christian can no more drop his pledges than he can drop his prayers or his Church membership. Misfortune may make it impossible to meet financial obligations--'When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both' (Luke 7:42)--but not till 'they had nothing to pay.' Obligations to God are as binding as obligations to men, and God will help those who try to keep their pledges."

Many are making great sacrifices to meet these obligations and pay these pledges. Is your Church on this list? If not, let's do our best to get it there. If there, let's get it in first place.

MONDAY.

THE FRIENDSHIP OF JESUS.

"For every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh, it shall be opened."—Matt. 7:8.

H. C. Trumdell tells an experience of his when a widowed woman comes to him in grief about her prodigal boy, who was once such a good boy, but now he had left her and he was so wicked.

Dr. Trumdell asked: "On whom did you trust when your boy was good and doing his best?" She replied: "Why, I always trusted God."

"Has God changed?" he asked.

"Of Course not, Dr. Trumdell."

"Then, why has your faith changed?" he asked.

"Because my boy failed."

"Then, you are looking at your boy," he said, "and trusting him instead of God. Have faith in God. Look to Him, not the boy, while you pray."

Our failures are often our faults. We look to and trust in material things. These fail, and then we think God has failed. Our prayers are weak or strong only as we trust God, and though things go wrong, He will right them.

Prayer.—Our Father, give us strength to trust Thee all the way, and, when the day is dark, to look to Thee all the more. And when we pray, may we not think of ourselves alone, but others, friends that have been forgotten, companions without Christ, those who are sick, unfortunate, and any we may keep in Thy name. For Christ sake. Amen.

TUESDAY.

CIVIL TO EVERY ONE.

"As we have, therefore, opportunity, let us do good to all men."—Gal. 6:10.

Mr. City Man, when you first landed in a large city, far from the little town you called your home, you longed for some one to talk to.

It was hard for you to understand how the man next-door could come out on his porch and smoke, and alohtugh only a few feet away from you, he did not speak to you.

Since then it is many years and you find that you pay very little attention to the people living around you, who are, perhaps, persons from smaller places and just as anxious as you were, once on a time, to have some one to talk to.

Of course, you may have had your "eye teeth cut" by becoming friendly with some man who was not what he should have been, but such cases are the exception among men who are located in your neighborhood.

You do not run much chance when you are friendly with a man who goes to work regularly every morning and returns at about the same time every day. The regular worker is apt to be a pretty good sort of fellow.

If your reputation in your neighborhood is secure because of the reputation that you bear, you do not have to worry about being civil to a man who may not be just right, and you might do him good.

But if your own reputation is not known or is shaky, don't take a chance. (Copyright, 1924, International Feature Service, Inc.)

Prayer.—Dear Lord, give us a clear understanding of our every-day duty to all others, and help us to bear the Christian's spirit towards every one. For Christ sake. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

HAPPINESS THROUGH PURITY.

"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."—Math. 5:8.

Purity is the goal of the soul, and that quality of heart that imparts spiritual vision so that we may see God. It is a heart completely emptied of sin and selfishness, and just as completely filled with all the Christian graces. It is the life which Paul describes as being "hid with Christ in God." It is not characterized by noise and boasting, but by the deepest humility, the greatest love for the brethren, tenderness in forgiviing, great piety for the lost, and clearness in spiritual perception. It rejoices in the truth, believes that Jesus is the truth, and that to see Jesus is to see the Father.

The pure in heart live in the world, but they are not of the world. Their thoughts are pure. They think about "whatsoever things are true, honest, just, pure, lovely and of good report." They feed on "these things" until their opposites disappear from their thinking, and from the abundance "these things" in the heart they talk of them, rejoice in them, and live them. They are "these things." They are pure in thought, in speech, and in action. They are enabled to see God and are indescribably happy.

Prayer.—Our Father, help us to pray the psalmist's prayer: "Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me." Wash us thoroughly in the blood of the Lamb. Purify us and make us clean. Fill us with the Holy Spirit, that our thoughts may be pure. We want to see Jesus, and without purity we know that we cannot see the Lord. In His dear name, we ask it. Amen.—T. E. White.

THURSDAY.

LIFE'S BEST HOURS.

"Then answered Peter, and said unto Jesus, Lord, it is good for us to be here."—Matt. 17:4.

Human life is not a constant, but a variable, quantity. Chemical processes are constant. But human life varies. Under the same conditions, sometimes different results ensue. That is because life is a vital thing, and not merely chemical or mechanical. Matter is subject to the laws of matter. Atoms obey the laws of their being. There is in life a power to defy law. The human will can ignore, disobey, or defy the will of God. When we say life is variable, we mean we are not always at our best.

Speaking broadly, our best hours are when we are most conscious that God is dealing with us. God was dealing with Augustine in the garden when he heard the angelic voice saying, "Take and read." God was dealing with Luther when he saw the text, "The just shall live by faith."

How many influences, cleansing and saving, can be traced back to moments like these? More particularly, our best hours are those in which the faculty of belief is most active. It is the divine within us which calls to the divine about us. It is our yearning after God which gives us authentic tidings of God. Among our life's best hours are those in which we rise to deliberate self-surrender.—Rev. Chas. C. Albertson.

FRIDAY.

OUR BUSINESS.

"My meat is to do the will of Him that sent me, and to finish His work."—John 4:35-37.

Faith manifested in good works for the relief of the suffering, to spread the gospel, to make others more nearly what they should be, to save the world—that is our business; every Christian is under that commission. Like the apostles, we are "sent" to make the world a better place to live in.

Prayer.—Our Father, we pray that the members of our household may each learn to know the joy of service, and that we may be the means of winning precious souls to the kingdom. Amen.

SATURDAY.

JESUS SATISFIES.

"Then took he him up in his arms, and blessed God."—Luke 2:25-32.

There is something intensely satisfying in having a child in our arms. Many a woman's arms ache for this lovely burden. Next to the hunger for God, child-hunger is great in the human heart.

This beautiful picture of the Bible shows the old man ready to pass out of this world, waiting to receive the child that comes in; watching the great silent gates that open one way for birth, the other for death. Now his eyes have seen, and as the mother comes into the temple, he takes the little one into his aged arms, and lifting up the infant Jesus, sees the hope of the future.

He is satisfied, happy with the deep emotions of a Jewish patriarch. His last wish granted, Simeon is now ready to sleep and depart, and sings that immortal swan-song, "Lord, now lettest Thou Thy servant depart in peace." Satisfied because of Jesus. Happy indeed is old age when it finds its last satisfactions on earth in association with Jesus, with the spiritual beauty of child life.—Rev. A. E. Gregory.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

SUNDAY.

WHERE OUR STRENGTH LIES.

"In quietness and confidence shall be your strength."—Isa. 3:15-18.

So many people are distrustful of themselves, of the goodness of God. They are restless, dissatisfied, and not able to impart confidence in others.

How different the one who has the strength! He is marked by a calm, quiet spirit and confidence, and he is unassailable.

We need this strength. Let us seek for and possess God's strength, and in the midst of life's contentions, strifes, and changing scenes, stand firm and quietly confident, fully in the realm of the powerful; and then we will be able to make a more powerful impact upon society for the conviction that God is using us for something for Him. "Blessed are all they that wait for Him."

Prayer.—Our Father, give us faith and strength to stand firm, trusting in Thee for peace and harmony among ourselves, among the people, and in the Church of God. In Jesus' name we ask it. Amen.

WELL-KNOWN PASTORS AT ELON.

The faculty for the Elon Chautauqua and School of Methods this summer, July 28th to August 3rd, will include a number of the Virginia and North Carolina pastors as teachers for the classes of the morning hours. Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, pastor of the Suffolk Church, and Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, pastor of the Durham Church, have both consented to teach classes in Bible study the first hour of the morning. Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., pastor-emeritus of the Suffolk Church, will teach a class on Christian music, showing the part music has played and may play in the work of the Christian Church. Based upon his wide experience and observation, this course by Dr. Staley promises much. Dr. Atkinson will have a class in teaching missions at the mission hour on the program. Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, of Holland, will have the young people's work.

DEAR SUNSHINE BABIES:

Here we go on to a brand-new contest. I want you to read this queer story, and see how funny it is. Do you find anything interesting about it? Sure! Well, it's just this way: You are to use the first sentence in every paragraph, then use the suggestions that follow to make your story. I hear you say, "Make a story?" Do you know, I have never heard of so many good, really good names as you sent in for the last contest, and I am sure the stories you will write for me will be even better.

Do we all understand? The three best stories will be published in THE SUN, and on your own page, too! Now, listen, dears; don't try to write too long a story, but make it as interesting as you can. And—oh, yes! it doesn't matter how old or how young you are—let's all try this little story contest. All right, are we all ready? We have until the first of August to send your story. I hope I'll be all covered up in 'em. May have to be dug out!

Good-by, Sunbeams; don't dare get drowned while you are in swimming this week.

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT.

LITTLE STORY CONTEST.

Take your time, and the first sentence in the paragraph, and write a story for your own page. Here is the block for the story:

A little Girl wanted—to go home; to play in the sand; to play with stars.

She went out to find them, and came to a—park; to a pond; to a city.

She could not find any stars, so she—went home; walked on; sat and cried.

She came to a—big tree; brook in the woods.

She found no stars there, so she—went home; she went on; she wept.

Soon she met—some friends; some fairies; some men.

They told her to—dry her clothes; do some work; dance with them.

She still did not find—her way home; the fairies; one star.

Then the fairies told her—to go home; to come again; just what to do.

Soon she found—four friends; a star; a horse.

Then she came to a river—edge of the sea; a big city.

"No feet" was—a flower; a fish.

He carried her to—the town; the stairs without steps.

He carried her to—climb; take the stars home.

All of a sudden—she saw; the stars; she let go.

Bang! She found herself—in the water; in her own bed; slipping.

She had been—far away; dreaming.

ORIGINAL WORK.

One bright Sunday morning, a little boy went to Sunday School. His name was Ben. There were boys and girls in the class lots larger than he was. "What is our lesson about today?" asked Miss Alice, the teacher. "It is about Jesus," answered little Ben. The boys on the back seat laughed heartily. "There's no use laughing; we all make mistakes," said Miss Alice. "It's better to make a mistake than not try at all. No; it's about Elijah, isn't it, my boy."

Miss Alice proceeded to ask the questions. Ben answered most of them as best he knew. His good mother had taught him lots of the Bible.

Every Sunday for a long time Ben was the only one in the class that knew the lesson. The teacher had noticed, too, how polite he was to the other children.

The sweet little lad's parents were so poor they could not afford a birthday present for him. One day his mother said: "Tomorrow is your birthday, Ben." "Oh, is it, mother?" he cried.

The next morning the postmaster came in. He handed Ben a small package. His own name was on it. He opened it, and what do you suppose he found? It was a gold watch, with small words on it. The words were: "For the little boy that was not ashamed to answer the questions in Sunday School. Your teacher, Miss Alice."

This was a pleasant surprise for Ben. And he tried to learn the lesson still better.—Zula Buchanan.

ABOUT ONE OF OUR BABY ORPHANS.

Not long ago—just a month, in fact—a Sunday School class in the Burlington Church adopted one of our own orphan babies. To be frank, the little girl belongs now to a whole Sunday School class—the class is her "mother." And you want to know her name? It is Lillie Mae Hunter, and she is six years old.

Lillie Mae was the happiest little girl you can imagine when one of her kind "mothers" came riding up to the Orphanage home she loves and said, "Go home with me to Burlington and spend the week-end." Of course, Lillie Mae put down her mud-pies and her dolly and away she rode as fast as could be, 'cause her "mother" wanted to show her something that all her other "mothers" had ready for her—a great surprise it was, too—beautiful little dresses for playing outdoors and going to Sunday School and going on the train to visit an aunty whom she loves. Oh! just think how happy Lillie Mae was!

Well, she stayed a whole week-end, and she only visited one "mother" this time; maybe next time she will try out another one, but she is so happy to have a whole Sunday School class full of wonderful mothers to come to see and love.

When she grows up and goes to high school, won't they be proud of Lillie Mae? And won't Lillie Mae be the happiest orphan? Of course she will! Don't we wish our Sunday School class would adopt one of Lillie Mae's sister-orphans and make her as happy as Lillie Mae?

WALTER'S DISAPPOINTMENT.

"Here is the last white rose in my garden," said Laura to her brother, Walter; "and you shall have it if you will be a good boy."

"I don't want a white rose," said Walter; "and if I can't go with Jim Bacon and the other fellows on the pond, I'll not be a good boy; I'll make myself as disagreeable as I can."

"Why, Walter—what a threat!" said Laura, laughing; "but you are a good deal like the minister's dog Bunkum, who barks terribly, but never bites."

"See what I get for being a good boy," replied Walter. "The first time a chance for a little fun comes along, then it's 'O Walter! you and the other boys are too young to be trusted alone on the water.' "

Hardly had Walter given utterance to these words when there were cries from the roadside nearby, and men and women were seen running towards the pond. What could be the matter?

It soon was made known what the matter was. The little fellows in the boat had upset it, and five of them were floundering about in the water. Fortunately, no life was lost. All were saved, but not until all were wet through to the skin.

"Now, Walter," said Laura, "are you going to fret and make yourself disagreeable because you did not get a ducking with the other boys?"

"Sister," said Walter, with a smile, "I think I will accept that beautiful white rose you offered me just now."

MR. SANDMAN INTERFERES.

Now, listen, Mr. Sandman, don't come so early every night, for all our "Kiddies' Korner" children want to write a story for the "Korner"—they want to think, and think, and think; and then they want to write, and write, and rewrite the story, so it can win first prize and have it published on our own page.

Another thing, Mr. Sandman, will you please remember to let our little children's eyes alone until they say their evening prayers each night! Don't flip the sand in quite so early, Mr. Sandman—it makes 'em all so happy and feel so good next day, and sleep so good that night, if you will please keep the sand out till they have told Jesus "Thank you" for all the day's fun, and good things to eat, and pretty clothes they wear, and all the blessings they have. Don't forget it, Mr. Sandman; you're such a good fellow to help us remember. Thank you a lot. So long now.

GRANDPA AND MOUSE.

Grandpa Crane went into the city every morning. He had to go so far, and it was so late when he came home to dinner, he thought he would like to have something to eat while he was away.

So every day, when he was ready to go to the cars, Aunt Emmie gave him a little basket with a pretty round cover on it.

Inside she put cookies or gingerbread, or plum-cake, with ever so many plums in it. Grandpa liked the plum-cake best of all the little basket carried.

The office he sat in was down on a wharf, where the water comes, and the wind blows, just as if it were out at sea.

When he had been there a long while, he would get his basket and eat what Aunt Emmie had put in it. As he was old, his hand would shake and let bits of cake fall on the floor.

Now, a little gray Mouse lived in a hole in that very floor, way up in a corner. His bright eyes peeped out at Grandpa Crane when he was eating; and he looked as though he would like to get those good bits if he could muster courage to do it.

One day, Mousie was so hungry that he made bold to run at a crumb which had fallen a good way from Grandpa's feet. He picked it up as quick as he could, and scampered back with it to his safe little hole.

Finding that Grandpa did him no hurt, Mousie tried it another day. After a while, he came out every time he saw Grandpa open the little basket, and picked up all the crumbs that fell down.

One day Grandpa was very tired, and fell fast asleep after he had eaten his cake. Pretty soon he felt a pull at his soft white hair. He put up his hand, and down ran Mousie.

Not getting as much to eat that day as he wanted, Mousie had just walked up Grandpa's side to his shoulder, and then up on his head. Wasn't that a queer place for a mouse to try to find something to eat?

Subject: "The Temptation of Jesus."

Golden Text: "In that he himself hath suffered being tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted."—Heb. 2:18.

Lesson: Matt. 4:1-11.

Devotional Reading: Psa. 124.

Reference Material: Mark 1:12-13; Luke 4:1-13.

The story of the temptation of Jesus is a window through which we can look into His soul. It is an X-ray photograph which reveals His inner life.

It came immediately after His baptism. He had just received the Father's commendation, and in some measure at least the consciousness of His Messianic mission. And then came the temptation. It is always thus—the hour of exaltation is followed by the hour of temptation. He who determines to live a great life and render great service must be prepared to fight the "tempter."

The account of the temptation came, in all probability, from Jesus Himself. No one else was present at the time. It is quite likely that He told His disciples later in His ministry, and perhaps after He had openly declared His Messiahship, and by way of justifying His action which seemed to be contrary to what the long-expected Messiah should pursue. The temptation probably embodies in epitome what took place in Jesus' life throughout His ministry. It is not to be supposed that the devil tempted him only this once. That is not the devil's way. He departed "for a season," but we may be sure that he was on the job throughout Jesus' life.

We need not believe that the tempter appeared in person. The temptation was, rather, an inner and spiritual experience. Out there in the solitude of the wilderness, in the full light of God's plan for His life, the Master fought out the issues of life and decided once and for all the principles that should guide Him in His ministry to men. It was a real bitter struggle, and shows the Master in one of His most heroic poses.

The tempter appeared to Him after He had fasted for forty days and nights—a long time. The Master was hungry, and the tempter, true to form, attacked Him at the weakest point. He always does. He insinuated that unless the Master ate, he would starve, and inasmuch as He was the Son of God, there could be no harm in turning some of the stones that lay nearby into bread. "If Thou be the Son of God"—the brazenness of the thing! It was the temptation to use one's powers for selfish ends, and the Master would have none of it. He would feed starving people, but He would not abuse the power God had given Him. And He promptly told the tempter that it is not by bread alone that man lives, but by the great spiritual truths that come from God.

Beaten in the first engagement, the tempter attacks from another quarter. He took Him—not in person, but in imagination—to the holy city and setteth Him on the pinnacle of the temple. He then suggested that inasmuch as He was the Son of God, or if He were, it might be well enough to prove it. "Why not cast yourself down from this dizzy height? He has promised to give His angels charge over Thee?" said the tempter. It was the temptation to resort to the miraculous. If the Master had done such things, He could have had as large a following as He pleased. It is also significant that the scene was laid at the temple, the rallying-place of the scribes and Pharisees and priests, who repeatedly insisted upon "a sign," and who later put Jesus to death, because He did not meet with their ideas of how a Messiah should act. But here again the Master saw the subtle implications of the suggestion, and He answered the devil with Scripture, to the effect that one should not tempt the Lord his God. Even the Son of God had no right to expect immunity from the dangers and sufferings that were involved in the fulfillment of His mission.

As a last resort, the tempter played his "trump card." He showed the Master the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them, and told Him that He could have all of them if He would fall down and worship his Satanic majesty. The challenge was as daring as the statement was untrue. But it was in keeping with the tempter's way with men. In Jesus' case, it was the temptation to gain His desired end by a compromise of His ideals. The devil told him in short that if He (the Master) would adopt the ways of the world, He could win the world. But the Master would have none of it. Jesus felt sure that His cause would triumph. But no matter what might be the outcome, He was never going to go contrary to God's will and purpose. He was going to obey God rather than men.

And then the devil left Him for a season. He withdrew to consider some new strategy, and left Jesus Master of the field of battle. And angels came and ministered unto Him. He who overcomes temptation, always has new strength. The very powers of heaven minister unto them.

The temptation of Jesus has vital significance for us. If He, the Son of God, was not immune to temptation, surely we will not be. But in that He was tempted in all points like as we are tempted. Therefore, let us come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may find mercy and grace to help in time of trouble.

Some Truths from the Temptation Story.

1. He who would live a godly life must endure temptation.

2. The tempter usually attacks at the most vulnerable point.

3. The tempter has many "ifs."

4. To misquote Scripture is not half so dangerous as to misuse it.

5. One of the best safeguards against temptation is the knowledge and use of the Scripture.

6. Victory over temptation gives strength of character.

7. He who would overcome temptation must have divine help.

8. He who tries to overcome temptation has divine help.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

By Wm. T. Scott.

July 27, 1924.

"The Zeal of Thine House Hath Eaten Me Up."

Topic: "Zeal—Getting it, Guiding it, Guarding it."—Isa. 6:7-9; John 2:17; Rev. 3:14-16.

Daily Readings: Monday, July 21—Psa. 39: 1-3, Zeal through meditation. Tuesday, July 22—1 Thess. 2:9-13, Zeal in service. Wednesday, July 23—1 Kings 18:25-29, Misguided zeal. Thursday, July 24—Col. 4:12-13, Sanctified zeal. Friday, July 25—Matt. 24:3-14, Watch the heart-fires. Saturday, July 26—Rom. 8:31-39, Guarded by love.

Enthusiasm is the thing that puts across a thing in fine style, and the question of our need of God-controlled enthusiasm is a vital one for us to consider as Christian Endeavorers.

All Endeavorers seek the right kind of zeal for their lives, and the place to get that zeal is in silent thought and talking with God. "The quiet hour" C. E. stronghold is the one advocated, and if it is closely followed, no society will lack zeal and the right kind. Isaiah got zeal in talking to God, and with that zeal he did real service for God. Jesus got zeal for His task from a close walk and talk with His Father.

Unless our zeal is used, it will soon die. "Zeal is a divine glow of earnestness that should come from God's altar of sacrifice." Like Isaiah, who used his zeal for God, when we are inspired to do service, we too should answer, "Here am I Lord, send me."

Zeal is strengthened by informing ourselves of the need that faces the kingdom's workers. Information creates inspiration, and inspiration compels expression.

Our zeal to be made to count for the most must be controlled. Christ is our example of controlled enthusiasm. Zeal must be sanctified and guarded by love. Sanctified to the praise and glory of God, and guarded day by day by a genuine love to God and man.

Questions for the Meeting.

What is zeal? What is the connection between zeal and love? Can the one be successful without the other? How may we get zeal? How may we increase it? What sanctifies our zeal? What is the necessity of a sanctified zeal? How may we keep our zeal active and alive? What is the difference between zeal and "pep?" Why are we responsible if our zeal dies out? How shall we show our zeal for the kingdom?

Ask some one to sight the story of Paul's zeal before his conversion. How his life is an example of misguided zeal.

CO-WORKERS WITH GOD.

By Susan Coolidge.

The day is long, and the day is hard,
We are tired of the march and of keeping guard;
Tired of the sense of a fight to be won,
Of days to live through, and of work to be done;
Tired of ourselves, and of being alone:
Yet all the while, did we only see,
We walk in the Lord's own company.
We fight, but 'tis He who nerves our arm;
He turns the arrows that else might harm,
And out of the storm He brings a calm,
And the work that we count so hard to do,
He makes it easy, for He works, too;
And the days that seem long to live are His—
A bit of His bright eternities;
And close to our need His helping is.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

Are you concerned as to the success or failure of the Christian Orphanage? Do you ever worry over its failure to serve, or rejoice in its success. Do you want to see it grow, and glow, and go? Do you want to help make it so? Do you ever remember it in your prayers? Do you ask God to give you an opportunity to serve? Do you feel interested in the little boys and girls now in its care, and want to see them grow up to be useful in life? Do you feel any concern as to the many who are knocking at our doors for admittance and are turned away on account of crowded conditions? Do you wish to see the work grow into a larger plant and care for several hundred children at one time? Do you ever lose a minute's sleep in thinking about the widows in distress and the fatherless ones? Do they give you any concern at all? Do you ever ask God to fill your heart with sympathy and help you to serve Him through these little ones? Do you ever think of those who are pouring out their lives daily in carrying on this work for the Church of which you are a part? Do you ever, in your prayer at eventide, ask God to give them strength? Have you ever said an encouraging word to those who serve? Have you ever contributed of your means, that the little ones may have bread to eat? Have you ever thought of the bright boys and girls who have been reared in your institution and gone out to be of service to humanity? Have you had a part in giving them this opportunity? Are you really concerned or worried about the work of your Church at all? If you have been worried and concerned about your Orphanage and the little children in its care, then you have helped its support? I know if you are concerned you are anxious to see the work succeed. You will help to make it succeed?

Do you ever feel concerned about our home and foreign mission work? Do you ever pray for its success and pray for Dr. Atkinson, who is giving his life, his energy, and his strength for its success that God's cause may be built up in the higher field and the message of the gospel sent to the heathen who live in darkness and don't even know of Jesus. Do you ever pray for those who have left home, friends and everything dear to them and have gone to foreign fields to carry the message of Jesus to a living people? Do you contribute a penny that they may have a few of the comforts of life? Do you realize they have gone and you have stayed at home? God gives you an opportunity to serve Him through them. Will you serve?

Do you feel concerned about the success of your college? Do you ever give Dr. Harper, who is carrying the burden for you in the heat of the day, a thought? Did you ever think that he is carrying this for the sake of his Church and for you? Do you ever ask God to give him strength to carry the load and loyal helpers to assist him? Are you concerned? Are you worried in the least? If you have not been worried or concerned about any of these, won't you begin to worry a little for the sake of your Church and the Master's cause?

THE SEVENTH HOUSE OF ISRAEL AND IMMORTALITY.

One wonders if the reader has ever heard of the "Seventh House of Israel." Last week, while walking down one of the principal streets of Raleigh with my father, I noticed that quite a crowd had gathered on a corner just in front of us. The people seemed to be strangely attracted by some one in their midst, and were eagerly pressing close so as not to miss a word that was said.

As my father and I drew near, we saw that the center of attraction was an unusual-looking woman, who held in her hands a pamphlet, on which was printed quotations from the Bible which she had selected for her particular purpose. She was quoting from the little pamphlet to prove the correctness of her assertions.

There is nothing new in the doctrine of the immortality of the soul. We who are members of the Christian Church have heard it all our lives. What struck me so forcibly was the fact that this representative of the "Seventh House of Israel" also believed in the immortality of the body. It is impossible to say where she got her authority for this belief, because nowhere in the Scriptures can we find the statement that the body will last forever. All experience is to the contrary, and biblically there are many confirmations of the fact that the body is a temporary and ephemeral thing.

What a sublime thought that this is not true of the soul, and, spiritually speaking, we can live forever. This inspiring idea is beautifully sung by the poet—

"Life is real, life is earnest,
And the grave is not its goal;
Dust thou art, to dust returnest,
Was not spoken of the soul."

It is uplifting to think that "our soul has had elsewhere its setting and cometh from afar," and that we come from and return to God, who is our home. Will we not make our lives count for the most possible good, as the smallest return that we can make for this divine heritage? There is work in the kingdom for each of us. The Lord's vineyard is large enough for all. The laymen and the laywomen, as well as the ecclesiastics, have a great task—one that will require the best co-operative effort and leadership in both. The laity has been the vanguard of many progressive movements—Sunday School, missionary, Salvation Army, and many others. Now, these "simple" people have put their shoulders to the task of establishing a united kingdom. If history counts for anything, and if experience is any teacher, then this presages the realization of our Master's prayer for the oneness of His people. Let's find our part in this great work and carry itt hrough.

THE CHILDREN'S OWN CHURCH.

By Ruth Woolley Laws.

What was your favorite pastime when a child? Mine was "playing lady." Dressed in a trailing skirt of my mother's and a hat of such original design as to defy Paris, I would spend long hours imitating my mother and her friends, in a way that no doubt amused them as much as it did me. I have reason to be grateful to a man who was able to use this universal trait of childhood, imitation, in such a manner as to bring the children of his Church to him in life-long devotion and loving service.

This man, the late Rev. T. B. Ford, was the pastor of what was then a small suburban Church in Portland, Oreg., and the plan which he used with such success was that of a children's Church. Once a month, at 3 o'clock on Sunday afternoon, the children would gather for their "very own" Church service. The youthful members were ushered to their pews by juvenile ushers—boys of ten or twelve who were instructed in their duties by the pastor.

The regular order of service as prescribed in the hymnal for morning worship was faithfully followed. The children in the choir had been trained by the pastor's daughter, and they not only sang the hymns but special anthems. The organist, a girl of fourteen, was so delighted at being chosen to play the big organ, that she was with difficulty persuaded to save some of her special numbers for the next service! I happen to know about her because I was that enthusiastic child! Every detail of the service is written on my memory—the ushers, as, with bowed heads, they received the blessing; the pastor, as he so earnestly preached, not over our heads, but to our hearts. I never knew the congregation to be other than reverent and attentive, and the audience was usually large. Sometimes grown folk grew curious and slipped quietly into a side pew; they always remained to congratulate the pastor. The sermons which reached the children seemed to touch the elders, too.

The result of these services was that the Church was filled with children—children in the prayer meeting, children in the morning service, and of course in the Sunday School. Not only were they present, but they took part with a true understanding when the Lord's Prayer and the Apostle's Creed were recited. It was not at all unusual for the children to repeat some interesting Scripture reading or song at an adult meeting. The parents liked to hear them, and the children felt at home in the Church.

All this happened a number of years ago, and in the meantime there has developed the "Junior Church Movement." In many Eastern and coast cities full-fledged junior Churches are being conducted with great success.

These Churches are fully organized, with official boards, committees and other departments of the Church. In some of the larger Churches where two services can be held without conflicting, the children's service is conducted at the regular hour of morning worship. At Wenatche, Wash., the junior Church has become so popular that the seats have had to be reserved for the young people only.

How the young folk do respond when given responsibility! They need but the chance to give, not only their young loyalty, but youthful leadership and enthusiastic vision to the Church. If your Church gives your child no definite duties, but uses him only at Christmas time and then only to "speak a piece," it robs itself of very precious privileges. What lost opportunities for the pastor to really know the caliber of his budding Church membership!

Do not be discouraged if you have neither the equipment nor time to establish the more elaborate junior Church. Plan to start with the simpler monthly meetings described, then as it grows make provision for a more elaborate organization. It will be all the more successful if, like Topsy, it "jest grows."

Try the children's Church. Let it be to the children of your parish what it was to me, not only a sweet memory of Sabbath hours well spent, but an anchor of habit in the years to come—the habit of regular Church attendance.—Christian Herald.

PHARAOH'S GATE.

The great portal, or pylon, of the palace of Merenptah, thought to be the Pharaoh of the Exodus, has been brought to this country from Egypt and will be erected in the new Egyptian Hall of the University of Pennsylvania, in Philadelphia. The work of putting into place the massive five-ton and eight-ton blocks of limestone, dug out of the mud on the site of ancient Memphis, where they had lain for centuries, has been begun under the direction of Dr. George Byron Gordon, director of the museum. Many Egyptologists hold that Merenptah was the pharaoh who refused to let the children of Israel go, in spite of the pleadings and threats of Moses and Aaron. He built a five-acre palace, with throne-room, bathroom, reception room, State apartments, colonnades and courtyards. In this palace Moses and Aaron threw down the rod that was transformed into a serpent, and warned the obdurate monarch of the plagues that would visit Egypt if the children of Israel were not released. And from that palace Merenptah rushed forth to place himself at the head of the war chariots and pursue the Hebrews until his army perished in the Red Sea. It seems certain, therefore, that Moses and Aaron passed through this great gateway many times in their visitations to pharaoh. There are 142 tons of limestone which belong to the mighty portal which, when finally put in place, will consist of six huge pillars twenty-eight feet in height, and two massive columns twenty-two feet in height. These columns, weighing thirty tons each, flanked the entrance on the outside. Dr. Gordon says that Merenptah's palace was the greatest in Egypt. It will be an interesting exhibit, of great historic value, even if it is not absolutely certain that this king was the Pharaoh of the Exodus. We have had so many of them of late that we are getting a little uncertain about the matter.

("And Moses and Aaron went in unto Pharaoh."—Ex. 7:10.)—Methodist Protestant.

BOOK DIVINE.

O yes, my old Bible, I'll get you rebound,
Although you are tattered, your pages all browned;
My life-long companion, my friend of all friends,
I'll travel with you until life's journey ends.

In childhood's young days, how I listened with care
To wonderful tales from your page white and fair,
As dear Mother told them, I cherish them still,
Each story so sweet! how my heart they would thrill!

Yes, my old Bible, you have not failed me!
My solace and comfort o'er life's troubled sea.
In sunshine or shadow, in poverty's vale,
Through you I had strength to weather the gale.

And when through the valley of shadows I go,
The Rod and the Staff will go with me, I know.
So, trusting your word I'll journey along,
And cross the deep water with joy and a song.

JOHNSON.

On June 6th, Mrs. Alice Johnson left the "earthly house of this tabernacle to be clothed upon with the house which is from heaven" at the age of 64. She had for several months been a great sufferer, and death came as a sweet relief. Though for several weeks she had been unable to speak, she left abundant evidence of her readiness to depart and be with Jesus." The bereaved include C. H., Kenneth, and M. M. Ferell; one daughter, Mrs. J. L. Womble, besides several brothers and sisters. She had long been a consistent member of the M. E. Church. Funeral was conducted by her pastor, Rev. L. B. Jones, assisted by the writer. May the Lord comfort the bereaved.

R. L. WILLIAMSON.

BRAY.

Luisa Vandilla Bray was born January 6, 1844; died July 3, 1924; age, 80 years, 5 months and 28 days. She was married to William Bray on February 18, 1866, and to this union was born eight children—five boys and three girls. Her husband preceded her to the grave nearly twenty years. Three of her children have gone on before. She has twenty-seven grandchildren, twelve great-grandchildren. She was laid to rest in Pleasant Ridge Cemetery. There was a good-size congregation at the funeral.

May the richest blessings rest upon the children and friends. Her grave was covered with beautiful flowers as a token of esteem. Burial was conducted by the writer. J. M. ALLRED.

RENN.

On July 6, 1924, after a stay of 72 years, 4 months and 22 days, God saw fit to call from our Church and community the spirit of Sister Sarah Jane Hoyle Renn. She had a stroke of paralysis some years ago, and never fully recovered. A few days before she died, she grew rapidly worse, suffering another stroke, from which she did not rally.

Sister Renn was a good woman and very loyal to her Church and to the sick as long as her health would allow. She bore her suffering patiently and kept her faith in her Saviour. She had been married about fifty-five years, and her husband preceded her to the other home many years ago. We trust they are happily united, to part no more. She was a member of Liberty (Vance) Christian Church.

May her life and good council to children and grandchildren be the means of bringing them all home to God. Her granddaughters carried flowers, and her grandsons were pallbearers. The floral offerings were beautiful, and bore testimony of the high esteem in which she was held.

As, one by one, the aged are being taken from us and our Church, may others be inspired, through faith in Christ Jesus, to give themselves fully into His service. May we be prepared in heart to fill the needed places and keep the banner of Christ waving high in our Church. MRS. R. J. NEWTON.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By Rev. S. M. Lynam.

A Real Honor.—

A real honor came to Arkansas when its Legislature ratified the proposed constitutional amendment to control child labor by national, instead of State, laws. It is the first State to ratify the proposed amendment. Such an amendment is much needed, in view of the facts cited on this page a few weeks ago. The children of America must be saved and given a square deal, or America cannot lead in the world of tomorrow.

50,000 Enrolled in D. V. B. S.—

Two hundred Churches, representing thirty Protestant communions, are conducting daily vacation Bible schools in New York City this summer. About fifty thousand children have been enrolled. Five thousand teachers are carrying on the classes, of whom 1,400 are on a salary basis, the others being volunteers. This is an increase of about ten thousand in enrollment over last year.

The movement toward daily vacation Bible schools is constantly gaining momentum. The Protestant Churches of America are waking to the fact that they must educate their children religiously if they are to go forward with the work of the kingdom. It would be a great thing if more Churches in our own brotherhood would set themselves to the task of holding daily vacation Bible schools, and to the conducting of week-day schools of religion during the school term. We must extend the educational work of the Church in order to cope with the rapidly increasing emphasis being placed upon public State education.

English Methodists Think Union.—

All around the world it seems that the Methodist Church is thinking union. The Northern and Southern Methodists are working toward it earnestly, while in England the Wesleyan, Primitive, and United Free Methodists are doing the same thing. At their New Castle meeting, the Primitive Methodists passed favorably on the measure, and turned it over to their quarterly conferences for confirmation. All the other branches seem to favor the movement.

A prominent Methodist bishop expressed the hope some days ago that the whole of Methodism would soon be united. It seems that this may be realized at a not far distant day. It is a great time when the various Churches are beginning actively to consider union, and are ceasing to discuss theological trifles.

We wonder where the project for union between our own brotherhood and the Free Will Baptist Church has gone! It seems that there should be no difficulty in our getting together. We are sincerely hopeful that it, too, shall come as a reality very soon.

For Better Pictures.—

A movement for higher standards of moving pictures has developed within the industry itself. Christian people have long insisted on a strict censorship of pictures, but it has been indifferently successful. Now it is a hopeful sign that the work has begun within. The Moving Picture World, writing of the "Yale Chromicles of America," remarks: "The school superintendent who has made a vigorous effort to secure the attendance of his pupils and teachers at the local showing of the Yale films, has come away a bit miffed, when he finds that he has also aided the success of a jäzz picture of the most hectic type. He feels that he has been bilked. His enthusiasm for co-operation on the latter subjects of the series is considerably dampened, and one of the most admirable opportunities the industry has ever had of theatre and community linking is endangered." The Motion Picture News and the Exhibitors' Herald expressed themselves similarly in recent editorials. These expressions mean much to Church endeavors.

Every parent has a right to insist that, when his child comes away from the movies, there should be the same feeling of clean pleasure and uplift which he experiences when he has read "John Halifax" or Tennyson's "Idyls of the King." He has a right to demand this, and he should let his local theater manager understand this. Good pictures, like good books, are a genuine asset, and no one should be cheated by them. The tastes of the American people must be raised, it is true; but this can be done with educational measures. We are glad that the decent people of America are making themselves felt, and that the industry is feeling the need of a cleansing and a raising of picture standards.

Chinese Bandits at Work.—

Chinese bandits have been very active during the last year. Very recently, the Rev. Geo. Douglas Byers, a Presbyterian missionary, was murdered. On May 19th last, Edwin C. Hawley, an American business man, in the employ of an English company, was killed by the Junkmen. The British government, with the aid of a gunboat, forced the Chinese to walk in the funeral procession, and compelled the execution of the leaders of the Junkmen publicly. This retaliation caused a cessation of outrages near Wanhsien where the murder of Mr. Hawley occurred. The bandits have attacked a boat belonging to the Baptist mission and plundered it. They also abducted and held for ransom two Roman Catholic priests in a back province. A hospital was robbed, and two employees killed and one woman held for ransom. These are but a few of the outrages committed by the Chinese bandits, and the depleted condition of the national and local treasuries make the keeping of order impossible.

Before forming our judgment of the Chinese, however, it might be well to remember that probably many more Chinese have perished at the hands of American mobs than have foreigners at the hands of Chinese mobs. It is a marvelous tribute to the Christianity of our young people to know that, in spite of the Chinese outrages against missionaries, hundreds of young men and women are in the ranks of student volunteers, anxiously awaiting an opportunity to go to China. They feel that because of present conditions they are needed more. Even in our own age, Christ does not lack for men who are willing even to die for Him if need be. It is a blessed thought for which every Christian heart should give thanks.

Attempt Third Party.—

Two attempts to organize a third party have been made by the Progressives. A convention has been held at St. Paul, Minn., and another is to be held at Cleveland, Ohio, on July 4th. The St. Paul Convention was that of the Farmer-Labor party. It admitted communists, and thereby received the denouncement of Senator La Follette. The Cleveland Convention will refuse admission to communists. The St. Paul Convention tentatively nominated Duncan MacDonald, of Illinois, for President, and William Bouch, of Washington, as his running-mate. Though communists were admitted, the platform of the St. Paul Convention is not communistic. It does demand, however, the nationalization of mines, superpower plants, railroads, banks, grain exchanges, telephone and telegraph services, and all monopolized industries, with the workers sharing in the management. It advocated loans to farmers by the government without interest. It would have the government guarantee employment at a minimum wage, and suggests the use of public works for the unemployed. It would use the police and soldiers in time of strikes on the side of the strikers, and it recognized the "particularly vicious oppression and exploitation of the negro race."

Many other similar planks found their way into the platform of the Farmer-Labor party. There is nothing to be feared from them now. Some of the things which they suggest, however, must and should ultimately come. It is significant that while a third party has never been successful, they have been responsible for initiating almost every worth-while reform in government. Some of the things in the present third-party platform merit consideration from those who are seeking justice and equity in government for all men alike.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Milton's eyes were blind, but he saw more than any man of his time. Sometimes our afflictions are our blessings.

Bro. Layman, will you see that your pastor reads THE CHRISTIAN SUN? If he does not, see that it is sent to him.

Dr. D. A. Long has been re-elected pastor at Mt. Auburn Church. He has served this Church to great acceptance many years and is happy in that relationship.

"Building a Country Sunday School"—read both the editorial and the advertisement. This will be good for officers and teachers, but especially superintendents.

Miss Pattie Coghill, secretary of the Board of Religious Education, reports 138 registrations for the Elon Chautauqua up to the time of going to press. This is fine. Hurrah for the Chautauqua!

Some people we know would make poor angels. We have heard them sing "I Shall Have Wings Some Day." If they could not walk in the ways of the Lord here, they would break their necks trying to fly.

Hon. E. E. Holland, Suffolk, Va., presided at the session of the Eastern Virginia S. S. & C. E. Convention at Bethlehem Church last week with great grace and graciousness. He is a capable and very efficient presiding officer.

Rev. G. C. Crutchfield and Mr. Spivey, of the Wakefield charge, motored to Richmond and called to see us. They report that a parsonage has been purchased. This charge is composed of Barrett's, Burton's Grove, Ivor, and Wakefield field Churches.

Rev. W. D. Harward, D. D., pastor of our Elm Avenue Church, Portsmouth, Va., has made it known to his people that he will close his work there with the present Conference year. Any of our Churches on the lookout for a pastor will do well to correspond with Dr. Harward. He is an able man, as well as a devoted and consecrated pastor.

Rev. J. F. Apple, pastor, closed a very successful revival at Bethlehem Church, Alamance County, N. C., Thursday, July 24th. He was assisted by Rev. J. A. Ledbetter, of Reidsville. Large audiences attended throughout, and Bro. Ledbetter's messages were of weight and power, the pastor reports. Some twenty or more have already united with the Church, and the Church was greatly revived.

Rev. Jas. H. Lightbourne, Holland, Va., the executive secretary, was untiring in his zeal and efforts to make the S. S. & C. E. Convention at Bethlehem last week a great success, and his zeal and efforts bore fruit in delightful abundance. He is the right man in the right place, and the people in Eastern Virginia need have no fears as to the success and achievements of this Convention while Secretary Lightbourne remains on the job. He plans his work well and then works his plans with skill and wisdom.

NOTICE.

All who expect to attend the seventy-sixth session of the Virginia Valley Christian Conference, to be held with Antioch Christian Church, August 13-15, 1924, are requested to notify at once Mr. B. C. Deavers, Harrisonburg, Va., Route 4, chairman of entertainment committee; or Mr. W. C. Wampler, Harrisonburg, Va. Those coming by rail will be met at Harrisonburg. Be sure to notify Mr. W. C. Wampler, Harrisonburg, Va., when to expect you. Those coming by automobile will come to Harrisonburg, take the Mt. Clinton Pike, and turn to the right about two miles from Harrisonburg. The Church is about four miles from Harrisonburg.

LETTER FROM DR. D. A. LONG.

I preached here yesterday, and was elected pastor for 1924 and 1925. The local Churches of the Methodist Episcopal, Baptist and Christian denominations will begin a protracted meeting at the Baptist Church next Sunday. I cannot attend Elon Chautauqua on account of the protracted meeting.

The only child of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Hight, two years of age, of Franklinton, N. C., was buried today, being killed by the kick of a horse tied in the yard. Hope hangs a star above every cradle, and faith above every grave.

Mrs. Patterson, who resides at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Pearce, of Franklinton, N. C., has been quite feeble for two weeks, but is slowly improving now.

The weeds and grass, aided by copious showers, are giving the farmers a tight race for the mastery of the fields. I'm ashamed to show folks the spot I call "my garden!"

Mt. Auburn, N. C. D. A. LONG.

TRIBUTE TO MEMORY OF DR. BARRETT.

In the death of Bro. J. P. Barrett, I lost, outside of my blood connections, the best friend I ever had. We had an unbroken fellowship for more than thirty-five years. To me this fellowship was sweet and strong, and nothing but death could break it. I miss him more and more. I sometimes imagine I can see his gentle smile, hear his mellow voice, and sometimes feel his hearty and affectionate hand-shake. Sometimes when I am looking for the deep things in God's Word, I feel like he is near, for he led me to see the second work of grace as taught in God's Word, and it was under his ministry at Damascus Christian Church, near Chapel Hill, N. C., in August, 1898, I obtained the blessed experience of sanctification. I shall always thank God for what Bro. Barrett was to me. Just before he went to the hospital, he and I entered into a covenant to pray for a great intellectual character to become a spiritual-minded man, but death has broken the union of our vow; but I will still pray. Dr. Barrett was a good editor, and always stood for what he thought to be right, and he was a strong advocate of missions. The memory of Bro. Barrett is an inspiration to my life. P. T. KLAPP.

Do not be discouraged if you have neither the equipment nor time to establish the more elaborate junior Church. Plan to start with the simpler monthly meetings described, then as it grows make provision for a more elaborate organization. It will be all the more successful if, like Topsy, it "jest grows."

Try the children's Church. Let it be to the children of your parish what it was to me, not only a sweet memory of Sabbath hours well spent, but an anchor of habit in the years to come—the habit of regular Church attendance.—Christian Herald.

MEMORIAL FUND.

Previously acknowledged	$10.00
A. D. Gerringer, Brown Summitt, N. C.....	1.00
Total	$11.00

The Southern Convention at Norfolk, in May, decided to erect monuments at two historic spots, long neglected by us Christians. One is to be at the site of Old Lebanon Church, Surry County, Va., where all party and sectarian names were discarded by our Church ancestors and the name Christian only was adopted.

The other is the late resting-place of Rev. Jas. O'Kelly, near O'Kelly's Chapel, Durham County, N. C. We should have $2,000 with which to erect suitable markers. What will you give?

COMMITTEE ON MONUMENT.

(Judge J. F. West, chairman, Waverly, Va.; Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, secretary, Durham, N. C.; W. E. McClenny, Suffolk, Va.; J. O. Atkinson, treasurer, Elon College, N. C.)

Send funds to the treasurer, and same will be acknowledged in THE SUN. One liberal and good-hearted friend says if $900 is contributed to the Old Lebanon Monument, he will add a gift of $100, so as to mark this spot, now one of the most conspicuous on a Virginia State highway, in a manner that will reflect credit and honor upon those who wear the nade Christian. That is fine! The way is now open for contributors. The Christians must do this good thing right, now that we have made a beginning.

Elon College, N. C. Treasurer.

BETHLEHEM CHAUTAUQUA.

The Bethlehem Chautauqua is an effort on the part of the Board of Religious Education to put the Chautauqua program within the reach of all our Southern Churches. The Churches in the Far South have been deprived of some of the privileges enjoyed by the Churches in North Carolina and Virginia. We have tried to remedy this in our Sunday School and Christian Endeavor work through the field secretaries, and the response has been most gratifying. While this first Chautauqua is somewhat of an experiment, from reports already received, we feel the interest is going to justify the continuance of the institution. The program arranged is practical and will be found helpful to all classes of Church workers. The growth of the Church depends largely upon the service rendered—the better preparation we make, the better the service rendered.

Go to the Chautauqua!

W. T. WALTERS,
Chairman Board of Religious Education.

UNION GROVE.

The third Sunday in July was "Children's Day" at Union Grove. There was Sunday School at 10 o'clock, then preaching, which was well attended, and then dinner. At 2 o'clock the children's service began with a march. The little children started the speaking. It was wonderful how bravely they spoke. Then the larger ones spoke some wonderful pieces—all did well. There was not a blunder made in the service. The people who trained those children did a great work. If, when our meeting begins, the third Sunday in August, we do as well as the children have done, we will have a great meeting. Let us work and pray that it may be so. "He that winneth souls is wise." J. M. ALLRED.

AFRO-CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.

The General Convention of the Afro-Christian Church recently closed, in the city of Baltimore, its twenty-ninth biennial session, which occasion also marks the 125th anniversary of the life of the Christian Church, which began under James O'Kelly, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, also in the city of Baltimore. Dr. S. A. Howell, of Newport News, president, and Rev. J. L. Collins, of Newark, N. J., vice-president, presided alternately. One hundred and fifty delegates from all parts of the South, from New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania represented the activity of the Christian Church. Rev. Frank Wilkins was present, representing a mission work which became affiliated with the Christian Church at its last biennial session and which is operating in the Canal Zone, Central America. The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society met jointly with the General Convention. The session was held in the People's Christian Church, North Bond Street, Rev. C. Edward Brown, pastor. The Church building is very beautiful and commodious, fully equipped for progressive religious training, and carries an active membership of several hundred.

The Hon. Wm. G. Powers, representing the City Council, made the welcome address in behalf of Mayor Jackson, at the formal opening. Response was ably made by Rev. J. T. Tomlinson, of New York. The Revs. W. N. Edwards, G. F. Bragg, C. L. Briggs represented the local clergy in welcome addresses, and Lawyer McMechen and Dr. E. M. Boyle the professions. Responses were made by our own Revs. C. T. Utley, J. J. Faulk, J. D. Jones and Messrs. G. L. Walsh and James Clark. Each local speaker paid glowing tribute to Rev. Brown, pastor, for his industry, honesty and righteousness. The gist of each address was that the influence of the Christian Church and ministry plays the greatest part in service to humanity; that the brotherhood of man and the Fatherhood of God is essential in the practice of Christianity as taught by our Lord and Master; that eternity is the one thing worth while.

Distinguished visitors were Rev. Dr. Staley, of Suffolk, Va.; ex-President of the Southern Christian Convention, who bore fraternal greetings from that Convention, and who spoke with great interest and force on the subject of "Faith." He made very earnest appeal for the payment of all pledges, and for greater sacrifice in the support of of school and Church interests; Dr. J. F. Burnett, of Dayton, Ohio, spoke on the subject, "Our Denominational Interests." We were made to see that the spirit of sacrifice is the most tender thing in Christianity, and that "interest" is something that comes as the result of previous investment; that in Christian work you draw to just the extent that you make sacrifice for the furtherance of the kingdom of God. Responses were made by Mrs. J. L. Collins, Prof. James Clark, of Howard University, and Prof. J. A. Henderson, president of Franklinton Christian College, and were full of thoughtful interest and fact, which doubled the interest already made.

The Rev. J. T. Hall delivered the doctrinal sermon; Dr. W. S. Matthews, the evangelistic sermon; Prof. J. A. Henderson, the educational sermon; Rev. F. A. Gargett, the missionary sermon; Mrs. J. L. Collins represented the Women's Home and Foreign Missionary Society in a gospel message. The educational sermon by Prof. Henderson seemed to climax them all, his subject being "Christian Preparedness—the Importance of Making the Right Choice."

Three well-organized Churches became a part of the Christian Church under the leadership of Rev. Watson, a delegate from the South.

The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society added to its usual history in the carrying on of its business for God. Perfect peace and harmony prevailed throughout its entire session. Between the periods of routine business, real Pentecostal showers fell, and the members of the General Convention wre glad to come into their meeting for a breath of spiritual fresh air. Their work and its results showed a growing interest in every section and in every department.

The reports of the various committees showed careful preparation and a forward step. The discussions which followed each showed thoughtful interest. The educational report gave concisely the broadness, scope and vital importance of Christian education and set forth the accomplishments and needs of Franklinton. A forty thousand dollar dormitory for girls is under construction, and it is planned for occupancy in November. The present dormitory is to be refurnished and a laboratory fully equipped for the teaching of science. A thoroughly organized theological department is needed, and 300 chickens for the poultry farm. The committee made an earnest appeal for greater support and greater sacrifice on the part of every member of the Chistian Church, that Franklinton may stand on par with other denominational schools in preparing her boys and girls for Christian citizenship.

The committee on ways and means set forth the fact very emphatically that the Church does not need new laws, or more laws, or more boards, but more functioning of the laws and boards already existing. They recommend that the present financial system be continued and be controlled by the different boards. They recommend that each Church hold an Easter Day program, the funds from which will be sent to the missionary department as a supplement to the mission fund; that the second sunday in June (Children's Day) be used to supplement the educational fund; that one dollar per quarter from every Church be continued for foreign missions; that the Forward Movement plan be continued and given a greater push in the program of every Church and pastor.

The committee on missions made a splendid report, setting forth the history of missionary activity in foreign fields by the various denominations, telling the needs of the mission field which is operating under the banner of the Chrstian Church. The work in Panama City, the Canal Zone, started by Rev. G. N. Tylerbest, which became a part of the Christian Church at its last biennial session, and now under the leadership of Rev. John H. O'Neal, was thoroughly reported. Within two years, without any financial assistance from the Church, they have been able to secure a fine Church building at the cost of $1,300, with a present indebtedness of $800. Have a membership of seventy and a Sunday School membership of 238. Rev. Frank Wilkins, whose work was publicly received at the same time , made a splendid verbal report of his activity in the Canal Zone and an earnest appeal for more support and more interest in the mission field. He told of the splendid opportunity for Christian service in the Canal Zone and in the British West Indies.

Two delegates and alternates were elected to visit the foreign field during this Convention year.

The W. H. & F. M. Society reported eight hundred dollars, appropriating $250 for Franklinton, $100 for foreign missions, and $100 for the gospel tent now being purchased. Over fourteen hundred dollars was raised by the Convention.

The election resulted in the same corps of officers, with the exception of Rev. C. E. Brown, who became assistant secretary, and F. A. Hargett, secretary of missions.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

DOING RIGHT IN THE WRONG WAY.

In a notable sermon at Elon College a while ago, the pastor, Rev. N. G. Newman, D. D., emphasized the truth that there was a wrong way to do even a right thing. One may advocate the truth, the right, the noble and the good; but one may employ wrong methods in doing so. The end in view in no sense justifies means to attain that end, if those means are wrong, however righteous the cause.

With such a beginning, one's mind may go in a hundred different directions for proof—if proof were needed—or for consequences of such conduct. One can easily think, in such connection, of our Christian Church, its history, its progress and its status today. Here is a people, a denomination, a Church divinely named, properly planted, founded, in fact, on none other than the Son of God, and fashioned after His life, teachings, practices and precepts. The Christian denomination has the right on its side, in so far as principles, polity, position, plans and purposes go. But one can easily question if it has maintained the right, upheld the right, propagated the right in the right way. The point is, have we, as a denomination, let our light shine out to the world, or have we kept this glorious light of life, love and liberty hid under a bushel? One wonders!

The Disciples of Christ had a beginning in history since our beginning as a distinct people. Today they have Churches, many of them magnificent temples of worship in leading cities, all the way from California to Maine and Florida. Their growth has been marked and marvelous. The Disciples of Christ got hold of one great principle—that of Church union—and have flung it with unstinted zeal, and with tremendous co-operative effort, to the four winds. And the four winds have been their great emissaries. Their lines have been carried out into all the earth, and their missionaries are to be found in the manifold tongues, continents and colors of the world.

We Christians have not only this same principle of union and brotherly love, but we have it based on the personality and promise of our Lord, and the whole inspired Book which treats of Him and His.

We have had, we now have, the right at the very heart and center of our being and our history as a people. But are we going at making that right known to the world in the right way? There is indeed a wrong, a deplorable, a tragic way to go about a right thing. We have failed to make our right polity, position and principles known in the centers, in cities, and in the uttermost parts. God begins to release His saving power among a people only when He finds men and women who are ready and willing to go about His right and righteous work in the right and righteous way.

He said through His Son, "Go ye into all the world . . . and lo I am with you unto the end." We want and expect Him with us without being willing to fulfill the conditions laid down—go into all the world.

We shall do the right in the right way only when we obey our Lord's most emphatic command. Not large enough to obey that command? Any denomination is as large as, and no larger than, its faith. "As is thy faith, so be it unto thee." We are as large, and no larger than the faith we, as a people, exercise in God and in the promises of God.

BEAUTIFUL INDIVIDUALITY.

Every one is striving for marked individuality. No one is satisfied to be exactly like his fellows. We want to do something, or be something, or possess something that will make us stand out above our fellows. This is a perfectly legitimate ambition, and is responsible for many of the fine achievements of life. Sometimes it leads people to select some very unique ambitions. Sometimes it causes men to make themselves ridiculous. It is a pity that, in selecting a mark of individuality, all of us do not choose that which is really worth while.

Not long ago I had occasion to visit a home located in a section of the city belonging to a big manufacturing company. As is frequently the custom, all of the houses in the block were built exactly alike, and the houses were not numbered. I had been in the home some months before, but I did not remember the exact number of houses between the place I was seeking and the corner. The only distinguishing feature I remembered about the house was that it and the yard around it was a little cleaner when I had visited it before than were the homes around it. So I went down the block looking for the cleanest-looking place in the block, and when I had selected it, there, sure enough, were the people I was seeking.

Could there be a mark of individuality more to be prized than that? It looked like a very poor chance to achieve individuality. Living in a section where all the streets were very much alike, and where all the houses were exactly alike, who could hope to achieve distinction? And yet here was a house that stood out as clearly from its fellows as if it had been designed by an architect with a view of giving it individuality. And, like virtue, it was its own reward.

So many of us are strving for mental individuality. We are anxious to have a mind that is different from the mind of our fellows. Yet most of us are not endowed with outstanding mentality. But, my! what a chance there is in our day to achieve distinction by having a mind that is remarkable for its cleanness. Here is an opportunity for the fellow who has realized that he can never outstrip his fellows in the race for mental acumen. There is nothing in the world to prevent him winning renown for a mind that is remarkable for its freedom from the unclean. And it is really a thing for more individual credit. Keen mentality depends to a marked degree upon natural endowments. But mental purity is dependent upon personal taste, diligent guarding, selection of wholesome surroundings, and the feeding upon the chaste, the wholesome and the beautiful things of this world.

In fact, here is an opportunity that applies to all of life. There is no realm of man's activity where this ambition for cleanliness could not be pursued with equal success. And the achievement would entitle the winner to just as great distinction. All of us would love to be gifted in speech. We wish that we might inspire men with the eloquence of our speech. But we might be able to give them a finer inspiration if every word that falls from our lips should be clean and pure. When the record of our life is to be written and its achievements summarized, what finer mark of individuality could be stamped upon them than that they were all absolutely clean? And what are the marks of such individuality going to bring to us in the way of rewards? "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

THE BUSINESS OF MISSIONS.

Dr. Cornelius H. Patton, of the American Mission Board, has written a book of which the Missionary Review of the World says:

"Dr. Patton takes his title for this book from the same conception as that voiced by William Carey when he said, 'My business is to serve the Lord, and I cobble shoes to pay expenses.' Carey also put into practice this dominant idea in his mission to India, where he for years supported his missionary operations by raising indigo as a by-product. Both men learned their lesson from the Great Teacher who, at the age of twelve, said: 'I must be about my Father's business.'

"But, 'big business' though the missionary enterprise undoubtedly is, Dr. Patton carefully differentiates his purpose from any suggestion that the Church's world-wide emprise depends for justification on the ground that it promotes commerce. That is all very well in a 'Babson Report,' but it has no place in any Church publication. This book is, instead, a clarion call to the higher levels of a purely altruistic loyalty to the Lord who gave His life a ransom for the sins of the whole world. And yet it is all intensely practical; it is 'business.'

"It is a moving picture indeed which passes in swift succession before the reader of these pages sweeping the world in statesman-like perspective. Taking China as a cross-section of the world, it focuses attention upon this biggest segment of a world encircling advance of Christ's army with banners in such wise as to confirm hope of the ultimate victory 'unto the uttermost.' For, while the population of China is shown to be over rather than under four hundred millions, and the Christians among so many are as yet only one to a thousand, the rate of their increase—and this is admittedly the decisive factor—is such as to give promise that 'one shall chase a thousand' ere long, and two shall win ten thousand.

"For, is it not immensely heartening to find, that whereas Morrison single-handed besieged the gates of Canton for seven years before he won his first convert in 1814, and thirty-two years passed before that number increased to six, when in 1842 the treaty of Tientsin was signed, by 1914 the number of Christians reached 235,303, and in 1920, 366,524, multiplying fourfold in the last two decades. The penetration of this colossal field by some six thousand missionaries with manifold activities is an inspiring story, which Dr. Patton has told in a masterly way that will richly reward the reading of the business man and of all who 'mean business' for Christ.'

AUTOMOBILES AND CHRISTIAN CHARACTER.

On a recent Sunday I drove through the heart of North Carolina's Piedmont section, going to one of our Churches, returning that afternoon. We left at 7 o'clock in the morning and reached home at 6:30 o'clock that evening. The roads were improved, part hard surface and the remainder sand-clay. Backwoodsmen do not live along such roads, and do not drive automobiles over them. We saw not a half-dozen vehicles other than automobiles in our drive of one hundred and sixty miles that day.

On our going and return trips, by slightly different routes, we saw many rural Churches with automobiles filling the groves, far in excess of the horse-drawn vehicles that a generation ago bore the rural people to their places of worship. Automobiles carry more people to public worship in the country than ever horses and buggies or wagons or carriages did. There is no doubt in my mind that attendance on the Church and Sunday School in the country has perceptibly increased in these latter years. I have no quarrel with the automobile along that line, and have no quarrel with the automobile on any score. I do not know how I would have gotten along these latter years, with multiplying duties and calls, but for the three faithful Fords I have worn out and the two other cars I have had as mute servants of a busy life, one of which has already gone to its last resting-place, the junk-shop, and the other is now in its prime, responding like a thing with life and conscience to every flow of gas and oil and turn of the wheel. The man who invented the automobile—Haynes I believe his name was—is certainly entitled to be ranked as a personal friend of mine, and I am sure, too, he is esteemed His servant by the Most High.

But I am outraged by the use to which some people put the automobile. Being completely under the control of its driver, it has no manner of protest. It will haul blockade liquor for bootleggers just as readily as it will haul ministers with sermons. It will work at night as well as in the day. It will serve either God or mammon, character building or the opposite, and it has no choice in the matter.

Some of the things I saw in the broad open daylight on the public highway on the Lord's Day referred to indicate that the automobile is undermining the character of young people. If I saw one instance I saw a hundred during the day in which young people of the opposite sex were riding in each other's embrace. When we met them or tried to pass them, we had to drive out of the road. Nor did they in a single instance desist from their public "love-making"(?) even under our most intense gaze. Things have come to a sorry pass when conduct of this character takes place, and I am reliably informed that, in the daytime, but particularly at night, contiguous to every town or city, there are trysting-places, just off the beaten paths of travel, where nameless orgies are indulged. O tempora! O mores! Another generation of vipers is breeding.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN enters its solemn protest to parents who are primarily responsible for such conditions. The writer knows what your son or daughter will say—that all the other young people are allowed to ride in cars unchaperoned, both day and night. Then, take my advice, and be one family that will array itself against what everybody else is doing. You cannot restore modesty, not to say virtue, when it is gone. Once lost, these priceless character requisites are gone forever. Act before it is too late.

And young women of the Christian Church, your Church paper loves young people. It especially regards itself as the guardian of young womanhood. Listen prayerfully to this. Never ride in an automobile, day or night, with a young man alone, unless he be your brother. We call upon the noble young manhood of our Church not to embarrass the young women of their acquaintance or association by suggesting automobile rides with them alone. Young men will, we fear, embrace young women in automobiles or elsewhere if they are permitted, and brag about it. But such young women are not selected by these same young men as life partners. The public highways will have to be patrolled by a State constabulary in the interest of public morals and private character, unless parents and young people put an end to such nefarious practices.

Against these, THE CHRISTIAN SUN speaks this word of warning and solemn protest. We were riding through a country where Churches of our denomination are numerous. We may have passed many young people of our Christian homes compromising themselves in the manner described. Be that as it may, these young people are disgracing their parents and undermining their character by their silly disregard of the proprieties and modesties of life. They must stop it or the State must take a hand. A generation of such vamps (girls were sometimes embracing the boys, rather than vice versa) and mashers will set this Christian nation back a hundred years. It must stop!

BUILDING A COUNTRY SUNDAY SCHOOL.

That which should interest, and no doubt does deeply concern, very many CHRISTIAN SUN readers is how to build a country Sunday School. A very large per cent of our Sunday Schools are country Sunday Schools. More than this. A very large per cent of our pastors for the future, our missionaries, our leaders in Church activity, are now in these country Sunday Schools. Upon the character of the training of these future leaders very largely depend the kind and character of the Church of the future. On this account, if on no other, CHRISTIAN SUN readers ought to know how to build and conduct to greatest efficiency a country Sunday School.

But there is another and a greater reason. If the country Sunday School is to hold its own against the many other attractions of Sunday morning, particularly attractions produced with and by the automobile, then the country Sunday School has got to make the effort of its life. Just saying "Go to Sunday School," and then find haphazard, indifferent, any sort of methods, or no methods, when the pupil gets there, will not do any longer. If the young person of our day in the country is to be held in the Sunday School, then there must be something in that school of efficiency, of methods, of activity, of attraction to hold and keep him there. The country Sunday School, to live and grow and achieve, must be built—must be constructed and conducted on the right basis and according to proper proportions, plans and methods.

On this account, the writer rejoices exceedingly that a long-time friend who has given many active, consecrated years to work in the country Sunday School, has thought out and wrought out from his own observations and experience a volume entitled "Building a Country Sunday School." This volume is from the pen of E. L. Middleton, general secretary Sunday School department, Baptist State Convention of North Carolina. It is certainly a worth-while book. If we knew how to do it we would induce every Sunday School superintendent, and every Sunday School teacher who reads THE SUN to send for and read this book. It can be had in paper binding for 60 cents, or in cloth for $1.25, from the Fleming H. Revell Company, New York, or of the Baptist Book Store, Raleigh, N. C. The book is in no sense denominational, and is as well adapted to the needs of our Christian Sunday Schools as to Baptist schools. It has 159 pages, packed full of the very best, most practical and common-sense suggestions and methods for building and keeping built a country Sunday School that we have found anywhere. The book does not shoot over the heads of folks, but gets right down to practical business and suggestions, good for any Sunday School and such as any school will do well to put into practice. We trust many SUN readers who care for Sunday Schools will secure and read this splendid, helpful volume. A new and better day will dawn for many of our country Sunday Schools when their superintendents or teachers read this book carefully and seek to put into practice some of its splendid plans and suggestions.

MONEY FOR LUXURIES.

A striking contrast between life in India and in the United States is drawn by the King's Business, which quotes figures that show first, that 40,000,000 of India's people never knew what it means to be satisfied with food, and a large proportion of the families are maintained on an income not exceeding five dollars per month, many large families existing on a much smaller amount; and second, the expenditures of the American people for luxuries in 1919. For cigars and cigarettes, $1,310,000,000 was spent, and $150,000,000 for cosmetics and perfume. The outlay for automobiles amounted to $2,000,000,000, and $250,000,000 for phonographs and pianos. (Statistics available elsewhere, based on the 1921 tax receipts, show larger figures for all these items.) The article concludes: "It is decidedly against God's plan that one nation squander billions in luxuries, while millions of people a few thousand miles away, go to bed every night hungry for the lack of a little of the coarsest food. He who notices the fall of the sparrows also has a record of every misspent dollar."—Missionary Review.

HIS BUSINESS.

William Carey said: "My business is to serve the Lord, and I cobble shoes to pay expenses." No wonder this man came to be, as a competent historian declares, "one of the greatest men that ever crossed the pages of time." Cobbling shoes to pay expenses for the support of himself and invalid wife, and children, he came to be, in serving the Lord, a great preacher, a profound thinker, an eminent scholar, and one of the greatest translators of the Bible of all time. Through this one life, millions have been blessed and made better.

Carey's name will be honored and sung to the glory of mankind when millions who put business first, and serving the Lord second, will have been forgotten. God honors those who put Him first.

MEDITATIONS FROM A PARSON'S DIARY.

"I have always noticed that when a disgruntled Church member lets the devil make him think that if he withdraws from the Church it will die, that instead of the Church dying, he himself does —spiritually."

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The two-day session of the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference was held as the guest of Bethlehem Christian Church, on the concrete road, three miles from Suffolk, on July 22d and 23d.

The weather was ideal for July—clear and hot—but the greatly improved Church building, the graded grounds, and the original oaks furnished ample room and conditions suited to a great Convention which this fifty-fifth session proved to be. With Rev. J. H. Lightbourne as executive secretary to plan the program, Col. E. E. Holland as president in the chair, Rev. B. J. Earp at the table with his pen as secretary, and W. H. Baker, president of Virginia Christian Endeavor Union, to lead the song-service, the Convention was well equipped to carry the business through on time and in a manner that satisfied all.

All department secretaries, committees, and individuals who had special matters in charge came in with reports on time and well prepared. This, of course, facilitated business, filled out a good program schedule and kept the Convention awake and interested in what was done.

There was an increase in work done during the year in the money sent up to the Convention, and a brighter future loomed large in the mind of those who lead.

Suffolk Christian Endeavor Society rendered a pageant on Tuesday night, Newport News Society rendered one on Wednesday afternoon, and the Franklin Willing Workers rendered special songs on Tuesday afternoon. These all showed real work in the local Churches.

The exhibits by Mr. W. V. Leathers of Willing Workers' missionary material, of Rev. W. M. Scott, of Elon College, and daily vacation Bible school by Miss Pattie Coghill, showed splendid work done in local Churches and attracted attention during the Convention.

There were three outstanding features that deserve mention. The liberal hospitality of the Bethlehem congregation; Rev. T. E. White and his people revived the "old time" welcome, and provision for the "dinner hour." They fed at least two thousand people in the two days. Tables were arranged in cafeteria style, and the throng passed in, received plates of bread, ham, beef, chicken, pickles, cakes, iced tea, and on to tables or the shade to enjoy the meal. The abundance of country and the style of town united in the serving of the dinner to the throng. It was really a rest, a social, and refreshment recess, and the people returned well for the afternoon session.

The large delegation, the large congregation from far and near was another of the three outstanding features of the Convention. This was great, not only during the day, but also at the night session. Not only the attendance was great, but the attention was great, too. It was more of a working Convention than long addresses. Everything was brief, to the point, practical—a real Conference school.

The devotionals at each session conducted by Rev. J. G. Truitt, pastor of First Church, Norfolk, was the third outstanding feature of the Convention. The Scriptures read, the comments made, and prayers offerred gripped the mind of the congregation and put them in a spiritual condition sweet and deep. Very impressive.

ELON LETTER.

In February this year our recently remodeled and greatly improved Church at Sanford was burned. Five thousand dollars had just been expended on the building. The stroke was a severe one, and for the moment staggered our faithful band of workers, but only for the moment.

Early in March, the work of rebuilding began, and on July 13th, the reconstructed plant was opened for worship and service. It is rebuilt exactly as before it was burned, except for the changes about the pulpit, in the interest of a larger service and greater convenience.

I do not think I ever looked into the faces of a happier congregation than that which greeted me on Sunday morning at the 11 o'clock hour, following a Sunday School session at which more than 200 had been present. Arriving too late to get in a class, we sat in the Church auditorium near the Men's Bible Class. More than thirty splendid men were present, and they had a good lesson. With evident fervor and conviction, the teacher said that the greatest thing in Sanford for him was the Church and Sunday School, even as it was for the boy Jesus about whom they were studying.

Superintendent J. U. Gunter was in charge of the morning program. Following a song service, led by Mrs. Sam Davis, with Bro. Davis at the piano, Miss Wiley Stout brought words of greeting. Then Bro. Gunter gave a message on behalf of the school. Miss Mary Addie White, Prof. P. V. Parks, Miss Ruth Gunter, and Bro. Joe W. Stout made excellent addresses on "Sunday School Music," "Young Men and the Sunday School," "The Social Life and the Sunday School," and "Our Sunday School," respectively. These addresses revealed an insight into the great problems of the Christian world and work of the day, an unyielding devotion in the service, and presaged a growing usefulness on the part of our cause in Sanford, as it also explained the rapid recovery from misfortune which the elegent new structure in which we met evidenced to us all.

At night, the reopening service continued, with the Davises in charge of the music and addresses by Miss Jennie Gunter, Bro. K. B. Way, W. H. Wicker, A. H. McIver, J. U. Gunter, J. W. Stout, and F. W. Burkeholder, Mrs. T. E. White, Misses Emma Hart and Janete Stout, with a sermon by the pastor, Rev. R. L. Williamson. The evening service was from the standpoint of the Church. The morning service was from the Sunday School standpoint.

All the week following, the Men's Evangelistic Club, of Sanford, was to conduct a series of meetings, with the Davises in charge of the music. I do not see how anything could be more appropriate than this series of meetings conducted by laymen, following the major achievement on their part of rebuilding their Church in this splendid fashion. And I shall hope and pray for the best results from their efforts.

July 13th was a great day for our people in Sanford and for all of us who were privileged to attend.

BE STILL, MY SOUL.

Be still, my soul—Jehovah loveth thee;
Fret not, nor murmur at thy weary lot;
Though dark and lone thy journey seems to be,
Be sure that thou art ne'er by Him forgot.
He ever loves; then trust Him, trust Him still—
Let all thy care be this, the doing of His will.

ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT STEPHENSON.

(The following is the annual address of President C. H. Stephenson, of the North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, held at New Elam Christian Church, Merry Oaks, N. C., July 16, 1924.)

Never was the Sunday School in a more strategic position in the progress of the world and our civilization than today.

In this good year 1925, attacked on the one side by those who profess not to believe in the Church, and on the other by religious fanatics who carry their creeds too far, it finds a real challenge which will require all the planning, energy and effort that those in the Sunday School can give to realize the high standards which I have, during my administration as your president, placed before this Convention in my annual messages.

Those of you who have been associated with, and attended, the past saveral Conventions of this Conference will remember that in 1915 I addressed you on the topic "Work," and emphasized the importance of work in building up the strong right arm of the Church.

At the following Convention, I called your attention to the three great "S's" in the Sunday School, namely: system, service, success.

In 1921 I endeavored to answer the tremendous question "Why the Sunday School?" by recommending it as the unifying agency for the countless conflicting desires, and inclinations, which make up our complex natures.

Last year we discussed together "The Ideal Sunday School," emphasizing individual responsibility and loyalty to the great cause we are privileged to serve.

This year I propose to carry that thought further, and apply it to the situation in our State, and particularly in our Conferences, as it exists at this time.

I said that the position of the Sunday School today is unique, and that it finds a great challenge, because of the conditions that have arisen out of our peculiar age.

In the last hundred years, science has revolutionized the earth, and in this scientific revolution America has had first place. Within the brief space of a century, we have learned to talk three thousand miles over a small copper wire; to hurl sounds through space, and to transport men and supplies through the air.

With the myriad improvements which have come to speed up our life, we have tended to get away from the fundamental truths which gave rise to the Sunday School and the Christian Endeavor Society, and on which the Church is built.

Especially after the war was our State and nation swept with a feeling of restlessness and dissatisfaction with old and settled principles; but two years ago a period of deflation set in, and the tendency since that time has been to get back to sound doctrines, but we have not yet recovered to the point where the Sunday School can feel that it has achieved the victory to which it is entitled.

To answer this challenge, we have assembled in this Convention, and as a keynote or theme for our consideration, I suggest an answer to this challenge which finds expression in four tremendous words, beginning with the letter "P."

Indeed, I call them the four "P's" or "pillars" of Sunday School success, or the great "square" by which we may hope to accomplish big things during the coming Sunday School and Christian Endeavor year.

The first of these is "prayer." I realize that prayer is stressed in the Church and all its auxiliary departments, but I feel there is an exceptional application for this thought to our particular situation.

Throughout the world there is sadness in the hearts of many Sunday School workers, because of the death of Dr. Marion Lawrence, which occurred in Portland, Oreg., on the 1st day of May. May I call your attention to his last message, which so fully exemplifies his life and character:

"I wish to express my love for my associates and friends, and pray for them God's richest blessings. We shall meet again. He that liveth and believeth on me shall never die. Jesus said it. I believe it."

It has not been long since I heard this prince of Sunday School workers, in a most powerful address on the subject of "Prayer and Humility," or "Emphasize the great importance of prayer in our Sunday School work, especially at a time when the world is money-mad and motor-mad."

Today, as never before, men in every walk of life are admitting the genuine benefits of prayer. To the Churchman, prayer is an established fact, and the non-Churchman will admit that continuous consecrated desire for any good thing inevitably is always the first step toward acquiring it, especially in a time when we need to withdraw momentarily from the rush and glamor of a restless, complex civilization, and meditate on the finer things of life, for which the Sunday School and the Christian Endeavor Society stand.

Prayer is the foundation-pillar of all Christian vitality; and on this the Sunday School and the Christian Endeavor Society must be built for the future; for without prayer, our efforts have no spiritual value, and our self-communion is empty and bare.

The psalmist has wisely said, "He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High, shall lodge under the shadow of the Almighty."

Try it as a practical thing, not as a theoretical, perfunctory gesture, as some people, even in the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society, would make it; but make a genuine attempt to incorporate prayer into your daily life, and you will soon realize just what an impelling factor it will come to be in your success.

Having instilled the sincerity and mental serenity, which go with prayer, into your schools, my second "P," or "pillar," is "program."

Without program, any Sunday School will be continually in confusion. Aims will never be reached by aimless methods. Then you ask, "What are the aims of the Sunday School?" I would say they are three. First, to enroll every member of your community in the school. Second, to win every member of the school to Christ. Third, to train them for intelligent and effective Christian service.

To realize these ends, you must have a well-defined program. The program should be built around the pupil and not around your organization, or any theory. Dr. Henry F. Cope, a celebrated authority on the Sunday School, says, "Some schools have been conducted on a plan; others meander and often get lost." In which category is your school?

In executing your individual program, I would suggest that you first create expectation on the part of the whole school. This begets interest, and interest begets participation in the program.

Always begin and stop on time. I admire the courage of a young man superintendent in our Convention who invariably opens his school on the minute, regardless of the number present; and then sets his alarm clock for the closing hour, and when the alarm sounds, announces to the school that the session is over, so far as he is concerned. While this plan is rather literal and emphatic, and possibly may not appeal to some of us who are inclined to the haphazard way of doing things; but the idea is splendid. Promptness on the part of leadership is constructive. It gives health and tone to the entire Sunday School.

Then again, I would recommend that you avoid too many outside interests. Many a session has been harmed by its numerous announcements, or by religious travelers presenting their sundry drives and campaigns to raise money, or by unnecessary reports, which rob teachers and pupils of their period of instruction.

And, finally, in putting your program into effect, I say work for results—results in the lives of your pupils; in their personal growth; in their decision for Christ; in their anxiety to express what they learn and feel; in active service.

Three other phases of Sunday School program, which may seem incidental, I consider important.

First, the Sunday School records. It has been said that records are inanimate, but have a terrific amount of energy stored up in them when properly kept and managed.

In the Sunday Schools of the South, I think our scanty and inadequate records constitute one of our outstanding weaknesses. Their importance in building up the school has not yet been discovered. In the business world, they are essential. Why not more essential in an organization which has as its purpose the promotion of Christian service on earth?

The pupil is the center around which the school revolves. How important that he be properly enrolled and classified; and that a careful record of his daily, weekly, and monthly standing be made. Such records have a stimulating effect, both on the pupil and visitors; and tends to establish the Sunday School as a practical and effective organization. They tend to relate the school to the home and the community, and give a basis by which constructive accomplishments are made.

Second, I want to call to your attention for the first time your Sunday School finances.

This phase of the Sunday School is more vital to religious life and growth than is evidenced at first glance. No organization can get along without funds, and especially one with a large educational program. For this reason, there must be a well-considered plan of financing the Sunday School in an orderly, accurate, and business-like way, which give a spiritual grace to giving, without emphasizing the material side of wealth.

This phase of your work should be magnified also on a biblical basis. The Scripture is full of appeals to help build temples and perpetuate the Word of God on the earth.

The tiniest tot and the poorest pupil, along with the oldest and most wealthy member, should be made to feel that his giving is a part of the program of religious living. Dr. George Trull says, "We eat systematically, sleep systematically, work systematically; why should we not give systematically?"

Third, I desire to place particular emphasis on this third and last phase of Sunday School program.

Music. To most of you here, I need not stress music, because the fine singing which we have heard during this and former sessions of the Convention, is more eloquent testimony than I could give; but there still persists in some of our Sunday Schools the feeling that music, and especially instrumental music, has no place in the House of God, and it is to them that I want to carry my message, that children in the Sunday School are born with emotional natures.

Music is one of the strongest avenues known through which the emotions can express themselves and motivate the life of the individual, or group; to conduce that is high and noble. When rightly used, it has an impelling and elevating force next to that of the Word of God itself.

With prayer, and a comprehensive program in effect in your schools and societies, we are ready for my third "P," or pillar, supporting a successful Sunday School.

"Perseverance." Perseverance is an absolute necessity, if we are to accomplish anything worth while in the work of the Church, the Sunday School or the Christian Endeavor. We may pray, plan a program of activities with the utmost patience; but our prayers, planning, and program must be backed by perseverance, for only the prayers of those who persevere and earnestly strive are ever answered.

Our sentiments may be beautiful, our ideals high, but unless they crystalize into action they accomplish nothing. Too many of our well-ordered plans go by default, because of the lack of determined, persistent effort.

If Abraham Lincoln had a middle name, it would have been "Perseverance." He did not jump from the log house to the White House in Washington because he was a brilliant lawyer, or an able statesman. It was that constant, everlasting perseverance that fired his ambition. From splitting rails to determining the destiny of a republic, perseverance was the fundamental principle of Lincoln's efforts.

In the work of the Church, Sunday School, and Christian Endeavor Society, we are to ever keep in mind the goal towards which we are striving; and, like Lincoln, we must not trifle by the way, but diligently press on—we must not grow weary in well doing, but remember that "in due season we shall reap if we faint not."

There will, of course, be setbacks and discouragements. No where do we find them more frequently than in Church work. Those who are at ease in Zion will fail to lend a helping hand; pessimistic souls will assure us it cannot be done, many for whom we most earnestly pray will continue indifferent to our prayers and exortations.

Yet, in spite of it all, we are to labor untiringly on, refusing to falter or retreat, remembering that "all things are possible to him that believeth and persevereth."

In a manufacturing town in England some years ago, a young lady applied to the superintendent of a Sunday School for a class. He told her that he had no vacancies, but that he would be glad to have her get a class of boys together. She acted upon his suggestion, and proceeded to gather a class from the slums of the town. They were a ragged and dirty lot, and the superintendent, seeing their need, purchased each a new suit. The worst in the lot, both in appearance and conduct, was a lad named Bob. After attending for a couple of Sundays, he remained away. The teacher sought him out, and found him in but little better state than when she first persuaded him to come to her class. Yielding to her invitation, he returned again to the Sunday School, but he did not long remain—the impulse to go back to the old path was a little too strong. Discouraged, the teacher told the superintendent that it was no use to further bother with the boy. He, however, persuaded her to try again, saying that he would purchase a third suit if needed. She brought the boy back for the third time, and becoming interested, he remained. Later he united with the Church, and proved himself a valuable worker. He studied for the ministry and became a missionary.

This dirty, ragged, wayward boy was none other than the Rev. Robert Morrison, D. D., one of the greatest of all missionaries. He rendered

A COMPARISON.

In The Christian Sun of March 20, 1924, there was published a list of Churches that had paid 25 per cent and over on total quotas. In the issue of July 17, 1924, a similar list was published. No Church has been added to the list except Chapel Hill, in the North Carolina Conference. I congratulate Chapel Hill on this forward step. Rosemont and Windsor, in Eastern Virginia Conference, have advanced from 25 per cent to 33 1-3 per cent. I congratulate them on this splendid showing.

Many Churches oversubscribed quotas, and many did not subscribe quotas. The Churches on the list have not necessarily paid the published per cent of pledges, but of quotas. The collections have dragged so that we rejoice whenever a Church pays its quota. Those paying quotas should be inspired to push forward and pay all pledges in full by May, 1925.

Let every reader of The Sun study the list of Churches in the issue of July 17th, and then tell us, through The Sun, why these Churches have done as well as they have and why others have not paid 25 per cent of quotas. If the active Churches were confined to one section or county, I would think it was local prosperity, but when I study the list in Eastern Virginia Conference, I am forced to the conclusion that it is, in part, indifference and lack of interest.

Which Church will be the seventh to go 100 per cent, the second 75 per cent, the third 50 per cent, and fifth 33 1-3 per cent?

J. E. West, Chairman.

WHY NOT?

Twice in our history we have had a donomination-wide missionary conference. To those privileged to attend these conferences came visions and purposes which have, doubtless, gone a long way toward making possible some of our subsequent achievements along missionary lines.

Though our visions have not yet all been translated into fact, we have made real progress. May it not, therefore, be wise to revive and perpetuate these gatherings? In order to stabilize them, let us at least tentatively consider the following suggestions:

A missionary council should be formed, composed of such only as have shown in some effective way their interest in the greatest enterprise of the Church. Such a council might be made up of several classes of memberships. For example, a Church, or other organization, or an individual might be allowed to become a life member by the payment of $1,000. This, it may be supposed, would carry with it authority to send a representative entitled to vote in every meeting of the council. It would also carry with it a perpetual right to ten paid-up subscriptions to the Christian Missionary. This class of membership might be called a "founder's membership." A donor's membership should be acknowledged by the payment of $100 a year. This should include ten subscriptions to the magazine and ten votes in the council, carrying proxy rights. A sustaining membership at $50, carrying the same proportionate privileges as the donor's. A contributing membership at $10, with like provision in proportion.

This council should meet quadrennially, alternating with the General Convention every two years. A quadrennial apportionment of $10 per membership on all classes of memberships should be made, so that travel expense might be peeled, thus giving equality of opportunity for attendance. In consideration of the fact that there would probably be many proxies from far-away delegates, the $10 quadrennial fee would go a long way toward meeting necessary travel expense. If found inadequate, it could be increased later.

Funds collected through such a plan of memberships should be equally divided between home and foreign departments. If a Church, individual, or any organization continued taking ten consecutive donor's memberships, such should, at the expiration of the ten-year period, become a founder's membership, and any subsequent donation of $100 a year carry with it an additional donor's membership.

It would seem only fair to those whose constant interest manifested itself in paying regularly every year after their initial payment, that lapsed payments should forfeit membership with voting power until at least two annual payments had been resumed consecutively. Perhaps initial payments of but one year might wisely carry with them full rights of membership. Possibly, too, it would be wise to allow sustaining and contributing memberships on an equitable basis. These matters would, of course, all have to be worked out by a careful committee. Would it, or would it not, be wise to delegate to such a council the election of our mission boards?

It should be understood that this whole plan is to be considered as supplementing, rather than substituting, present contributions to missionary purposes. The initial payments in every case should carry with them a statement that it is an excess contribution over what was given the previous year. With this provision, would it not be safe, sane, and practical to lay aside 75 per cent of these net contributions to be used as an endowment fund? The remaining 25 per cent, I would suggest, be used exclusively as a loan fund for constructive work, such as procuring real estate. This loan fund to be loaned without interest except as a penalty for lapsed return payments. A much larger constructive program could thus be entered upon almost immediately.

A free discussion of these suggestions may possibly result in our mission boards, at their next annual session, formulating a better program to be studied between now and the meeting of our next General Convention.

Unless we shall take a long look ahead, and plan for the years whose fruitage many of us may never live to see in the flesh, coming generations may have graver problems to face than those which cause us painful reflections. P. S. S.

A CHRISTIAN EDUCATION PILGRIMAGE.

By Hermon Eldredge.

IV. THE WORLD IN GLASGOW.

"Oh! Lord, let Glasgow prosper by the preaching of the Word," is the motto of this second city of the British empire, with a population of over one and a quarter millions of people and a history which reaches back to the days when Rome was in her glory. As in the earlier days, it was the point of the gathering and the fierce warfare of the clan. So in later years it was a center of religious revival and missionary extension. From Glasgow, David Livingstone went to his far African home quest, and the one-room home in Blantyre is still shown where this great Christian statesman was born and lived his boyhood days.

We arrived in Glasgow the day before the opening of the World's Convention, and Secretary Landes, of the World's Association, had a job for me before the first meal was over. It was a great privilege to have personal and friendly acquaintance with the leaders of this great world movement. But I find there are disadvantages as well, for this personal fellowship gained through these years of association in the State field work of Pennsylvania makes me available as a "pinch hitter," and while I came here to see and hear and learn and to give one address, I find that I now have three addresses to give and am to act on two world committees, all of which takes time out of an easy convention-going.

But compensation comes with such duties as well as honors, and so I find myself with a platform ticket to all sessions and admittance and exit by private entrance with the lords and ladies, and quartered at the Grand Hotel (which is more grand in name than in reality), with the officers of the World's Association, which, with its intimate contact, is an education in itself. I am listed on the program as "representative of the Board of Christian Education of the Christian Church," and that appendage has brought me much questioning and much opportunity to explain regarding both the Christian Church and our new plan of Christian education, which I am informed on my landing at Liverpool has now been adopted by the Methodist Episcopal Church in its quadrennial general conference at Springfield, Mass.

But the Convention is on! Fifty-one nations are represented in St. Andrew's great auditorium as Lord Pentland, of London, president of the British Sunday School Council, announces the opening hymn to be led by the Scottish choir of 500 voices and backed by 4,000 delegates. And what could be more appropriate than the words of that opening hymn to the tune of "Old Hundred."

"All people that on earth do dwell
Sing to the Lord with cheerful voice;
Him serve with mirth, His praise forthtell,
Come ye before Him and rejoice."

And as the old hymn's cadence and melody rose and fell with those slow, sustained notes, which are peculiar to the Scottish solemn rendering of hymns, there was many a delegate who was compelled to hide his emotions and to adjust his throat conditions before joining in the next verse.

Then a prayer by the dean of the Glasgow Cathedral, rich in its content and deep in its spiritual longing, followed by a selection from "The Messiah" by the great choir, and the Convention was open for business.

We had been received as the World's Executive Committee and as denominational leaders, in a private reception by Lord and Lady Aberdeen, and now the marquis formally greets the whole Convention, and our response to his typically Scottish welcome is voiced by Sir Harold Mackintosh, of Halifax (England), and Mr. Paul Sturtevant, of America.

And now the opening sessions close with a great spiritual uplift in the sermon of Dr. P. G. Thompson, of the United Free Church of Scotland, on the "Uplift of Christ," which at once exalted and humbled us and sent us to our Scottish quarters with stirred, but quiet, hearts.

We were astonished to find as we left the fully lighted hall at 9 P. M. that it was broad daylight on the street, and that the sun was shining over the housetops. We then began to inquire and to study our maps and to find that we are far north in the last of June and in the longest days in the year. At 11 o'clock at night you can read your fine-print New Testament on the streets of Glasgow, and at 12 you are in a deep twilight, which only lasts three or four hours. And then comes the dawn and the light of another day. It is strange to see children on the playground between 10 and 11 o'clock at night playing in full daylight, as I saw them the other night. The street lights are not put on here until 11 P. M. this time of the year. I studied up the world map and latitude and found, to my great surprise, that in matter of latitude, that Glasgow was on a line with the Hudson Bay and British Columbia, and was as far oorth of the city of Toronto, Canada as Toronto is north of the Gulf of Mexico. This means long, light summer days and night, and long, dark winters. But at least it gives us a strange feeling as we go to bed at 10 or 11 o'clock by daylight and get up at 7 with the sun hours high in the heaven. I stayed on the streets one night until after midnight to get a touch of this "twilight night," and a London paper publishes photos of Northern Scotland (north of Glasgow) taken in the open field and towns at midnight, and they are clear and distinct illustrations.

We are up and at it again, and join the throngs on the street, pressing toward the mecca of St. Andrew's Hall, for hundreds could not secure entrance last night. Delegates have the right of way, but some sections of the hall are most desirable for seeing and hearing, and the crowd learns that and comes early.

Rev. A. S. Inch, D. D., moderator of the General Assembly of the United Free Church of Scotland, with his wide, flowing lace cuffs and knee breeches and showy garters, and his portly dimensions and genial personality, is the presiding officer of the session, and introduces my friend, Dr. Robert MacGowan, of Pittsburgh, who conducts the devotions in an inspirational way. Some of my friends in the Church at home will remember Dr. MacGowan as the Scotch Presbyterian minister who served with me in Camp Upton and tried to give a "Bobbie Burns Night" to the motley group of East Side New York boys of a score of nationalities. We met again here and laughed, and almost cried, as we went over some of those days again. Although now an American, Scotland is his native soil.

But we are a real "Christian League of Nations" as we sit here in St. Andrew's this morning and listen to greetings from the King of England and the Prime Minister of Japan, and the President of the United States and the King of Norway, and a long list of names less known, and then after a magnificent address by Rev. Robert Hopkins, of St. Louis, on "Christian Education the Hope of Civilization," the roll call of the nations begins, with ten minutes for each response. Burma, Ceylon and India reply at this session, and then the greatest address of the Convention (to my mind) was delivered by Dr. W. C. Poole, minister of Christ Church, London, and successor to Dr. F. B. Meyer, so well known and loved in America as well as in England. I do not dare to begin to even outline this address, but have been promised a copy of it, and I am sure it is bound to sift through my thought and address in our Church in the coming days, and I shall try to have it published. It is a call to the Church to lay a new emphasis on holding children instead of the emphasis of hunting adults and to claim life at its beginning instead of attempting to reclaim it at its end. The emphasis has been on hunting lost sheep, and we have neglected to tend the lambs. We must continue to seek the lost to the limit, but our great task is to make the fold secure and keep the flock from straying.

But I must not attempt more. Even this may misrepresent, rather than present, the thought of this great world preacher. Dr. Poole was born in Australia, moved to Ameica, and became a naturalized citizen, preached in Oakland, Calif., some years before his call and removal to this great London pulpit. He is an American citizen, minister of a London Church, and was yesterday elected the new president of the World's Sunday School Association, to succeed Justice MacLarren, of Toronto, Canada.

Thursday afternoon was filled with departmental conferences in four great Churches, and in the evening the delegates were given a reception in the great fine art galleries by the Lord Provost (Mayor) of Glasgow and his retinue of office bearers.

The lord provost, in his gorgeous robes, accompanied by lords and ladies and ministers and educators, were a grand procession to behold. The civic welcome was given by the lord provost, the Church welcome by Dr. John White, of the Baron Parish Church, of Scotland; the educational welcome by Sir Donald MacAlister, principal of the University of Glasgow, and then we were most delightfully entertained with "high tea," consisting of tea and a hundred "knick-knacks," and then by a most exquisite rendering of Scotch songs by a chorus of fifty voices. It was a formal and pretentious and awe-inspiring sight to begin with, but a very informal and delightful hour and a half following. The Scotch are good entertainers, and their music is really beyond praise. "The Banks and Braes of Bonnie Doon," "Highland Laddie" and a score of selections, ending with "Auld Lang Syne," will ever be sweeter and richer to thousands from all the world who meet here, and the stately psalms and tunes in the Churches on the Sabbath Day have an appeal and a satisfaction which our more "peppy" singing can never even approach. We may criticize as we will the slow-going Scotch, and wish we could move them out of their ease sometimes, but it has only taken me a week among them to feel that they seem to be getting more out of life and living than we do, and much of our fancied advancement may be fancied indeed—who can tell?

But I find myself at the limit of the amount of "copy" I should send for this installment, and the Convention has only fairly opened. I must boil down in my next—the subject is too great and alluring, and leads one on to unexpected and unintentional lengths.

May I only say that I have had many letters from our Church on my departure. I would like to write in detail to many, but I am busier than I expected to be, and hope these articles will be considered as personal messages to friends in all sections of the Church whose faces I can see and whose friendship and fellowship I value most highly.

Glasgow, Scotland.

On June 30th, Dr. Chas. E. Edmunds was installed as provost of Johns Hopkins University. For fifteen years, Dr. Edmunds was president of Canton Christian College, Canton, China. He has also been prominent in famine relief and prevention. It means much to the educational world when great Christian leaders come to the directorship of our universities. It means that those institutions will have the Christian spirit emanating from their head and saving education from itself. Men educated in the Christian way are the hope of the world. The Christian college mothered education. Today it faces a new task. It must save the child it mothered from itself. Parents should prayerfully consider when selecting a college for their children.

When a man commits his secrets to the radio he has the wide world for an audience.

OUR PLEDGES
Men and Millions Sacred, Solemn and Binding.

These obligations were made through the Church to the Kingdom of God and to all that pertains to building up that Kingdom in the world, so far as our Christian Church is concerned. As Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., has so pertinently pointed out: "A Christian can no more drop his pledges than he can drop his prayers or his Church membership. Misfortune may make it impossible to meet financial obligations--'When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both' (Luke 7:42)--but not till 'they had nothing to pay.' Obligations to God are as binding as obligations to men, and God will help those who try to keep their pledges."

Many are making great sacrifices to meet these obligations and pay these pledges. Is your Church on this list? If not, let's do our best to get it there. If there, let's get it in first place.

MONDAY.

THE AWAKENING OF THE SOUL WITH THE WEEK.

"Put on the new man."—Eph. 4:20-26.

Read the story of St. Augustine and note how strangely he became a Christian. He had been brought up in a Christian home, but later was swept away in unbelief. He forsook the gospel and became an infidel. But still he was dissatisfied. He could not get away from his mother's prayers, and the grace of God still followed him.

In the summer of the year of 39, as he was walking in a garden at Milan, he found an old Bible lying on a rustic seat. He sat down, picked up the Book and read. His eyes fell upon these words: "It is high time to awake out of sleep." He read on these words, "Let us walk honestly . . ." "and not in rioting and drunkenness, not in chambering and wantonness, not in strife and in envying." He was leading a dissipated life. Something rebuked him and seemer to say: "Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ!" These words followed him, haunted him, until he came back to God; and what a man of God he was!

Let us check up on ourselves this morning and see if we are "short" anywhere, unfaithful in anything, if there is not some voice calling unto us to awake to newness of life.

Prayer.—Our Father, we give Thee thanks, out of the joy of our hearts, that we are not only in the hollow of Thy hands, but in the bend of Thy arm. Oh, help us to fear Thee, trust Thee, and awaken us to the fullness of Thy grace and all our opportunities in Thee concern.

TUESDAY.

LET PAST EXPERIENCES TEACH US WHAT TO AVOID.

"One thing I do, forgetting the things which are behind, and stretching forward to the things which are before, I press on towards the goal."—Phil. 3:13-14.

Why worry about the past?

You have made mistakes, you call yourself a fool, and constantly you are thinking what would have been the result if you had not done thus and so. You think so much about what is past and gone that you think too little of the future, which is more important. You cannot do anything with the past, so why not forget it and save for the good lessons it has taught you, and by which you should profit, look ahead.

Every mistake you made in the past reduces the number possible for you to make in the future. Therefore, you are better prepared to meet the future than you would have been having no mistakes to teach you.

This is one of the thoughts which should give you the greatest courage. You know of your vulnerable points, so pick up and buck up. The man who has had smooth sailing with some one to push him into the right port every time he starts out on a period of effort, knows nothing of the pitfalls, the rocks or the varying winds which may send him astray.

It is a blessing to know and understand what to avoid and thus make a straighter path for the top. (Copyright, 1924, International Feature Service, Inc.)

Prayer.—Father, forgive us and accept us in Thy grace. Give us courage to forget the mistakes of the past, save to profit by them, and let Thy light guide us unto a perfect day. In His name. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

HAPPINESS THROUGH PEACE.

"Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God."—Matt. 5:9.

The entrance of Jesus in the life brings peace to the soul. It is His gift as He salutes the newborn soul with "My peace I give unto you." And as quickly as His voice is heard and the gife received, there springs up within the heart happiness. Envy, jealousy, hatred, war, all pass out when peace comes in. Happiness through peace is an individual matter. It begins in our own hearts, but it does not stop there. It takes in those nearest us, and finally reaches the uttermost parts of the earth. The Jews were taught to pray for the peace of Jerusalem. Jesus taught us to pray, "Thy kingdom come." And His kingdom is one of peace. One of the greatest needs of the world today is peace, and the smallest saint can at best pray for it. Thus the way to happiness is open to all. All Christians have had some experience in making peace. There was the peace we had with God when we were justified by faith; or when we tried to reconcile two offended brothers, or when we helped a soul to make peace with God. We remember, too, that happiness always followed. Sometimes when we try to make peace between offended parties they are so stubborn we often fail. It is always easier when one member is anxious for peace. In the great conflict between God and lost souls, one member of the party wishes peace; for "He willeth not the death of any." Here is our opportunity for service and happiness.

Prayer.—Our Father, grant unto us the peace that passeth understanding and help us to labor and pray for the peace of the world. Amen.—J. E. White.

THURSDAY.

THE SPIRIT OF LOVE AND FORGIVENESS.

"If thine enemy hunger, feed him." "Forgive and ye shall be forgiven."—Luke 6:37.

Life is to be shared with others. What we possess is to be shared with them, and only as we do this do we realize the meaning of service, the true joys of life, and what real Christianity is.

From our bounty, we are to remember our friends, the outcast, the homeless, and orphaned, and make ours a channel of fellowship. And don't forget the enemy. We are to share our bread with him. Love is to take its revenge by kindness. Retaliation will never overcome nor win. We all—yes, the world—needs to learn this lesson. Let us slay our hates with tenderness and tears.

Prayer.—Our Father, direct us in our thought of others, that we may never do an injustice to any one, and that we may have love and fellow-feeling for those whose lot is harder than our own. Teach us to be humble, loving and forgiving towards all, especially our enemies. In Christ's name we ask it. Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE HIGHEST TYPES OF SOUL-SAVING.

"Andrew . . . first findeth his own brother Simon." "He brought him to Jesus."—Jon. 1:40-42.

Very little do we know about Andrew. He is mentioned a few times, but almost without exception in connection with his brother. He is known and loved and revered for one thing. He brought his brother, Simon Peter, to the feet of Jesus. He was the first Christian missionary.

The incident has been the basis of innumerable sermons. The wisdom of men has never been able to improve on the method employed by Andrew. He still stands as the exponent of the best and highest type of evangelism. It is the quiet work of the Church's Andrews that brings the kingdom nearer. True converts have been made by sermons preached with power, but the most satisfactory work has been done by men who went out quietly and touched their fellows and brought them to Jesus.

Few of us may be like Simon Peter, whose words bring the multitudes. Most of us are the Church's Andrews. We are destined to live quiet and secluded lives. It should be our hope that we may do our work well, and that, as Andrew led Simon, so we may lead those with powers and abilities which we ourselves have not, to the feet of our Lord. If we do this, we shall be called blessed.—Rev. John A. McAfee.

Prayer.—By one of the parents, asking that we, too, may be inspired by love and loyalty to Christ, and may be the means of leading others to accept Him. In His name. Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE CHRISTIAN'S SUPREME TEST.

"By their fruits ye shall know them."—Matt. 7:15-20.

Earnest Christian people have been divided on this test of Christian life. Some think that feeling, emotions and religious thrills are the test. This often leads to despair because feelings are not always exultant, and when not so, these think their religion has fallen from them. We have no warrant to judge our religion by our feelings.

Some think that belief in a creed is the supreme test. This also is false. There is bitter controversy in creed and over theological subjects. Such run the grave risk of losing the spirit and urging the letter of the law. The Master positively disclaims such a view, saying: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father." The test is simple. Keep His commandments. All else will be added. He who keeps His commandments shall abide in His love.

Prayer.—Our Father, we pray Thee to consecrate our lives, by every practical means within our reach, to the enlargement of Christ's kingdom in our hearts and in the world. In His name we ask it. Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE SOBER MIND.

"But to think soberly."—Rom. 12:1-5.

America, by the grace of God, is on the way to become a sober nation, and is physically cleaner and stronger than at any time in her history. Christianity calls men to be sober in mind as well as in body. Paul reminds the Christians at Rome that they must not allow the mind to become intoxicated with egotism and pride. It is a fitting message for our time.

There are drunken thinkers as well as drunken drinkers. The world is passing through an aftermath of drunken thinking and brutal action. The nations have been drinking the wine of lust, of power and place, which had turned the world into a shambles. We need the sober mind in international affairs. Kipling warned his own nation against the intoxicated mind when he wrote in his "Recessional":

"If, drunk with sight of power, we loose
Wild tongues that have not Thee in awe,
Such boastings as the Gentiles use,
Or lesser breeds without the law—
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!"

Let the Church, too, think soberly. The world needs it. We must not be drunk with emotionalism or intellectualism. Let us be sound in all things, yet broad and balanced, having the mind of Christ which is the mind of sacrifice, brotherhood and peace.—Rev. A. E. Gregory.

DEARS:

When you try for the contest, will you remember to write on your letter and on your envelope you send it in "Story Contest" and your age and name. Some of you say: "This is the first time I have written." Well, gracious me! Don't be afraid to write to me, if that is the reason you haven't written, for I am not a green-eyed monster or a Hallowe'en witch, or any of those "scarey" things that you should be afraid of. So, dears, if you do not quite understand the contest, just sit down now and ask me a million questions if you need to ask that many.

Oh! but just listen! One day during the last contest, I got twelve—yes, twelve—letters from my "Kiddies." Wasn't that fine? And now, on this new contest, I want you each one to write a beautiful story—and, what? Yes, you can, dears. Don't dare say you can't. There! I knew you would try; and trying is half the battle.

Gee! but it's good to know it's a whole month till we have to—oh! that's right! I forgot that you just can't hardly wait till school begins. I like to go to school, too; but aren't we glad we can play, and swim, and work on this new contest for another month? Are you glad? Tell me in a little letter real soon.

Good-by now, Sunshine Kiddies.

LITTLE STORY CONTEST.

Take your time, and the first sentence in the paragraph, and write a story for your own page. Here is the block for the story:

A little Girl wanted—to go home; to play in the sand; to play with stars.

She went out to find them, and came to a—park; to a pond; to a city.

She could not find any stars, so she—went home; walked on; sat and cried.

She came to a—big tree; brook in the woods.

She found no stars there, so she—went home; she went on; she wept.

Soon she met—some friends; some fairies; some men.

They told her to—dry her clothes; do some work; dance with them.

She still did not find—her way home; the fairies; one star.

Then the fairies told her—to go home; to come again; just what to do.

Soon she found—four friends; a star; a horse.

Then she came to a river—edge of the sea; a big city.

"No feet" was—a flower; a fish.

He carried her to—the town; the stairs without steps.

He carried her to—climb; take the stars home.

All of a sudden—she saw; the stars; she let go.

Bang! She found herself—in the water; in her own bed; slipping.

She had been—far away; dreaming.

HAROLD'S PRESENT.

Harold was a little boy who liked to have his own way. He found it very hard to obey.

It was mother's birthday. On her plate at the breakfast table she found several presents. She said that the nicest one was the present that Harold gave her. This was just a slip of paper. On it was written: "Dear Mother, I love you. I am going to mind you, just as soon as you speak to me, all the year."

It was a lovely sunny day. Harold was playing by the brook. He was trying to catch some of the little fish. "Harold!" He heard his mother call. "Oh! dear, I will pretend I don't hear," he thought. Then, "I said I would mind right off, and I will," he said. He ran quickly to the house. "Here I am, Mother," he called.

"Harold," said his mother, "there is smoke down by the railroad track. Run and see if there's any one there. I am sorry your father is away. Be careful, Harold."

The little boy ran down to the track. No one was in sight. The long wooden bridge was burning. It was almost time for a train. The bridge was burning under the track. It was a covered bridge. Perhaps the men on the train would not see the fire.

The nearest house was two miles away. It was too late to go for help. Harold would not have time to tell his mother. He could hear the train coming. He must flag the train himself. He took off his little red sweater. He ran along the track toward the train. He held his red sweater up as high as he could and waved it.

The engineer saw him and whistled for him to get off the track. But Harold stood still and waved his red sweater. Then the engineer knew that something was the matter. He stopped the train. The train men hurried to Harold. He told them the bridge was on fire. Some of the passengers got off to see what was the matter.

One of these was Harold's father. The bridge was so badly burned that it was not safe to cross. The men put the fire out. They thanked Harold for stopping the train, and gave him enough money to buy a nice watch.

"I am so glad that I minded Mother right off," Harold told his Father as they went home after the fire was out.

"A good many lives might have been lost if you hadn't minded quickly," Father answered.

GRACE HATHAWAY.

THE KITE THAT WENT TO SUNDAY SCHOOL.

The kite was just like any other kite. One would never have thought, to look at its neat frame made by grandfather, the newspaper pasted on the frame by Bruce, and the tail made by Little Sister, that it was going to have such a great adventure. But the adventure started with the kite's tail, and all because Bruce let Little Sister make it. She was able to find small bits of paper to tie into the string, but she was not old enough to weigh the tail properly.

When the two took the kite out to the top of the hill one windy day and Bruce held it high to catch the wind, off it sailed. But what did the kite do but tangle in a tree? There it was, tied fast by its tail to a branch, which was too high for Bruce to reach.

"Never mind," he said to Little Sister; "tomorrow will be the Sunday when you are going with me for the first time to Sunday School. You will have colored crayons and sand and a nice time singing."

The kite stayed there in the tree until Tom came along. Tom was taller than Bruce and lived on the other side of the hill. When he saw the kite, he climbed part of the way up the tree and untied it carefully. As he brought it down, he looked at the tail and then seemed surprised.

"All right, I will!" Tom said out loud, just as if the kite had spoken to him, which, of course, it had not.

Then Tom raised the kite high and was going to fly it, but the kite had plans of its own. It tugged itself out of Tom's hands and went over the hill and down toward town.

The kite flew on and on, until it came to the corner of Main Street, where Andy sold newspapers. The kite stopped on the top of the lamppost beside Andy's paperstand and trailed its long tail down over the newspapers. Andy looked at it; then he stood up on a box and took it down.

"I think I can. I'd like to, anyway," he exclaimed, just as if the kite had said something to him.

Then, because he so seldom had time for play, Andy ran a little way up Main Street flying the kite. But the kite still had other plans. It pulled itself out of Andy's hands and flew on, and on, toward the park.

The kite flew on, and on, until it came to where Pauline was feeding the squirrels in the park. Pauline was a new girl in the town, and did not know Bruce or Little Sister, or Tom or Andy. The kite stopped in a bush beside her, and she was so glad to see it. She took it carefully out of the bush and looked at its nice, long tail.

"I will, dear kite!" she said, just as if the kite had said something to her, which, of course, it had not. "And, until then, will you stay with me and play a little while?"

Pauline took the kite's string in her hand and ran up and down the path in the park with it, but a gust of wind took the kite away from her. This time it was only a speck in the sky, and did not come low enough for any one to catch it all the rest of the day.

The next morning, Bruce took Little Sister to Sunday School. At the door of the Sunday School room were several new pupils whom no one knew. They were Tom and Andy and Pauline.

Just before the last bell rang, something happened. The Church sexton brought in a very torn and muddy kite, which he had just taken off the Church-yard wall. He was going to throw it away, but Little Sister held out her hands.

"That's our kite!" she said.

Tom and Andy and Pauline also exclaimed, when they saw it, "That's the kite with the Sunday School tail!"

This was very, very odd! They all looked at the poor, draggled kite, and then they saw that Little Sister, not being able to read, had tied her Sunday School invitation to the very end of the kite's tail. It was a colored card with a picture of a child on his way to Sunday School. Under the picture it said:

"We want you, too. Won't you come with me?"

Tom had read this, Andy had read it, and Pauline had read it. Each had thought that it was a Sunday School kite, flying to invite them to attend. And as none of them were enrolled, they had decided to come to Sunday School.

It was a joke! But it was splendid to have Little Sister and Tom and Andy and Pauline as new members. The kite was put away in the Sunday School treasure-box with honor, because of what it had done.—Little Learners' Paper.

Taking Life Easy.

"I suppose Henry is still taking life easy?" said the woman in the wagon.

"Yes," answered her neighbor on the road, who was carrying an armful of wood; "Henry has only two regrets in life. One is that he has to wake up to eat, and the other that he has to quit eating to sleep."

Subject: "The First Disciples of Jesus."

Golden Text: "Jesus saith unto them, Follow me."

Lesson: John 1:35-51.

Devotional Reading: Proverbs 3:13-18.

Reference Material: Matt. 4:18-22, 9:9; Mark 1:14-20; Luke 5:1-11.

The Master was beginning to attract attention. Although he had not begun His public ministry in the real sense, and in spite of the fact that He deliberately tried to avoid detracting from John's work, a few of the more thoughtful and earnest men of His day were beginning to see in Him something that they did not see even in John the Baptist. It seemed to be that indefinable something called unconscious influence, for it says that John looked upon Jesus as "He walked" and saw in Him the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world. How often men are attracted or repelled by the way we walk; that is, by our manner of life among them!

There was with John two of His disciples, one of them Andrew by name. These disciples felt an irresistible attraction for Jesus, and they followed Him—perhaps they knew not why. But Jesus, with that response to life which always characterized His ministry, turned to them and asked them, perhaps pointedly, and yet most assuredly friendly, what they sought. The fact of the matter was that they did not know what they did seek, and they simply asked Him where He abode. Perhaps they wanted to know where to find Him in case they felt disposed to learn more of Him later.

Jesus' answer is suggestive. He simply said, "Come, and ye shall see." He simply invited these two men, earnest seekers, to come and see, to learn for themselves. He was willing to stake His ministry on His ability to meet the needs of these and all other men, and in a first-hand way. When will the Church and the ministry learn that if Christ be lifted up, He will draw all men unto Himself?

The men came and abode with Him that day. We do not know what Jesus said or did. But it must have been good to be there. It is quite likely that He told them something of His mission and His plans, and awakened them to some of the finer things of life. But we do not know. We do know this, however: He made such a profound impression on them that they remembered even the hour of that wonderful season with the Master. It is always a memorable hour when a man meets the Master.

One of the two which heard John speak and followed Jesus was Andrew. He immediately set out to find his brother, Simon Peter. Andrew was not only the first disciple; he was an ideal disciple. Having found in Jesus that which satisfied his own deeper spiritual needs, he went out to tell others. And he started at the place where he was. He did not have a sudden, wild desire to do something for a man on the other side of the world; he wanted to win the man next to him first. And he brought his brother Simon Peter to Jesus. What a day's work that was! One almost wonders what would have been the course of Christianity if Andrew had fallen down on his job like so many of us fall down on our jobs. For be it remembered that winning others to Christ is not the business of the minister or the evangelist alone; it is the business of every professing Christian. And the Church of Christ will never make much progress in evangelizing the world until it develops on the part of the members a sense of responsibility for this great work.

When Jesus went forth on the morrow, he found Philip, and invited him to follow Him. Jesus did not require men to subscribe to a creed in order to become His disciples; He simply required devotion to Him. When will we learn that the heart of Christianity is loyalty or devotion to Christ? And Philip, having found in Christ that which he needed most, went out to find some one else. He found Nathaniel, who was, perhaps, Bartholomew, and told him that they had found the Christ. Nathaniel was a little skeptical, especially when Philip told him that this Christ had come out of Nazareth. But Philip did not argue the matter. He knew what so many people have never learned—folks cannot be argued into the kingdom. He simply invited Nathaniel to "come and see" Here again this early disciple felt that Jesus Christ was His own greatest argument. And when Nathaniel came and saw, he was conquered.

Some Teaching Points.

1. Devotion to Christ is the primary thing in discipleship.
2. Jesus Christ is the chief argument for Christianity.
3. Jesus honors the honest seeker.
4. Jesus Christ deserves the title, "Master of Men."
5. Personal work in winning others to Christ is most effective evangelism.
6. Professing Christians are responsible for winning others.
7. People usually remember the hour when they meet Jesus Christ on life's highway.
8. The place to begin evangelism is the place where you are.
9. Jesus sees the finer possibilities of those who are brought to Him.
10. Not argument, but sympathy and love, are irresistible.
11. He who seeks in sincerity shall find.
12. The soul on fire ignites other souls.

HOW JESUS TREATED ENEMIES.

Topic: "In His Steps. How Jesus Treated Enemies."

Scripture Lesson: Luke 23:34; Matt. 5:43-48.

(Consecration Meeting.)

Daily Readings: Mon., July 28, Old laws and new.—Matt. 5:38-42. Tues., July 29, Rebukes to foes.—Matt. 23:13-39. Wed., July 30, Keeping out of snares.—Matt. 16:1-4. Tues., July 31, Forgiving His foes.—Luke 23:32-38. Fri., Aug. 1, Patient in tribulation.—Luke 23: 1-25. Sat., Aug. 2, Blessing for foes.—Acts 3:19-26.

Love is the greatest avenger of wrong that can be used. Jesus distinctly divided the lines of sinners and followers of Him when He preached to the people the great Sermon on the Mount. He gave them a new version of the law. "For if you love those that love you, what reward have you? Do not even the publicans (sinners) the same?" His followers took this message and made a dividing issue between Christian and sinner. That line of division still exists today, and that message is ringing in the hearts of millions. "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, that you may be called the children of your Father in heaven," He told the multitudes, and those who follow in His steps today believe that gospel and live it. What more is required of the Christian than of the sinner? Sinners love those that do good unto them, their friends, but the requirement of the Christian is that he should love not only his friends, but to love his enemies also. It is not necessary for Christians to love the deeds of the sinners, neither their pleasures; but they should love the person, the man or woman whom God gives light and life. Very few people are in perfect harmony with all people. Neither was Jesus. He lived His life trying to help the people who opposed Him, and when they had nailed Him to the cross, He prayed for them—His enemies: "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." Paul, to the Romans, said: "If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink: for in so doing, you will heap coals of fire upon his head." Was this a good gospel? Is it practical in your experience? Ask others to try it, and they will be following in Jesus' footsteps.

HOW NATIVE CHRISTIANS GIVE.

Replying to the question sometimes asked by those not familiar with actual conditions on the mission field, "Isn't it time the natives gave something themselves?" the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions makes the following statement about the native Congregational Churches in the countries where it is at work:

"More than one-third of India's people earn only 1 cent a day. Grown men say, 'I wouldn't care if I could get one good meal in two days.' A 'good meal' means only a quantity of black, coarse bread, yet the native Christians in our fields there gave $37,000 last year. Native Christians in China contributed $57,000, where labor averages twenty-five cents a day. Japanese Christians associated with us gave $180,000. The members of the Church in Kusaie, one of the Caroline Island group, sent the board $400 last August. Their missionaries, the Baldwin sisters, brought to their attention the acute need of the board. Poor, pitifully poor, though those natives are, of their own will they made the gift. Miss Elizabeth Baldwin wrote, 'Some of our dear girls said to me as they put their small offering into my hand, "It is all that I have." ' "—Missionary Review.

HAPPY HOME.

The revival began here July 13th and closed July 18th. Rev. J. S. Carden, of Durham, was with us at the beginning and did excellent preaching. He is a good preacher. His messages were plain, instructive and inspiring Christians and inviting to the unsaved. Bro. Carden renewed his friendships from last year's visit and made many new friends. May the Lord bless his labors of love elsewhere.

Miss Fleta Cox, a daughter of the late lamented Rev. L. I. Cox, rendered valuable music during the meeting, all of which we greatly appreciate. She made many friends during her brief stay.

The farmers were busy in their fields, but the congregation grew from day to day. The interest was very manifest from the first to the end. We had the co-operation of other denominations, which was very pleasant. It was the most spiritual meeting I have been in for quite a while.

There were eleven professions, including reclamations, six additions to the local Church, and the Church membership was greatly strengthened spiritually. Thank the good Lord for all that was accomplished. L. L. WYRICK, a great service to the cause of Christianity by his translation of the Bible into the Chinese language. What a splendid reward!

Had this superintendent and his faithful teacher lacked perseverance, Dr. Morrison might have been lost to the cause of missions.

I am confident that if those of us who are engaged in religious work, whether in the Sunday School or the Christian Endeavor, were as determined to realize our objective as men in the business and professional world are to realize theirs, the result would be different. Now, if we have only thought and dreamed, and perhaps been spiritually refreshed at this Convention, nothing will result therefrom.

If, on the contrary, we have not only caught a vision of a greater, better and a more efficient Sunday School and Christian Endeavor, within the bounds of our Conference; but have consecrated our lives anew to the work of the Master, determined to persevere in the same as never before, and to heed the admonition of the Apostle Paul to "Watch ye, stand fast, be strong; press on to perfection," our next Convention, though three in number, will be a time of great rejoicing. We will come up to our respective Conventions as victors, bearing the trophies of conquest. Shall it not be so?

With these three substantial pillars—prayer, program and perseverance—firmly fixed in the walls of your Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society, we are ready for the fourth pillar that completes the solid foundation of the four square walls of Sunday School success.

Last, but not least, is the pillar of "progress."

The history of this Convention is a history of progress. In 1919 we held our first State S. S. and C. E. Convention with the Shallow Well Christian Church, with ninety-two Sunday Schools enrolled, 47 sending delegates and representatives to this Convention. Our total membership was 4,483, with an average attendance of 1,859. The amount of money raised for all purposes was $5,190.53. At this Convention there were 9 Christian Endeavor Societies reporting—a membership of 305, no tithers, no experts, and the amount of money raised for all purposes was $164.67.

Last year, just five years later, at Catawba Springs Church, the number of schools enrolled was 104, with a total enrollment of 10,555, and an average attendance of 3,825, while the amount of money raised for all purposes was $11,295.54. At this Convention, we had 24 Christian Endeavor Societies, with a membership of 790 (655 active); tithers, 118; experts, 27; and the total amount of money raised was $491.70.

These statistics give us an increase of only 12 Sunday Schools in the State during the five years, but it is gratifying to note that we have more than doubled our enrollment, average attendance, and finances, in both Sunday School and Christian Endaevor; and we feel rather proud of the 118 tithers and 27 Christian Endeavor experts reported last year, as a beginning of real stewardship and a greater Christian Endeavor efficiency.

While this progress in membership, attendance, and funds raised is encouraging, I do not consider it as important as the progress we have made in service in Christian education, which has grown out of this Convention, our annual Chautauqua, and similar institutions. This Convention will be the last State Convention, as the Conference has been subdivided, and this Convention next year will meet as three separate Conventions.

Whether wise or unwise, this division is a fact which must be accepted as an individual responsibility of the various schools, and each school must be loyal to its Convention in continuing the fine progress that the State Convention has enjoyed during the past five years.

In a final word, let me urge you to carry these four "P's," or pillars—prayer, program, perseverance, and progress—back to your school or society, with a new detemination to stand for the highest and best in Christian service. Build them into the four walls of your Church, your Sunday School and your Christian Endeavor Society; and as you enter for service and worship of the meek and lowly Nazarene, may you see in outstanding letters "prayer" written before your eyes, and on either side "program" and "perseverance," and as you rise to go hence, see written in flaming letters over the door, "progress," and with this in your heart, resolve to "go forward" and to be "doers of the Word, and not hearers only." Let your progress not be limited to members, dollars and cents, but stress also the personal development of your individual members.

It is for them that the Sunday School and the Christian Endeavor Society exist; it is in them that it finds its justification—therefore, use "prayer, program, perseverance and progress" to enrich your members spiritually, for in this you will find a crown of life.

Raleigh, N. C.

She Kept Her Head.

Their boat was drifting idly, the sun shone above, and the sea was serene, while she was sitting snugly. Then he proposed.

From the opposite end of the craft she gazed at him calmly. Then she said:

"As a matter of common sense, realizing that we are in this boat, on water more than fifty feet deep, and if you were going to act as you should act if I accepted you, we would be capsized, I will decline your proposal at this moment; but, George, row as fast as you can to the shore and ask me again." The girl will make a good wife. —Industrial School Journal.

Building and loan associations in twelve central Ohio counties completed their fiscal year with a gain of more than $8,000,000 in assets. This is an evidence of a prosperous condition among wage-earners and small merchants, who, of all classes, are the ones who save in building and loan association.

But that is not all. With the increase in assets comes the report that there is a decrease in the amount of cash on hand, because the money has been loaned out to home-builders, and the associations cannot supply all the demand for loans for home erection.

Money that formerly went over the bar, now goes into the building and loan associations to be saved up. Building and loan associations can exist only when they can loan out money to home builders. Folks who spend money for liquor don't, as a rule, build homes.

The First Methodist Church, of Joliet, Ill., was bombed on the night of July 14th, with the damage estimated at $75,000 to the Church and nearby edifices. Rev. H. E. Rompel, the pastor, has been active in the effort to drive bootleggers out of their business, and the bomb was so planted as to wreck the part of the Church in which the pastor made his home. The minister, fortunately, had just left for a vacation to be spent in Europe when the outrage occurred. Illinois Methodists are being called upon to repair the damaged Church.

RALEIGH NOTES.

It is the purpose of the Raleigh Church to furnish notes for publication from time to time, and as the writer will not be the same person every time, one is most respectfully requested to read them all, in order that one may keep in touch with a live and growing proposition. And, too, we want all to become enthusiastic over the Raleigh Church, and our earnest boosters.

Do all know that Raleigh is the capital and the center of the strongest Christian State in the South, and, numerically speaking, the Christian denomination is the third strongest denomination in Wake County, the county seat of said State?

Raleigh is the educational, musical, art, and publication center of the State. As a railroad center, it is the most easily reached city from all points of the territory covered by the Christian denomination in the South. Within a radius of 100 miles of Raleigh, there are 1,500,000 people, including 68 towns and cities—a larger population than surrounds either Richmond or New Orleans in a like distance—and I might go on for an hour telling about the growth and development of the city of Raleigh, but this is not necessary, as the one great point I want to emphasize in this article is why the First Christian Church, with a very small membership, has undertaken, and is about to complete, a Church building that will cost approximately $125,000, fully equipped.

When one considers the rapid growth along all lines of activity, and the advancement of the Church in the recent past, our location for effective work (possibly the very best that could be found in the city), being located just two blocks west of the capitol, which makes the plant near enough downtown to draw a constituency from every direction and section of the city, being also on the west side of the capitol, in which direction the city is developing most rapidly, makes it the more advantageous for work. Besides these conditions, the fact that there are many Churches of the Christian denomination in the territory about the city, from which many people are moving, it is natural to expect a steady growth. When one considers these things, could we have done a wiser thing than to plan a place of worship that would be in keeping with these environments and as attractive as possible? We think not, and when one sees our new Church, one will realize the why!

For something like forty years we have put our money and efforts into the Raleigh work, with the hope that at some time we might have our rightful place as a Church in this beautiful city. Being located in but few cities, we naturally felt that we should, by all means, put forth every effort to strengthen the places where we are located, and we, therefore, felt, and now feel, that the Raleigh Church has a right to appeal to every member of the Christian Church for support spiritually, morally, and financially. Our stone man told me yesterday that we are going to have the best job in the South. Are you interested in this? If so, then speak a good word for Raleigh and attend the services of the First Christian Church when in the city.

All services on Sunday are held in the Woman's Club, one-half block west of our new Church, and you are welcome—dont't forget this; and bring your friends! I think this is enough for this time. Don't you? Our next notes will tell you something of the activities of the Church and its progress, provided our editors will give space to notes from this field. Selah. C.

When will you send in the name of that new subscriber you have determined to get?

BARRETT.

In His divine wisdom, and with a knowledge that passeth all understanding, our Heavenly Father, on July 6, 1924, entered into our midst and claimed, through death, our dear brother and fellow-deacon of the Dendron Christian Church, Joseph Henry Barrett, age 77 years, 3 months and 28 days.

Our hearts, though saddened by this great loss, rejoice to know that heaven is richer and brighter in the passing of this saintly soul, and that as heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ, we, too, have a home prepared in that great beyond. Since we know that it was through faith in God that our brother was spared to such a long life of useful service on this earth, and that he now rest with the host of the redeemed, we bow in prayful silence and humble gratitude for this Christian character and servant of God. Be it, therefore, resolved:

First, That we steadfastly endeavor to imitate the sweet Christian life for which he was so loved, and in so doing submit ourselves unreservedly to the will of God.

Second, That to the bereaved family we tender our heartfelt sympathy, and commend them in their great sorrow to the Supreme Comforter.

Third, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family as evidence of our sorrow as a Church; that a copy be placed upon the records of the Church, and that a copy be sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

(Signed by Board of Deacons.)

McLEOD.

Bro. McLeod was born December 29, 1846, and died May 24, 1924. He was a member of Pleasant Union Christian Church for a number of years, having professed faith in Christ at about forty years of age.

In his latter days, Bro. McLeod seemed to live close to the Lord and very much enjoyed the worship at the Church. His public prayers were always full of feeling and tenderness. We will miss him in our Church.

Bro. McLeod leaves a wife and four children, two wives having gone on before him. He was laid to rest in the cemetery near the Church. May God's richest blessings be upon the bereaved. Services were conducted at the grave by the writer. J. LEE JOHNSON.

HOTEL MEN FAVOR DRY LAW.

Hotel proprietors of the United States are three to one opposed either to the repeal or modification of the national prohibition law, according to John McFarlane Howie, chairman of the educational committee of the American Hotel Association, who addressed the national convention of the organization on July 15th.

"The prohibition law raised the hotel proprietor from the level of a saloonkeeper and placed him on a level with any other legitimate business man," Howie declared.

Building a Country Sunday School

By E. L. Middleton.

Mr. Middleton possesses definite qualifications for the preparation of this work. For twelve years after leaving college, he was a day school and Sunday School teacher in a village that had "once-a-week" preaching, with half the membership of the Sunday School living in the open country; while for fourteen years more he has been a State Sunday School secretary in rural State. Mr. Middleton urges the adoption of no novel or revolutionary ideas or methods. He recognizes the place and the value of recognized Sunday School policies and methods, and has prepared a digest of the essentials in a manner plain enough to render it adaptable for use in any rural school. Methods, administration, organization and development are each and all discussed in this book in an eminently practical way.

The price of the book is $1.25. You can order it through "The Christian Sun," 1536 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By Rev. S. M. Lynam.

A Continuous-Service Record.—

Probably nobody knows what minister holds the record for continuous service, but it seems to us that Rev. John Monroe, pastor of a Baptist Church at Scotland Neck, N. C., holds a claim worth contesting. He has been the pastor of one Church for sixty-five years. A man who can hold a Church for so many years has certainly been a marvelous personality, and he is worthy of the highest honor which the Christian world can pay.

To Reproduce Mt. Vernon.—

The Presbyterians of Ohio are to reproduce Mt. Vernon, the home of George Washington, at Sidney, Ohio. The home, built in this manner, will be used as a home for elderly people. The project was initiated by the Presbytery of Dayton, and a drive for seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars is now on in Ohio. The Presbyterians already maintain two homes for elderly people—one at Sidney, and one at Piqua. There are twenty-five people in these homes. The new plant will care for fifty-four. It is a fine thing for a denomination to care for those grown old in the service of the Church.

Broadway Temple Assured.—

The Broadway temple became an assured fact recently, when the first one million dollars' worth of second-mortgage bonds were underwritten. The pastor, Dr. Christian F. Reisner, has succeeded in interesting a number of business men both in and out of the Church in the project. The new temple, aside from the best equipment contained in great Churches, will also house a large apartment house. The central tower will be twenty-four stories high. The Methodist Episcopal Church is backing the undertaking. The Broadway Temple is to stand on the block between One Hundred and Seventy-third and One Hundred and Seventy-fourth Streets and Broadway.

Atlanta Gets Great Meeting.—

The Federal Council of the Churches of America will meet in Atlanta, Ga., from December 3d to 9th. No program has been announced as yet, but the council is to face many grave problems. Much interest is centering about the meeting. Such bodies as the Federal Council have in their power to do much good for the Christian world. That body has brought the Churches of America much closer together, and it will bring them yet closer by placing upon the hearts of the Christians of America the really great things of the kingdom and training men and women to work together for common ends, ignoring the smaller issues of denominationalism. It is the duty of every follower of Christ to make himself one through whom the Father shall answer the prayer of His Son.

Methodists to Avoid Criticism.—

There has been much criticism in all Churches recently rgearding the use made of home mission funds. In order to avoid such criticism, the Methodist Home Mission Board has initiated a loan fund for the benefit of suburban and country fields of so-called opportunity projects. Money is to be lent without interest for five years, after which the principal is to be repaid 10 per cent each year. It seems a fine scheme for other home mission boards which are facing the same problem. In the past, too much mission help has created pauper Churches, just as too much charity has created more beggars. The Methodist plan, aside from counteracting criticism, will stimulate the borrowing Church to efforts looking to self-support.

A Commendable Example.—

The Southern Methodist Episcopal Church of North Alabama has provided thirty-eight parsonages for their retired ministers. When an aged minister is retired, he is given one of these parsonages where he may spend the remainder of his days. This plan does not break up the family of the minister, and gives him a private home in which to live. It is one which might be studied by other Churches with much profit.

Denominations, as a whole, are very negligent concerning the aged ministers, and there is much suffering endured by these veterans of the cross and their families as they go toward the sunset of life. Just in the time when they need care and comfort, they do not have it. The declining years should be years of peace and joy, and the Church for which the aged minister has worn his life out owes him this peace and quiet. The efforts of the Methodists of North Alabama to pay this debt is a commendable example for other denominations.

A Worthwhile Venture.—

Two hundred boys of the junior and senior high school classes were recently gathered by the Episcopal Church at St. Paul's School, Concord, N. H., to consider the Anglican ministry. No definite appeal was made to the boys, but the various aspects of the ministry were presented in addresses by Bishop Slattery, of Massachusetts; Bishop Roberts, of South Dakota; and Canon Scott, of Quebec. No one knows what the effect of the venture will be, but it appeals to us as being distinctly worthwhile. We all know that God alone can and does select and call ministers into His service, but it may be that He uses human instrumentalities in this matter, as in all others.

The boy may hear God speaking through a man presenting the need for men. At any rate, the venture of the Episcopal Church is worthy of our earnest consideration. The Christian Church did something similar, and as a result, the largest number of ministers and all-time religious workers ever graduated from Elon College was graduated this last spring.

To Interpret Christianity.—

Dr. Charles W. Gilkey, pastor of the Hyde Park Baptist Church, Chicago, Ill., is to deliver the Barrows lecture in India during December, January, and February. Dr. Gilkey is now in Scotland and England completing his lectures. The lectures are under the auspices of the University of Chicago, and are intended to interpret Christianity so as to appeal to the scholarly Oriental mind. Dr. Gilkey faces a great task, but one which is well worth undertaking. The missionaries, in a great majority of instances, have felt that their work lay solely among the poorer natives. They have been, by necessity, confined to that field largely; but an effort, and a very definite effort, too, should be made to make Christianity appeal to those in the upper classes.

Could they be reached in numbers, there would be far more self-supporting native Churches. It is gratifying to know that the University of Chicago is definitely attempting such a thing. It may mean much to the cause of Christianity in the Orient. To interpret Christianity in a way to appeal is also needed at home as well as abroad.

Kansas Leads.—

The State of Kansas has led in a number of important things, and now it leads again in week-day schools of religion. There are 160 such schools in the State at present, and 19 more are to be opened in the fall. Most of these schools are situated in centers of population of five thousand or more. About 85 per cent of the public school children are enrolled in the schools of religion for courses in religious education. Something like nine thousand children are enrolled in Kansas City, and fifty-five hundred in Wichita.

Gradually the Church people are awaking to the fact that the child is the important person in the Church, and are setting themselves to care for him. Religious education has not been fully developed yet, and child psychology is still in its infancy, but much has been done and is being done along those lines.

We should make an effort to establish a week-day school of religion in connection with the public schools throughout the land, beginning with the community in which we live. This must be done for the children.

NOTES-PERSONALS

The Sunday School of the First Church, Richmond, was represented the past week at the Elon Chautauqua.

A family of the Durham Church, Mr. Luther Riddick and wife, his mother and sisters, motored over to Richmond and spent some time with relatives and sight-seeing. They speak of their pastor in the highest praise.

Rev. W. D. Harward, D. D., has rendered valuable service at Elm Avenue, Portsmouth, Va., but is to sever his relationship with that Church at the end of the Conference year. We are sure that some of our good Churches will have Bro. Harward in harness by the time he is ready to leave his present field of service.

Franklinton, N. C., Aug. 2.—W. S. Long, D. D., and wife are now in hospital at Sanford, N. C., on account of auto turning over while they were on their way from Chapel Hill, N. C., to Hamlet, N. C., 31st ulto. Doctors think Dr. Long cannot survive the injuries. His wife will get well. I do not know the particulars of the mishap. Will leave on the train for Sanford in a few minutes. D. A. Long.

Rev. James L. Foster, who has been the faithful and successful pastor of our Waverly Church for the past eleven years, will close his pastoral labors with that Church at the end of the present Conference year, and now, at an early date, is to move with his family to Elon College, where he will have two of his children in school. Bro. Foster desires Church work and will appreciate correspondence with any Churches in reach who may desire his services.

Rev. W. L. Wells, pastor First Church, Portsmouth, Va., has given notice to his people that his pastorate at that charge will close with the present Conference year. Bro. Wells is one of our most consecrated young ministers and one who is deeply interested in all that makes for the building of the Church and for the advancement of the kingdom. Any of our Churches looking for a pastor, competent, capable and worthy, will do well to correspond with Bro. Wells at once.

We congratulate our Burlington Church and Sunday School. They have secured Miss Madge Moffitt, the editor of our "Kiddies' Korner," as religious education worker for full time. Miss Moffitt is a genius with young people, and knows how to interest, train and instruct them in a marvelous manner. Burlington Church is indeed fortunate in securing such talent and consecration for its young people. There will be something worth while going on among those young people while Miss Madge is in charge.

A good friend asked, the other day: "Is there a fund with which to send The Sun to aged people who want it but have no way of securing money with which to pay for it?" On being advised that there was not, he said: "Well, I know a mighty good old lady who wants her Church paper, The Christian Sun, but is too poor in this world's goods to subscribe for it. Here is $1.00 for half a year's subscription." The editor wonders if some reader of these lines would like to send the other dollar and make out the subscription for a year?

During the past week, student representatives of the Alamance County schools passed through Richmond on their way to Washington, D. C., in motor buses. They were sight-seeing, and spent a day in Richmond. Had we been informed of their coming, we should have been glad to have furnished them with a guide to the city and places of interest, of which there are many—the Church made famous by Patrick Henry's "Give me liberty or give me death," the White House of the Confederacy, General Lee's home, etc.

One was impressed with the fact that more of our Virginia pastors than North Carolina pastors were in attendance at the Chautauqua and School of Methods at Elon last week. This, to a degree, is to be accounted for from the fact that through North Carolina this is the very busy season for revivals, and no doubt most of our North Carolina preachers were engaged in revival work. One could wish, however, even in the face of this good fact, that these revivals could be held some other week than that of Chautauqua week, so as to give our preachers the opportunity of getting the benefit of the Chautauqua.

The Elon Chautauqua has proven its right to exist and its weight and worth as a real institution of the Church. At no other assembly will one find such a varied group of workers, learners and teacehrs. Pastors and teachers present were interested in topics that pertain to them in their relationship to the Church and all of its enterprises. Deacons were present, Sunday School superintendents were in attendance, Sunday School teachers were here, Christian Endeavor leaders were in evidence, missionary enthusiasts were on hand, Sunday School pupils were in abundance; in fact, representatives from all the official and non-official enterprises and auxiliaries of the Church. Chautauqua fills the place in our work that nothing else can, and is working along right lines. Men and women, boys and girls, serious-minded and determined, came together in happy and delightful fellowship as earnest seekers after the truth and devoutly concerned for the Church and the promotion of the kingdom of God. Chautauqua is great, and it takes neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet to realize that in the years to come it will be greater and greater. Such a number and company and seekers after truth and teachers in Church and Sunday School will take council of any defects or errors that they may make in their program and will gradually build a better program and one that will more and more grip and help to upbuild the entire Church. Too much cannot be said in praise of the Board of Religious Education, its secretaries and co-workers, in the matter of Chautauqua and those who are doing their best to give the Church a real constructive program of service and salvation.

SEVENTY-SIXTH BIRTH ANNIVERSARY.

I thank God that my life has been spared these years, though I do not feel worthy of it. I thank Him for every blessing He has permitted me to have—my health, time, opportunities and privileges in Christ Jesus; I thank Him for healing my body when sick and for saving and sanctifying my soul. Last Saturday, the 26th of July, I passed out of the privileges of my seventy-sixth year into the privileges of the beginning of my seventy-seventh year. And I here promise my Heavenly Father to strive harder for His glory and the exaltation of the blessed Christ and the honoring of Holy Ghost than in the past. Pray for me. I thank God that at this age I feel the vigor of youth yet.

And here I want to thank my friends for their remembrance of me. Mr. T. E. Green and family presented me with a nice suit of clothes, including silk shirt, neckties, two pairs silk socks, suspenders, and a beautiful supper. Mr. B. Cole, of Sanford, N. C., the owner and conductor of the Sanford Publishing House, presented me with a beautiful Schofield Bible. Bro. Isam Farmer, of Ringgold, Va., presented me with a crate of honey (28 pounds). I thank these dear friends for these kind remembrances, and pray God's blessings upon them and that they may have many happy and useful years, with many thanks.

Elon College, N. C. P. T. Klapp.

FUNERAL OF DR. W. S. LONG.

Chapel Hill, N. C., Aug. 4.—Largely attended by relatives, associates and friends, the funeral of Dr. W. S. Long, founder and first president of Elon College, was held at 1:30 o'clock this afternoon at the residence here, with burial following in Graham, his former home, at 4 o'clock. Prior to interment at Graham, a brief service was conducted in the new Providence Christian Church there.

The services were conducted by Dr. W. W. Staley, of Suffolk, Va.; Rev. Walter Patton, of Chapel Hill, and Rev. B. J. Howard, of Chapel Hill.

He is survived by his widow, two sons, Dr. Will S. Long and J. Edward Long, of Graham, and two daughters, Mrs. A. F. Franklin, Richmond, Va., and Mrs. S. A. Holleman, High Point.

MEMORIAL FUND.

Previously acknowledged	$10.00
A. D. Gerringer, Brown Summitt, N. C.....	1.00
Total	$11.00

The Southern Convention at Norfolk, in May, decided to erect monuments at two historic spots, long neglected by us Christians. One is to be at the site of Old Lebanon Church, Surry County, Va., where all party and sectarian names were discarded by our Church ancestors and the name Christian only was adopted.

The other is the late resting-place of Rev. Jas. O'Kelly, near O'Kelly's Chapel, Durham County, N. C. We should have $2,000 with which to erect suitable markers. What will you give?

Committee on Monument.

(Judge J. F. West, chairman, Waverly, Va.; Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, secretary, Durham, N. C.; W. E. McClenny, Suffolk, Va.; J. O. Atkinson, treasurer, Elon College, N. C.)

Send funds to the treasurer, and same will be acknowledged in The Sun. One liberal and good-hearted friend says if $900 is contributed to the Old Lebanon Monument, he will add a gift of $100, so as to mark this spot, now one of the most conspicuous on a Virginia State highway, in a manner that will reflect credit and honor upon those who wear the nade Christian. That is fine! The way is now open for contributors. The Christians must do this good thing right, now that we have made a beginning.

J. O. Atkinson,
Elon College, N. C. Treasurer.

MEDITATIONS FROM A PARSON'S DIARY.

"It is a mistake for any one to become so possessed with a sense of his personal importance that he goes off and pouts, fancying that his Church can't get along without him. Quitters never hurt anything but themselves by quitting. When a quitter quits, he simply makes room for a standpatter to take his place."

T. B. DEATH RATE REDUCED IN 1923.

Forty-one less persons died of tuberculosis in North Carolina in 1923 than in the preceding year. In 1922, 2,586 persons in the State died of tuberculosis. In 1923, 2,545 persons died of the disease.

Although there are two and a half times as many white people as there are negroes in the State, there were only 27 more victims of this disease among the white population than among the colored. The death rate for the whites per 100,000 was 66.3, and that for the colored, 155.5.

With 302 white and 68 colored deaths, Buncombe County has the largest number of deaths from tuberculosis of any county in the State. This is explained by the fact that Asheville and vicinity is a great resort for the tuberculous people of the whole country. Next to Buncombe, Forsyth County leads in both white and colored, with 107 deaths—32 white and 75 colored.

In each of the Counties of Anson, Clay, Currituck, Gates, Graham, Jones, Rowan, and Wake, only 1 white person died of tuberculosis. Haywood, Caldwell, Cherokee, and Watauga had only 1 colored death each.

No white people died in Alleghany, Pamlico, and Tyrrell of the disease in 1923. Alleghany, Ashe, Avery, Carteret, Clay, Cleveland, Dare, Graham, Madison, Orange, Rockingham, Rowan, and Rutherford Counties had no colored people to die of tuberculosis last year, which is accounted for by the fact that there are very few negroes in these counties.

Alleghany County reported no deaths from tuberculosis. Clay, Graham and Rowan had only 1 death each, which were white. Two Indians died in each of the following counties: Wilson, Onslow and Hoke.

Tuberculosis is now classed among the preventable diseases, and as we learn more of sanitation and the laws of health, the number of deaths from this source will eventually decrease.

OPTIMISM AND PESSIMISM.

To the superficial observer, criticism of the ideas and mechanism of modern life is apt to pass for pessimism, though it may be in reality the highest optimism.

Tolstoi, for instance, was called a prophet of pessimism, though to have assumed his beliefs in God, and in truth, and in right, and in his fellow-men, in his environment and in his Russia, demanded the highest optimism.

Before accusing any one of pessimism, it might be worth while to ask in what he disbelieves. Is his a criticism of the environment of life, or is it a distrust of lfe itself? Men of the deepest religion and with the most profound sense of the eternal verities and of the worth of the soul have been credited with pessimism. The Pilgrims and Puritans have not been free from the charge. But the real pessimism is in the staking of one's life on the changing and unsubstantial—the things that have always perished in history and that are bound to fall.

The real optimist is the hero who will throw away even life itself at the dictate of the soul. He knows that the inner voice cannot be wrong when it moves him instinctively to a life of self-sacrifice, or to some glorious act of seeming self-immolation. Grace and the vision of righteousness change trying and discouraging situations into environments of hope and faith. The Christian can always afford to be an optimist.

THE DIVINE CHRIST.

General Lew Wallace, in giving an account of his religious experience, said: "When I began to write 'Ben Hur,' in 1876, I had reached an age in life when men usually begin to study and reflect on the good they may have done in the world up to that time. Never having read the Bible, I knew little of matters of a religious nature; although I was not in every respect an infidel, I was persistently and notoriously indifferent. I resolved to begin the study of the good Book in earnest. I knew I was conscientious in my search for the truth. I weighed, I analyzed, I counted, I compared. The evolution from conjecture into knowledge, through opinion and belief, was gradual but irresistible, and at length I stood firmly and defiantly on the solid rock. I am sure the preparation and completion of 'Ben Hur,' if it has done nothing more, has convinced its author of the divinity of the lowly Nazarene, who walked and talked with God."—Presbyterian of the South.

HALF INDIAN.

Thus a vindictive young man described himself. He said, "I don't forget a wrong done me—I am half Indian." Pity that, if he wished to find example in an Indian, he did not choose the better part of the Indian spirit. For if the redskin never forgot an injury done him, neither did he forget a kindness received. You could count on his long memory. Beautiful are the stories of Indian gratitude. Usually, there are more pleasant things than disagreeable things. But, alas! some of us are not even up to the Indian grade. We scarcely remember the kindnesses at all, while we keep dangling before our eyes the memory of our slights and hurts. Pity that we should focus so much attention upon our miseries. If we must pattern after the Indian, let us take the whole pattern—or better still, the superhalf.—George Clark Peck.

RESIGNATION.

I have resigned my work at Pleasant Grove and Ingram, Va. This resignation takes effect at the end of this Conference year. I am to move back to Elon College the 1st of September.

Those desiring a supply or pastor for the coming year may get in touch with me at the following addresses: Paces, Va., Route 1, until September 1st; Elon College, N. C., after the 1st of September. Jos. E. McCauley.

DISTANT VOICES.

Remember the house of thy father,
When the palaces open before thee,
And the music makes thee forget.
When the cities are glittering around thee,
Remember the lamp in the evening,
The loneliness and the peace.

When the deep things that cannot be spoken
Are drowned in a riot of laughter,
And the proud wine foams in thy cup;
In the day when thy wealth is upon thee,
Remember thy path through the pine-wood,
Remember the ways of thy peace.

Remember—remember—remember—
When the cares of this world and its treasure
Have dulled the swift eyes of thy youth;
When beauty and longing forsake thee,
And there is no hope in the darkness,
And the soul is drowned in the flesh.

Turn, then, to the house of thy boyhood,
To the sea and the hills that would heal thee,
To the voices of those thou hast lost,
The still, small voices that loved thee,
Whispering out of the silence,
Remember—remember—remember.

Remember the house of thy father,
Remember the paths of peace.

—Alfred Noyes.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE DEMANDS OF YOUTH.

Young people, our boys and girls, are making their demands. These demands are varied to such an extent that they cannot be recounted here. Neither is it within the province of this paper to say whether these demands, right or wrong, should be heeded or unheeded. The simple fact is that these demands are urgent and imperial.

The writer visits many Churches, and, first and last, meets many people who are discussing pastors and pastoral relationships. He does not recall having discussed this subject with any one for months past who has not, sooner or later, said: "Our Church must have a pastor who can get hold of and grip our young people." Go where one will, whether in the country or city Church, and if there is a change expected or desired from the present pastor to some other pastor, invariably the reason assigned will be "Our Church is losing its hold on the young people, and we must make a change in pastors in order to retain them." Or, again, if a Church is without a pastor and is looking for one, almost without exception those interested in finding a pastor put it in as a condition that "Any pastor who is recommended to us must be able to reach the young people." Every where and in all assemblies where Church matters are discussed one will hear this demand uttered: "We want a pastor who can get hold of and hold our young people."

One doubts if this wast the matter most considered even five years ago. The older people in the Church and the ones who gave constant support to the Church took council of their own demands and preferences in the matter, and took steps to call the preacher that they desired. They now take steps to call a preacher that they believe their children desire or will desire. The writer is not contending that this should or should not be so. He is simply stating a plain, bare fact.

There may be assigned three reasons for, or causes of, this symptom. First, that parents no longer control their children and have them at Church whether or no. And now they demand of their preacher to do for them that which they find themselves unable or unwilling to do. Second, that there is a growing consciousness of the worth and value of youth and a feeling that unless the youth is reached by the Sunday School and Church, these institutions will themselves gradually lose out in their battle for constructive work. That is to say, a growing consciousness that the youth is falling away from the Church at the very time when he should be reached by the Church. Third, that there are more evil tendencies and temptations in our day because of the automobile and Sunday amusements, on which accounts the demand is greater and stronger, and the task is heavier and more difficult of attracting youths to the Church and holding them through the Church.

Whatever the cause or causes may be, this one thing is inevitable. The preacher's great problem of the present, and the Church's momentous task, are the same, namely: to get hold of the young people, win them to Christ, and thus lay the foundations; and, in fact, begin building the structure of the future Church. It would really seem that the demands of youth, and not the infirmities of age, are the factors at work in retiring or eliminating from the pastorate preachers of the Word at present. The demands of youth are certainly insistent and persistent, whether our youths voice that demand or whether we of maturer years and judgment voice it for them. The Churches are yielding to these demands from whatever source they may come, and unless the pastor is prepared to meet the demands of youth he seems destined to have either a poor pastorate or no pastorate at all.

There were never so many books written, so many lectures delivered, so many sermons preached, to and about youth and young people as at present. This would indicate that we are awakening to the fact, more and more, that if the world is to be saved through Christ, it must be reached and directed in the early periods of youth.

THREEFOLD FAITH.

Faith is the most powerful and the most active agent among men. "It is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." "Through faith, we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God." "By faith, Noah prepared an ark to the saving of his house." "By faith, Moses, when he was come to years, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season." "By grace are ye saved through faith, and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God."

The word is used many times in the New Testament, but very few times in the Old Testament. One might say that it is a New Testament word. Under the Old Testament dispensation, works counted much more than in the New Testament dispensation.

Men of faith are men of vision. All great movements rest on faith. The farmers of the world plant and cultivate by faith. The manufacturer produces his wares by faith. The investor puts his money through faith. The merchant buys by faith. The commerce of the world is carried on by faith. Governments issue money and bonds, and the people buy securities on faith. Now, faith is not a one-sided blind trust. "We walk by faith, not by sight." Faith takes three directions, and operates in the unseen; and the Christian's faith must act in all three of these directions. Faith in God comes first. "He that comes to God must believe that He is;" for "without faith, it is impossible to please God." The grossest sin is unbelief. There is no offense so provoking to man as to doubt his word. Man will resent this charge more than any other. God regards His word above all else. "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." A man's signature is his word. The Bible is God's Word. Faith in God includes faith in His Word. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." What the Church needs first and always is faith in God.

Faith in self is the second essential for Christian activity and usefulness. More Christians fail on account of lack of faith in themselves than by open transgression. That was the weak spot in Moses when God called him to deliver Israel from Egyptian bondage. He said he was not eloquent, and that was true. There are some Pharisees who think they are better than others; but they are few compared with that vast number that underestimate their ability to teach in Sunday School, to act as secretary, to serve on a committee, or to pray in public. The membership of the Church needs more confidence in self to carry out the real convictions of their hearts. They are afraid of criticism. They would do more if they could sing, or pray, or talk like somebody else. Their pride and lack of faith in themselves keep them from paying and doing what they can.

Faith in others is the third essential of true faith; and that includes faith in institutions. The Church membership, as a rule, does not have full confidence in the Church and its members. Lack of faith in government and leaders results in revolution. The French Revolution and the American Revolution illustrate this statement. If the whole Church had simple, child-like faith in God, in self, and in others, mountains of difficulty would be cast into the sea of oblivion, and the "Church would arise and shine, her light having come, and the glory of the Lord having arisen upon her."

THE GENIUS OF EFFICIENT COMMITTEES.

II.

Thousands of communities have remained in the class of the typical cross-roads village, with the business life centered in a blacksmith shop, general store, post-office and meat market. Communities have remained in this class that might have been thriving cities, just because back yonder somewhere some men who stood in a place of authority lacked vision and lacked interest in the welfare and progress of their community.

Thousands of Churches remain forever small—a testimony to the lack of faith; others grow and develop into great institutions, because of the vision and the faith and the courage of the men and women to whom the life and progress of these Churches has been entrusted. Thousands of Churches are dead today that might have been growing institutions, pulsating with life and energy, active in the service of God; but are dead and lifeless today simply because back yonder somewhere in their history their destiny was entrusted to those who feared difficulties more than they trusted God.

In the light of these facts, it is easy for all to recognize how essential it is that committees be wisely appointed. There should be no hit-and-miss method resorted to. Plenty of time and deliberation should be given in making the selection. And the more important the work to be done, the greater the need of care. It is a mistake to appoint any committee on the spur of the moment—by looking around and naming the first who appear in sight. Those who are the most deeply interested in the task at hand, the work to be done by the committee, are ordinarily the best qualified for a place on the committee. And no matter what other qualifications persons may have, if they are not interested in the work to be done, or are in any way opposed to it, they will be but dead weight if placed on the committee, and will likely demoralize the group. People should be assigned to committee work because of their interest in what is to be done, and their ability to help in the accomplishment. When a committee is appointed, it does not imply that the source of supply of men and women suitable for a place on the committee has been exhausted. Out of a body of thirty, there might be thirty persons qualified by fact of interest and faith and ability to serve efficiently on a certain committee, but the fact that the said committee is limited to three, or whatever the number may be, makes it necessary for that number to be named.

A wise selection of important committees means everything to a Church; that is why the leading pastors of the great Churches have insisted on selecting their own committees. And that fact also explains why such Churches have become great. Many a pastor has found it impossible to carry out his program simply because some one else, who was not interested in what he wanted accomplished or who was opposed to what he was trying to achieve, has had the power to appoint the committees—and subtly committees have been selected that would not act, or that would act unfavorably. The progress of hundreds of Churches has been blocked by this treachery, and the pastor's hopes and the welfare of the Church crucified. Too many great movements have been killed because committed to the wrong kind of a committee.

If I were asked to name seven items that should always be kept in mind in selecting a committee that had some important work to do, I would name the following:

1. Appoint only those who are interested in the work the committee is expected to consider. It is really unfair and discourteous to put on a committee a person who is not vitally interested in the purpose of the committee in question. It is the height of inconsistency to place on a committee a person who is openly opposed to the work the committee is to do.

2. Appoint only those who have an interest in progress, and who have vision and faith. Optimistic people are best qualified for committee work. Pessimists are apt only to see the difficulties that lie in the way. Caleb and Joshua were the only optimists on Moses' committee. The other ten were pessimists. God's work is done by people who have iron in their blood, and love in their heart, and faith in their soul. How different the history of Israel might have read if there had been ten optimists on Moses' committee, and the pessimists had been in the minority!

3. Appoint people who not only have the interest and the faith, but who also have the time or will take the time to meet with the committee and give the work at hand the necessary attention.

4. Appoint only those who can work in harmony with the others on the committee. Arbitrary people make poor committeemen. People who want their way or no way will do more harm than good anywhere and any time. One must have an open mind, and be willing to look at propositions from every angle in order to render efficient service on a committee.

5. Appoint those who believe that "the best is yet to be"; that service should always come before self, and that "anything that ought to be done can be done."

6. Appoint only those who believe in God, in humanity and in the future.

7. Finally, appoint those who are loyal and true to the Church and its whole program.

It goes without saying that there will be many in every progressive Church that will qualify for service on committees, and that because one is not placed on any committee is in no way an evidence that he was thought less worthy or less efficient than those who may have been appointed. The fact that the number that can serve on a committee is necessarily limited, naturally excludes many who are amply qualified to serve, and sometimes even the most worthy may not be appointed because of lack of time or because of already having other official duties. But the problem is to appoint only those who are qualified according to the foregoing items—notwithstanding that there might be many others who can qualify equally as well.

The moral is, "Be careful in all things; but especially be careful in appointing your committees."

THE LORD HELPS MEN.

One of the unshakable convictions of the people of God in all ages has been that God is, in deed and truth, a helper of men. In the New Testament and Old Testament alike, the conviction is expressed that without any shadow of a doubt the Lord is actively engaged in "helping" His people. And in all ages we find that confidence exemplified in the very common adoption of the matter, "Hitherto the Lord hath helped us." Of the genuineness and value of this help, there is rarely a doubt expressed amongst those who are recognized as the servants of God.

Occasionally there has developed a tendency to emphasize the Lord's help to such an extent as to do away with the need of human co-operation, or at least to reduce it to the lowest possible minimum. But this extreme, while common enough, has never been characteristic of the great masses of the Church. Men recognize very clearly the need of human co-operation and the common sense of mankind is usually a very effective safeguard against any form of fanaticism which would aim to eliminate the need of human effort by exalting the helping power of God.

The very expression "help" is significant of the truth. God could do all our work for us, but He does not do so; He simply "helps." God helps the farmer, and while without Him the farmer's labor would be wasted, yet it is just as true that without the farmer's help there would be no crop. God helps the sailor, and often the sailor thanks God for salvation from shipwreck, and he is right in doing so. And yet, if that sailor had not used all his wits and put forth all his strength and "labored together with God," his ship would have gone to the bottom of the sea.

Everywhere on land and sea, in mart and office, in mine and forest, in school and Church, our God is stretching out His hand to help, and when failure and disaster comes, it comes often because we have not recognized clearly how to avail ourselves of that help. God made man dependent upon Himself, and He will never fail the man who trusts in Him. His arm is not shortened, and His ear never grows dull, and whenever men in their distress call upon Him He never fails to hear and His arm still brings salvation.

Some will tell us that God works according to law, and this is true; not because law is superior to Him, but because law, as we term it, expresses His method of working. The laws of God are simply our human description of the continuity and uniformity of the divine working. There are no accidents in the divine plan, and the eternal purposes of the infinite One are evolving before our eyes slowly, majestically and irresistibly; and these purposes need no justification by men. The Judge of all the earth shall surely do right.

But this is only one side of the divine character. His laws are but the expression of divinest love, and the Church of Jesus Christ delights to dwell upon the fact that the infinite God is also "our Father in heaven." And to the Almighty hand we love to add the Father's heart with its infinite tenderness. And when the truth dawns upon us that God is in deed and truth our Father, it is easy to believe that He will be forevermore our Helper and Deliverer. He is still the "help of the helpless," and there can come into life no difficulty too great for Him to surmount, and no problem too hard for Him to solve. "The Lord is our Helper; we will not fear what man shall do unto us."

FOR WHAT ARE MEN REMEMBERED?

Many of the ablest men who have served in Congress are remembered best for legislation which they prevented rather than for what they accomplished. The member of the present United States Senate who probably ranks highest in the general esteem of the country rarely has been conspicuous in "fighting for" anything—except the defeat of measures he considered to be improper. This senator, however, has great ability, is unimpeachably honest, intellectually and otherwise, and, when aroused, he is very energetic.

Few names that have been identified with outstanding laws enacted by Congress are associated even in popular estimation with the highest statesmanship. One needs not call names to prove this contention. All that is necessary is to ask the reader to review the "named" laws which have come forth in recent years. By "named" laws is meant those which are referred to as the "Smith-Smith" or the "Jones-Jones" acts, of which there have been many during the last ten or fifteen years. With only a few exceptions, the names thus preserved are forgotten or are unknown in all other connections.

This doubtful, or spurious, sort of fame fascinates the mediocre type of legislator. With some of them, to have one's name attached even to a bill that doesn't become a law, but attains notoriety, is a glorious end in itself, worth seeking, regardless of the character of the law or the bill.

Aside from some measures which have to be passed, such as the recurring tariff acts, the proposals which endow their sponsors with this sort of fame fall into two classes. One class of bills would open wide the doors of the public exchequer for a wholesale distribution of funds in some new direction; the other would provide for an extension of governmental activity (which usually means government interference) in some new quarter. Frequently both are proposed by the same measure, for nearly all authorizations of new expenditures carry with them extensions or expansion of government.—Ex.

Missions vs. Films.

In various parts of the world the missionaries are facing the problem of commercialized American films. The worst subjects are being imported and shown to the natives, and are strongly counteracting the work of the missionaries. They have been protesting for some time against this, but without success. The Methodist mission in China has now perfected a portable moving-picture machine which can be carried by a coolie, and are now to carry moving pictures of travel, American agriculture, and modern industry into the remote places. It is hoped that these helpful films will offset the commercialized movies.

ELON LETTER.

The college campus has been thronged with life again this week. The Chautauqua and Summer School of Christian Methods is in session. The registration shows a wholesome growth. It may reach the 200 mark. Last year it was 110.

The Chautauqua is under the control of the Board of Religious Education of the Southern Christian Convention, with the Board of Christian Education of the General Convention co-operating. The college turns its plant over to the board, rent free, and besides donates free lights and free water, and also adds a cash consideration of $100 to aid in advertising the Chautauqua.

The college is convinced that the assistanee it thus renders the Church in its effort to produce trained leaders is a highly legitimate expense and one that will win approval.

The Chautauqua is organized as a school and a producer of inspiration as well, plus wholesome recreation.

There are five class periods daily, following a devotional period at 8:30 A. M. The afternoon is given to rest, study and recreation. The evening is the Chautauqua feature—sometimes a lecture, sometimes a pageant, sometimes entertainment, but always enjoyable. There is, preceding the evening session, a glad hour, filled with song and praise and testimony.

Real textbook work of college grade is done in some of the classes, which yield international credit for those who pass the examinations. The recreation is for groups, or what is known as mass-play, and tennis. Many regard this as the most important item of the program.

Delegations from nearby Churches have visited the Chautauqua this year. One evening the First Church of Greensboro had more than seventy present. Burlington, Graham and Mebane have also sent special delegations. It is a fine idea, and one that should mean much for the future of the Chautauqua.

It is regrettable that many of our Churches have been unable to arrange for their protracted meetings on other weeks than that of the Chautauqua. If only one or two can come from a Church, they will take great inspiration and enthusiasm back with them, and these two qualities can work wonders in any community.

The person who attends a session of the Chautauqua and Summer School of Christian Methods can never be the same person again. And the work of the local Church ought to show signs of improvement following such attendance.

The college is glad to have been host to its friends, and wishes for them and the Chautauqua every good and wholesome thing for the future. W. A. HARPER.

SEED SOWING AND HARVEST.

Surely no one would expect to reap a harvest without having first sown the seed; but after the soil has been prepared through loving, patient labor, and the good seed has been sown, trusting God for results, then what a joy to the reaper to gather in the golden grain for the Master! Not always does the sower have the joy of reaping the harvest, for sometimes we saw, but another reaps; but if the grain is gathered for the Master, then the joy comes to both sower and reaper.

We are sure that our Bro. L. R. Townsend will be glad to learn that two subscriptions have been sent in to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, we believe, mainly as a result of his distributing copies of THE SUN through his congregation at Leaksville Christian Church and telling of its merits, making an appeal to the members to subscribe for it. We also believe that our editor will appreciate his efforts to increase the circulation of this good paper. We have the promise of some more subscribers soon.

As we said in the beginning, not always does the sower have the privilege of reaping the harvest, and, as in this case, our Bro. Townsend sowed the seed, but your humble writer has the pleasure of sending in the subscriptions.

We have been reading Bro. Hermon Eldredge's letters in THE SUN, and they surely are inspiring. It brings great joy to those who love the great Sunday School cause to hear that so many nations have come together in a great convention to promote such a noble cause as this, and we feel that we should be telling others about it. It's a great thing, folks, and last Sunday, after telling some things about the convention and that Bro. Eldredge is going to write a letter each week to THE SUN, two members of our Sunday School gave me their subscriptions for one year for this very valuable paper, THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

I'll tell you, Bro. Editors, when I read the heading of the subscription sheet which you had in last week's copy and found that not one out of seven of our members are taking our Church paper, I just felt that I must get a couple names to send in, and I'm very proud that I have the privilege of sending two in. I believe it would be a good idea to continue sending out these blanks with THE SUN—probably it will prompt some one else to make an effort to get subscribers.

Let us never stop until we make THE CHRISTIAN SUN self-sustaining, and even then we should not be satisfied until THE SUN goes into every home of the Christian Church. Mothers and Fathers would do a great thing for their children by placing before them such good, clean educational reading matter as this paper contains.

Let us talk to our friends who are not subscribers about the merits of this good paper of ours. The more we do for the Master, the more we wish to do and the more joy we get out of doing, and the more we do for our great denomination, the more we will wish to do. I say it is a great denomination because of the great things it has undertaken to advance the cause of Christ among men. So let us, as individuals, continue sowing seeds of loving deeds for our Master.

We may not always know
Where fall the seed
That we have tried to sow
With greatest care;
But some time we shall know—
Some time, some where.

And why should we need to know if we but have faith and trust God for results?

And only the Master shall praise us,
And only the Master shall blame;
And no one shall work for money,
And no one shall work for fame.
But each for the joy of the working,
And each in his separate star
Shall draw the things as he sees it,
For the God of things as they are.

So, let us say in conclusion: let minister and layman alike work to increase the circulation of our Church paper, thereby helping to advance all our dear Church stands for. R. O. R.

INSPIRATION OF THE SCRIPTURES.

BY REV. A. A. MCGEACHY, D. D.

"All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."—2 Tim. 3:16-17.

Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, when introducing Israel Zwangill last week to the American Jewish Congress at Carnegie Hall, warned his audience that they might hear things with which they could not agree, but he asked them to remember that the distinguished visitor was speaking not for Israel, but for Israel Zwangill. Just so I, too, am speaking not for you, but for myself. It will be well to remember this distinction, for, while I expect no serious divergence of views, it will relieve you of responsibility for mine and save me from misrepresenting yours.

My text says that "all Scripture is given by inspiration of God and is profitable." Another version reads, "Every Scripture, given by inspiration of God, is profitable." This is quite a different thing, but even this reading intimates that some Scriptures are inspired, and my task is to show that this is true of the Old and New Testaments. Furthermore, I must show what is meant by inspiration; I must glance at theories of inspiration; I must intimate the limitations of inspiration; and I must do all these things in such a way that your faith will be settled and not shaken.

The matter of inspiration was settled for me long ago by those who gave me life. When a child has been reared in a truly Christian home where the father reads the Bible and leads his family in prayer, morning and night; where, coming in from play, he sees that Book lying on his mother's lap; when, as time passes, he observes their lives growing richer and sweeter under its influence, drawing comfort from it in their troubles and light from it in their ignorance; and, when at last they die unafraid with their hopes softly pillowed on its gracious promises, it is very hard to persuade him that this Book is anything else than the Word of God.

Such was my happy lot, and I have never doubted the inspiration of the Bible for a moment. It has been settled for me so surely that, so far as I am concerned, it is a waste of time to discuss it. So surely, that books which assail it bore me. I have books like that in my library which I have never been able to read through. They do not interest me any more than the confidences of a drunken man or the rhapsodies of a Christian Scientist. It has been settled for me so surely that I could say as Martin Luther is reported to have said, "No matter who wrote the Pentateuch, it is the Word of God."

But I am very distrustful of theories of inspiration, for theories are merely man-made things. Theories of inspiration are related to inspiration as theologies are to God. I trust God, but I distrust theology. One is a fact; the other, an explanation of a fact or a speculation built upon a fact.

One man holds to a mechanical theory. The sacred writers were just quills through whom the Spirit was poured. St. John writes the Book of Revelation. His hand holds the pen, but an unseen angel holds his arm and makes the letters. He may have thought the writing was his own, but he had nothing to do with it. The responsibility for what was written was wholly God's.

If such a theory is true, we are forced to the irreverent conclusion that God was better sometimes than at others, for some parts of the Bible are much superior to other parts. I should rather admit the men who wrote to partnership in the writing and put the responsibility upon them.

Pens, further, do not account for varieties of style. One man writing with a dozen different kinds of pen will write in the same style. A dozen men writing with the same kind of pen will write in a dozen different styles. If the sacred writers were simply writers, or quills, no differences should appear in the writings of Paul and James. But differences do appear. Therefore, I cannot swallow this theory.

Some hold to a verbal inspiration of the original manuscripts. They say that ideas are communicated in words. If we use the wrong word we convey the wrong idea. The only way that God could insure the right idea was to choose and inspire the right word. They say that He did this and declared that one jot or one tittle should not fail from the law until the whole had been fulfilled. But jot and tittle have failed if this was what was meant. The oiginal manuscripts have been lost, and there is considerable wordy, though unimportant, variation in the copies of them which have survived. If, therefore, it was God's purpose to inspire a book down to the dotting of an "i" and the crossing of a "t," His purpose has been defeated. And I don't like this theory any better than the other.

Some hold to such an inspiration as covered the ideas and left the writers to choose their own words. Consequently, they say, you have a general supervision which safeguards the truth but left the writers free to express their individuality. God wrote the Bible and men wrote it too.

I like this theory better, though it is as logically indefensible as the others. It is more like the dealings of God with men. In all His work of saving, He does His work untrammeled and leaves us to do ours. But how could He insure accuracy by such a method? How could He be certain that Peter would write the right thing without control any more than he would do the right thing? It took lots of praying to bring Peter through. Christ could not take His eye off of him for a moment. Could He, then, have trusted him any more confidently to write than He could to walk and talk? I am not satisfied with this theory.

I don't like any theory. I don't see why we should have any. I don't understand the mind that has to have everything explained and reduced to formula and classified and catalogued before it can be accepted.

Do you understand the incarnation, where the nature of God meets the nature of man in His Son? What is your theory about that? Isn't it better to accept it without theorizing?

Do you understand the theory of predestination, where the will of God meets the will of man? Isn't it a fact and isn't it inexplicable?

Do you understand inspiration, where the mind of God meets the mind of man? Can you frame a satisfactory theory with regard to this?

I have no theory of the atonement except that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures, that He did something for me that I could not do for myself and without which I would have been lost.

I have no theory concerning the two men in me or the two wills in Christ or the three persons in the Godhead. If any man thinketh that he knoweth anything, he knoweth nothing.

We are surrounded by mysteries which are none the less facts. "Be still and know that I am God."

If, however, you insist on more from me than this, then hear not my theory, but my confession. I believe that holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. I believe that all Scriptures are given by inspiration of God, and that these are the Scriptures. I believe that God, in some way as mysterious to me as my own regeneration, moved upon chosen men to will and to do of His good pleasure in the writing of a book which should be an infallible guide, the "only rule of faith and life." I believe the Bible is an authority on what it set itself to teach. I do not think it set itself to teach either geology or biology. Where it touches these things incidentally, it covers them with large generalizations which automatically adjust themselves to advancing truth from age to age. But even if it could be proved that the sacred writers were in error upon these things they were right in what they come to say, and it would be as foolish to reject their message as it would be to reject a good sermon because of its bad grammar.

If now you ask me why I intimate even such an admission as this, my answer is that a man can sometimes serve the truth as loyally by destroying a false foundation as by laying a true one. I do not wish you to pin your faith to the inspiration of the Bible with a theory. The pin might come out. I would have your faith to stand not in the wisdom of men but in the power of God. I want you to be so certain of the inspiration of the Scriptures that they will still be to you the Word of God no matter what conclusions science may force upon you.

Now, if you ask me how I know that the Bible is inspired, I might answer in the stately language of our confession: "The heavenliness of the matter, the efficacy of the doctrine, the majesty of the style, the consent of all the parts, the scope of the whole (which is to give all the glory to God), the full discovery it makes of the only way of man's salvation, the many other incomparable excellencies, and the entire perfection thereof, are arguments whereby it doth abundantly evidence itself to be the Word of God." That would be one argument, and a good one.

I might plead that 66 books, written by 40 authors, over a period of 1,600 years, yet exhibiting the same system of truth, were more than merely human compositions. These authors were of all classes of society—shepherds, fig-gatherers, herdsmen, fishermen, and the king upon his throne. They were educated and unlearned. They lived far apart in time and in circumstances. They spoke different tongues. Yet their testimony was all in harmony like the tuned instrument of an orchestra under the leadership of a conductor.

I might urge the fulfillment of prophecy as a reason for our faith and inspiration, even as Paul urged it upon Agrippa, and Christ upon His disciples. This would be a good argument and a hard nut for the enemy to crack.

But I am speaking for myself and shall give the two arguments that have been the most conclusive and satisfying to me.

The first is that I believe in Christ, and He believed in the inspiration of the Scriptures. I have read of a ship drifting on the rocks that threw out one anchor after another, every chain snapping and every anchor lost until at last one was thrown out which held. So in a spiritual crisis, I threw out anchor after anchor, and all were lost. All the arguments with which I sought to steady myself and stay my drifting failed me, until the last anchor caught on Christ. I found Him entirely dependable. I found I could trust Him as a child does his father. I found myself able to believe anything that He believed, on His testimony that it was true. And now if every argument in the world for the inspiration of the Scriptures were swept away I should still know that the Bible was the Word of God because He said it was and declared that it could not be broken.

Look at His reverence for the Scriptures; how He was perpetually quoting them down to His dying hours. Hear Him as beginning at Moses and all the prophets He expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning Himself. It was with the Scriptures that He baffled Satan, confuted His enemies, instructed His disciples and strengthened His own soul, and in fulfillment of the Scriptures He died. We have Christ Himself, no theory but a fact; a fact of history, of revelation and of experience. If we believe Him, we must believe the Bible, too.

And Jesus Christ was Himself the Word of God, the last chapter of the Book. "God who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in times past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these days spoken unto us in His Son." Christ was the last word of God to men. All previous revelations were fragmentary and partial. But when the Almighty was prepared to express His whole mind He uttered Himself in a single word, and that "word became flesh and dwelt among us." We cannot believe in Jesus without believing in that revelation of which He was the crown and consummation.

Second, I believe in the inspiration of the Scriptures because of what they are and what they have accomplished. I submit the book itself in evidence. I supplement the testimony of Christ to the Scriptures with a record of their achievements through the last two thousand years.

F. W. Robertson said: "This collection of books has been to the world what no other book has been to a nation. States have been founded on its principles. Kings rule by compacts based upon it. Men hold it in their hands when they give solemn evidence affecting death or property. The sick man is almost afraid to die unless it is within his reach. The battleship goes into action with one on board whose duty it is to expound it. The very translation of it has fixed language and settled the idioms of speech. The orator holds a thousand men for half an hour breathless, but this word has held a thousand nations for thrice a thousand years spellbound by an abiding power—the universality of its truth—and we feel it to be no more a collection of books, but The Book."

Men talk very carelessly, my friends, about the inspiration of men of genius and compare Shakespeare with Isaiah. But while Shakespeare was a genius and Isaiah was not, Isaiah was inspired and Shakespeare was not. There is no more comparison between them than between the words of men and of God. Other books are not like this Book. It differs from them in kind as well as in degree. As Joseph Cook declared, "This Book is the only one in the world that a man can swallow whole. The only one that, if so swallowed, will not produce spiritual indigestion, with pimples on the face, dizziness of the head and staggering in the limbs."

This is quite true. In spite of its blemishes, real or fancied; in spite of its antiquity and the unblushing candor with which it discusses matters too delicate for modern ears; in spite of the obsolete ethical standards of some parts of it, and the unapproachable idealism of other parts of it, this book just as it is, without revision or apology, is the one book which all the world would be better for reading and knowing and living upon. And for this reason we know it is the Word of God.

In conclusion, I offer you the Bible and the Christ—each witnessing to the other, each as dependable as the other; both of them from God. "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think that ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me."

A CHRISTIAN EDUCATION PILGRIMAGE.

BY HERMON ELDREDGE.

V. A WORLD VIEW.

With fifty-two nations in conference, and with the costumes and varied colors and many languages every where in evidence, one could not well forget that one was in a world atmosphere. The theme of the Convention, "Jesus Christ for the Healing of the Nations," and the Convention motto, "That the World may Know that Thou hast Sent Me," surrounded by the flags of fifty-two nations, were continually before us in the great St. Andrew's Convention Hall, and the many languages, with one accord, speaking to the same end, was a touch of Pentecost which filled us again with a holy zeal for a new crusade or at least a larger one.

The great difference which I see between the International Convention of Sunday Schools which we hold in America and this World's Convention is not a difference of numbers (for they are equally largely attended), but in the spirit of the Conventions. Our North American (U. S. and Canada) International Conventions have numbers and even better music and greater volume than can be possible in a world's meeting. Then the International has great addresses and conferences on methods and a wonderful spiritual atmosphere, all of which we find here in the World's meeting; but added to these is the great missionary note which is not just what America is going to do to save the world, but what fifty nations banded together under the leadership of Christ, are determined to do for their brethren in every land. I do not think I can make the point clear, but I must say that here in Glasgow it is the Christian Church in all the world, with their representatives present shouting: "Hurrah for us, for we are going to help the poor heathen!"

That is not very well written, and I fear that I cannot get across to you how much different it is to sit down all by ourselves in America and plan a missionary forward movement than it is to sit down with Japan and South America, and India and Africa, and Australia and the island peoples themselves and feel that we are together in a common task. It is great to have a great iron merchant of Japan, a real Japanese, talk to us about evangelizing the world and to have his definite suggestion, seconded by a swarthy Egyptian and supported in a passionate appeal by an Armenian.

On Friday morning, China and Japan, and Korea and the Philippine delegates hold the center of the stage, and in the afternoon Scandanavia and France and Switzerland told us of their progress and plans. The educational and missionary appeals were given by Dean Cairns, of Edinburgh University, and Dr. Fullerton, of London, and in the evening, after reports from Algeria, Egypt, Syria, and South Africa, Mr. Basil Matthews, of London, led us to the mountain-top with an address on "The New World Situation." It is almost a crime not to give outlines of these addresses, but it is impossible to do them anything but injustice in an outline, and so I refrain.

Saturday was given to the young people themselves, and there was a great review and address by Lieutenant-General Robert Baden Powell, of the English army, who spoke for peace, and in a masterful way showed the frightfulness and folly of war. The great review of boys and girls who marched before him were delegations from the "Boys' Brigade," the "Girls' Guildry," the "Boy Scouts," the "Girl Guides," the "Boys' Life Brigade," and the "Girls' Life Brigade," and many young people's temperance and missionary societies and classes of all sorts. It was a great day, with the Glasgow Orphans' Choir as a background and the great address in the evening by Dr. Clarence True Wilson, of Washington, D. C., on "The Sunday School and World Prohibition."

The Scotch and English people are far, far behind us in temperance vision or progress, but they are steadily gaining in temperance sentiment, and here and there it is in evidence that the cause is marching on. I spent a day in Edinburgh, and a Saturday night on High Street, and I realized how far old Edinburgh, as well as Glasgow and Scotland, is from prohibition—just about where we were in 1900, twenty-four years ago, with saloons on the main corners of every business street, and drunkenness everywhere. But, worse than that is the mingling of women with men in the saloons, and I had a drunken woman plead with me to buy her another drink. I saw boys and girls of fourteen, or thereabouts, getting drink in these places and taking it home to their people.

But, in spite of all that, I am convinced more than ever of the sterling qualities in the English and Scotch people, and the day of doom is coming for the public house and the public nuisance of drunkenness in Britain. Back of those you see in the saloon and on the street, there are thousands working and waiting and praying for the coming day of freedom from such a curse.

Sunday morning I had the privilege of preaching in a great United Free Church, in South Glasgow, which was built where the Old Scotch Covenanters gave their lives rather than to give up their religious freedom. They refused to recant, and went unafraid to death as martyrs. Do you wonder that after one has faced a solid congregation of this sort of folks that he does not despair of things in Scotland and knows that the Saturday night street crowd is not real Scotland? The Sabbath in Scotland is a wonderful day. One of the most beautiful Sabbath scenes I ever saw was the throngs, and throngs, and throngs of Sunday-dressed people on the streets of Glasgow on Sunday morning on their way to the house of God. And then the filled houses of worship, with the air of reverence and worship in the stately music, the fervent prayers and the wholehearted participation of the people in the response and singing.

Monday, in the Convention Hall, we heard messages from Australia, Austria, Hungary, and New Zealand, and had inspirational addresses from Dr. McAfee, of Chicago, and from Moderator Williams, of the General Assembly of Wales, and in the afternoon we were tendered a sail down the River Clyde by the Convention committee.

At the Young People's Conference, on Tuesday, I had the privilege of giving an address on "Young People Organized for Group Efficiency," which was very kindly received. Of course, I should be very vain to outline it, and to leave out so many other more wonderful things.

An old friend of the Christian Church, Dr. W. C. Pearce, came to the Convention in very poor condition, because of a very trying experience he had in Spain, and asked me to take an address which he had in one of the great Free Churches on Wednesday night. I was very glad to do so, and to speak for him representing the United States, and with me, on the platform, were representatives of Europe, Asia, Africa, as well as America. Shiek Dewairy, a real shiek of Cairo, Egypt, spoke for Africa, and Dr. Aunett, of India, spoke for Asia. Sir Robert Reid, of Glasgow, presided and spoke for his continent, and I spoke for their sister land across the sea in the absence of Dr. Pierce. I was glad indeed for the experience, and the more so because it showed the Scotch people to me in a new light. I had been told how slow and cold and reserved they were, and my experience in the Polmadie Free Church on Sunday surely confirmed all that. They were all as solemn and attentive as could be, but no expression of approval at or after the service except the minister, who was overappreciative and review for me the five points of my discourse. But on this week-day night I must say that I never faced a more appreciative audience. They looked for places to applaud and cheer and stamp their feet, and call "Hear! hear," and I was quite embarrassed by their long-continued applause at the close of the address. I spoke to the minister about it afterwards and told him how different was my experience on the previous Sunday, and he replied by saying that this was Wednesday and that was Sunday, and good Scotch Churchmen never show approval or give applause on Sunday, but the same congregation, in the same Church, on Monday night would cheer the same speaker to the limit. At least I admire their self-control and reverence for the Sabbath in this.

At the close of the service on Wednesday night the Scotch minister told me that he was going on vacation in August, and if I would remain for his pulpit for that month he would be very glad to allow me the Church fee for such service. But I told him that my plans carried me on, and I was forced to decline his kind offer without even asking the amount of the "fee."

Thursday was the great closing day of the Convention. In the meanwhile I had acted with seven American members of the International Lesson Committee, and with an equal number from the British committee on lessons for mission lands. Day after day the representatives of the different mission lands of the world came before the committee and stated their difficulties and their needs, and a plea that our American and British committees get together to help them and the outcome of the week of Conference resulted in a tentative arrangement between the two committees, which we hope will mean much for future usefulness in mission lands. The results were reported to the general Convention on Thursday by Prof. Weigle, of the American committee, and Dr. Garvie, chairman of the British committee, and the announcement that we had come to a practical working agreement between these two groups was received with prolonged applause.

Thursday night was the closing session, and it was a great one. After the closing addresses by Dr. Floyd Tompkins, of Philadelphia, and a consecration meeting by Dr. F. B. Meyer, of London, the great choir sang the "Allelujah Chorus" and the greatest World's Sunday School Convention in history was finished, or rather its work, which had been mapped out, was now to begin. We were all sobered with the great vision and the responsibility now resting upon us.

All the old executive officers, including Landes, Pearce and Price, were re-elected, but in the death of President John Wanamaker, Dr. W. C. Poole, of Christ's Church, London, was elected president, and the place of the 1928 World's Convention was fixed at Los Angeles, Calif., although Rio de Janerio, Brazil, struggled nobly for this honor.

And now our party moves on for a week to London, and my next will be from that great world center.

New York City, generally regarded as the one unfailing oasis in our prohibition country, did not measure up to the expectations of the thirsty during the recent Democratic Convention. In fact, it fell far short of the advertisements widely circulated by the nullificationists in their pre-convention statements.

There was considerable liquor seized—in fact, enough to total about $600,000 in value—but seized liquor is useless as a thirst-quencher to the scofflaws. Divisional Chief of Prohibition Merrick congratulates the city upon its observance of the eighteenth amendment. He declares that he saw but one drunken man during the entire convention, and that incognito inquiry at Madison Square Garden failed to find any one who knew of liquor selling in the vicinity.

OUR PLEDGES
Men and Millions Sacred, Solemn and Binding.

These obligations were made through the Church to the Kingdom of God and to all that pertains to building up that Kingdom in the world, so far as our Christian Church is concerned. As Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., has so pertinently pointed out: "A Christian can no more drop his pledges than he can drop his prayers or his Church membership. Misfortune may make it impossible to meet financial obligations--'When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both' (Luke 7:42)--but not till 'they had nothing to pay.' Obligations to God are as binding as obligations to men, and God will help those who try to keep their pledges."

Many are making great sacrifices to meet these obligations and pay these pledges. Is your Church on this list? If not, let's do our best to get it there. If there, let's get it in first place.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

LET US CLEANSE OURSELVES.

"Having, therefore, these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God."—2 Cor. 1:7.

Cleansing is spoken of here as a human work, because it is by faith we appropriate the purifying power. We cleanse ourselves by believing the promises. By the "flesh" we understand the lower animal nature which we have in common with the brute creation. The "spirit" is our higher, nobler nature designed to be the temple of God in man. The expression, "all filthiness of the flesh and spirit," embraces the whole of those evil propensities of our nature which would lead us to any kind of inordinate, sensual indulgence, and all evil tempers, such as pride, envy, self-will, malice, uncharitableness, etc. It is that carnal and fleshly mindedness of the heart which inheres to our fallen nature—the inward fountain from which all actual sins in the life have their rise. It includes the whole of sin possible to man. Let us, therefore, cleanse ourselves. We have the promises. But what use are they unless we use them? They are our instruments or means of cleansing. On God's part all is done. The atonement is complete, the provisions ample. But we must do our part. We must appropriate the purifying power by faith. We cleanse our hands with soap and water. We cleanse our souls by believing the promises. "I will save you from all your uncleannesses." This is surely enough. Believe that he doeth it, and according to your faith it shall be done.

"I cannot wash my heart,
  But by believing Thee;
And waiting for Thy blood to impart
  The spotless purity."

"While at Thy cross I lie,
  Jesus the grace bestow;
Now Thy all-cleansing blood apply,
  And I am white as snow.

TUESDAY.

OUR SUFFICIENCY.

"Not that we are sufficient of ourselves to think anything as of ourselves; but our sufficiency is of God."—2 Cor. 3:5.

The secret of power for the holy life and work required of us is made manifest in these words, namely, an omnipresent consciousness of absolute self-insufficiency for any and every "good thing," or work; and an equally omnipresent consciousness of an ever-available all-sufficiency in Christ, through the Spirit. Availing ourselves of this, as we may and we are required to do, we may be, and become, and accomplish all that God desires or requires us to be, to become, and to accomplish. Wherever these two sentiments in this absolute form exist among believers, not a sickly or feeble one will be found amongst them. Each in his or her particular sphere will be endued with "everlasting strength." Wherever, on the other hand, either of these elements is wanting, or is feebly developed in the heart and mind of the believer, then feebleness, sinning, and repenting, and falling beckward after every experience (falling backward after every advance), will be the inevitable result. Hence, the ever-memorable utterance of our Saviour, "Abide in me, and I in you."

"Of my boasted wisdom spoiled,
  Docile, helpless as a child;
Only seeing in Thy light,
  Only walking in Thy might."

WEDNESDAY.

"And Mephibosheth said unto the king, Yea, let him take all, for as much as my Lord the King is come again into peace unto His own house."—2 Sam. 19:30.

Before Saul of Tarsus could become "Paul, the apostle to the Gentiles," that "chosen vessel" had to be emptied of all its Jewish prejudices, its selfishness, its pride of intellect, its world ambitions, its sinful aims; and, in complete surrender, the soul to be possessed must needs cry out "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" Then, blinded by the brilliancy of the sight he got of his Lord in that supreme moment, Ananias, at Jesus' command, said unto him, "Brother Saul, . . . receive thy sight and be filled with the Holy Ghost." So must we be emptied if we would be filled. Every abiding fullness of the Spirit must be preceded by an emptying. "I sought the blessing long and earnestly," said one, "and I wondered why it did not come. At last I found that it was because there was no room in my heart to receive it." Sadder thought seldom comes to the soul than this. God must often make room for Himself by dashing down our idols and plucking up our pleasures, before He can get His rightful place within us. If thou art God's child, all thy idols are doomed. God cannot brook a rival, and will not tolerate idolatry in His own now, any more than He did in His chosen Israel of old. Say with Mephibosheth, "Yea, let Him take all, forasmuch as my Lord the King is come again in peace to His own house."

"O to be nothing, nothing,
  Only to lie at His feet,
A broken and empty vessel,
  For the Master's use made meet;
Emptied that He may fill me,
  As forth to His service I go;
Broken, that so unhindered,
  His life through me may flow."

THURSDAY.

"He that is feeble among them at that day shall be as David; and the house of David shall be as God, as the angel of the Lord before them."—Zech. 12:8.

"The Greeks' idea of power was knowledge; the Roman's, martial prowess, faculties for organization, and for rule; the Jew's, ability to produce signs and wonders"—but the power which Christ promised to His disciples transcends all these, even as the supernatural transcends the natural. The apostles before Pentecost were naturally dull of understanding, naturally not above an average grade, hard of heart, and slow of faith; but filled with the Spirit, such men as these were fitted for the most stupendous task ever undertaken by mortals. What else could have enabled a few rude, unlettered fishermen to overthrow the great religions of the world? What other power could have enabled instruments so apparently inadequate to overcome the prejudice of the Jew, the supercilious contempt of the Roman, and the pride of knowledge and profligacy of the Greek; in a word, to shake the world, and turn it upside down? And since Pentecost, does not all experience testify that it is not intellect, however brilliant; not genius, however wonderful; not eloquence, however captivating, that have accomplished the mighty moral revolutions in the world, but men and women filled with the Holy Ghost?

"O breath of God, breathe on us now,
  And move within us while we pray;
The spring of our new life art Thou,
  The very light of our new day.

"But, ah! this faithless heart of mine!
  The way I know; I know my Guide.
Forgive me, O my Friend Divine,
  That I so often turn aside."

FRIDAY.

"Are there not twelve hours in a day? If any man walk in the day, he stumbleth not, because he seeth the light of this world. But if a man walk in the night, he stumbleth, because there is no light in him."—John 11:9-10.

"In this wonderful saying of the Master's, there are gathered together a whole company of strong, helpful thoughts. "Are there not twelve hours in a day?" Is there not a fixed time for human labor, during which God supplies all the conditions necessary for its performance? So for the work of life there is an appointed period, during which all required grace and light are available to accomplish the good works unto which we were created in Christ Jesus. "I must work the works of Him that sent me, wihle it is day." Christ seems to have had a clear perception not only of the work which the Father had given Him to do, but also of the period within which it was to be accomplished—"My day." And although the length of our own day is unknown to us, it is, nevertheless, a most gladdening thought that its span is broad enough to hold the work that the Father has given each one of us to do for His glory and the blessings of souls. "Are there not twelve hours in the day?"—and twelve only? Wasted time means marred and imperfect work.

SATURDAY.

GOD IN EVERYTHING.

"Be careful for nothing; but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God."—Phil. 4:6.

Be anxious for nothing; be prayerful in everything, be thankful for everything. That is the secret of possessing the peace of God which passeth all understanding. Madame Guyon's motto was: "God in everything; small things as well as great; natural things as well as religious." On one occasion she says: "God took care of all my concerns. I saw His providence incessantly extended to the very smallest things." Some valuable things had been lost, but she says: "I left it wholly with the Lord in great peace and confidence. Whether I received them or not, I could not separate the result from God's will; and that will was equally dear to me in either case. After I had taken what seemed to me suitable measures, some pressed me much to write again; but an invisible hand held me back. Something within me whispered that it would be distrusting the Lord." These valuable papers ultimately came to hand in an unexpected way.

"Who stoops to clothe a fading flower
  Will every needful blessing give,
And fit the creature of an hour,
  An endless life with Him to live.

"My Father knows the things I need,
  My Father knows, let that suffice;
I trust Him now to clothe and feed His child
  Who on His love relies.

"The cause of my misgiving fear,
  Lord, I my unbelief confess;
Author of faith in me appear,
  And bid my doubts and troubles cease."

DEAR LITTLE PLAYMATES:

This seems a good name for this summer-time month, for we are all playing now, and isn't it loads of fun?

Many of you will be packing to go away. Why don't you take paper and pencil with you and write me a train letter? And please try for the "Little Story Contest," boys especially, for you are letting the girls get ahead of you in winning prizes.

I always talk so much every week that there is no room for all the things you say, so write me some more letters—vacation letters—and they will go into your page for all to enjoy.

Don't forget the contest. You have two more weeks yet. So hurry up and send in your story.

Your editor-playfellow,
MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT.

LITTLE STORY CONTEST.

Take your time, and the first sentence in the paragraph, and write a story for your own page. Here is the block for the story:

A little Girl wanted—to go home; to play in the sand; to play with stars.
She went out to find them, and came to a—park; to a pond; to a city.
She could not find any stars, so she—went home; walked on; sat and cried.
She came to a—big tree; brook in the woods.
She found no stars there, so she—went home; she went on; she wept.
Soon she met—some friends; some fairies; some men.
They told her to—dry her clothes; do some work; dance with them.
She still did not find—her way home; the fairies; one star.
Then the fairies told her—to go home; to come again; just what to do.
Soon she found—four friends; a star; a horse.
Then she came to a river—edge of the sea; a big city.
"No feet" was—a flower; a fish.
He carried her to—the town; the stairs without steps.
He carried her to—climb; take the stars home.
All of a sudden—she saw; the stars; she let go.
Bang! She found herself—in the water; in her own bed; slipping.
She had been—far away; dreaming.

A BIG SURPRISE.

(For "Little Story Contest.)

One day a little girl wanted to play with the stars. She cried all day, and when night came she was so cross that her mother said, "Betty, I want you to run out into the park and play with the squirrels; you may feed them some peanuts."

She went out to find them, and as she was playing around, she came to a pond. She looked into the water, and there were no stars in it tonight!. What was the matter, thought Betty.

After a while she came to a big tree. She found no stars there, so she sat down to rest. Soon she met some friends. They were fairies—some little tiny men. They told her to dance with them, which she did. As she danced she saw one star in the sky.

Soon she found a large horse strolling around in the woods, eating grass. She called to him, and soon he took her down to the edge of the sea. Who do you suppose she met? A large fish, and he told her his name was "No Feet."

She got on his back, and he carried her to the stairs without steps. Here she climbed and climbed!

All of a sudden, she saw the stars. She reached up to gather some, when—bang! She found herself sitting by a tree in the park. She had been dreaming.

She hopped up and ran home as fast as she could go. She told her mother she would never cry for the stars again.

WHAT IS HOME?

Now, then, I wonder which of the Sunbeams will answer this question, and send the answer to me at once! The ten best answers will be published in your "Kiddies' Korner." Here is the question, "What is Home?"

That's such an easy question that I'm sure you all can answer it quickly.

MUSIC LESSONS.

Helen Wing.

I'm taking music lessons now; my teacher came today
And sat beside me on a chair and showed me how to play.
At first I pressed my fingers down, and then I pressed my thumb,
And every time I pushed a note it made the music come.
I learned about a "do-re-me" and "fa-sol-la-ti-do,"
But when I'd get as far as "fa" my fingers wouldn't go.
My teacher did it nice and fast and never missed a note,
And when she played it up and down, her hands just seemed to float.
She says she tried it lots of times before she got it right;
She must have practiced 'most a year and stayed up every night.

BEAR HUNT.

This is a game that boys like especially well, for it requires lots of space and action. The best places to play it in are parks, picnic grounds, or wooded fields.

The person who has studied this game and can direct the others is the first fire-watcher. He has provided himself with a pencil and some small pieces of paper large enough to write a name on. He selects a spot near the center of the area in which the hunt is to take place, and lays some twigs on the ground to mark the camp-fire site. He now directs all the players to form a circle around the fire and sit down.

The fire-watcher now counts the number in the circle. If there are eight, he marks H on seven pieces of paper and B on the other piece. These papers are passed and the players told not to tell a soul which letter they draw; but that all are to run off and hide while the fire-watcher counts to one hundred, and when he calls, hounds, hounds, hounds, those who drew the letter H come back to the camp-fire, and the one who drew the letter B, which means bear, has a chance to run still farther away to hide, for the fire-watcher will keep the hounds by the camp-fire until he has counted to one hundred again. When he says one hundred, the hounds start to bay fiercely and to seek the bear.

If by any strategy the bear gets back to the fire without being caught he may choose a new fire-watcher and be the bear a second time; however, this seldom happens. The one who catches the bear may be "it" the next game and may also choose a new fire-watcher.

A BIRTHDAY PARTY.

One day, Mother Rabbit said, "Peter, dear, your birthday is coming soon, and you have been such a good little rabbit I want you to have a birthday party and invite all the other little rabbits in the neighborhood." Peter Rabbit danced around, and hopped and skipped with delight. Like every other little rabbit, he had always wanted a birthday party.

Before the glad day came, Mother Rabbit sent out a nice formal invitation in the shape of a little verse—like this:

I have a secret for you—
Of course, you want to be told!
I'm going to have a party
The day I'm five years old.
So come to my house Tuesday,
(Time) at four o'clock—
We'r going to have a jolly time,
That will echo 'round the block.

And when Tuesday came, it was funny to see all the little rabbits in their "Sunday best" coming down the street. When they got to Peter Rabbit's door, they were met by a queer little rabbit that looked like Peter, but wasn't Peter at all (you see, it had always been a strange custom among the rabbits, on one's birthday, to give him or her a "whack" for every year). Now, Mother Rabbit had made a dummy that looked like her darling little Peter, but wasn't him at all. Oh! such fun they had, giving the Dummy the whacks meant for Peter.

Then here comes Mother Rabbit with a basket full of pretty-colored crepe paper, and lots of pins. The dear little rabbits all sat down in a big circle, and were told to make, just as quickly as possible, a little gift for Peter Rabbit.

When these were all finished—oh! how funny it was to see them all strung upon a line; and what do you think! Susan won the prize, because she made a little bonnet the best of any. Now, of course, Peter didn't wear a bonnet at all, but he liked it because Susan had made it all for him. That's the way with all good-natured children, and Peter was in the habit of using good manners.

But when Mother Rabbit called the little guests into the dining-room—oh, dear me! what a sight met their eyes! There was the birthday cake, with candles, in the center of the table; and at each little rabbit's place was his own name on a flower that grew in his or her birthday month. Of course, Mother Rabbit had made these with her own needle and thread and scissors, and—all for Peter Rabbit's fifth birthday. How happy he was, too! And they had Peter Rabbit's favorite Sunshine Cake, all frosted over with pink icing, and the five pinkest candles you ever saw were all alight on top. Gee! and there were Raisin Cup Cakes and almonds all sprinkled with powdered sugar; and Peter Rabbit and his little guests were so happy that they almost forgot to use the beautiful napkins with bunnies in the corners, that Mother Rabbit had tucked into their collars to keep off all little rabbit fingerprints from their nice party clothes.

They told Mother Rabbit they had had a happy time; they told Peter Rabbit they had a happy time. And then their nurses came for them and they went home to tell their own mothers about Peter Rabbit's birthday party.

And I have heard that Peter Rabbit wants a birthday party every year since.

Subject: "The First Miracle of Jesus."

Golden Text: "Whatsoever He sayeth unto you, do it."—John 2:5.

Lesson: John 2:1-11.

Devotional Reading: Psa. 108:1-6.

The Master was starting out on His public ministry. At His baptism, He had become conscious of His Messianic mission. He knew that He was the long-looked-for Redeemer of Israel. At His temptation, He had fought out the principles which should govern Him in His mission. He had decided once and for all the course which He would pursue. And then in the strength of the Spirit He had entered upon His work.

And the first place He went was to a wedding. The fact of the matter is that the first miracle of Jesus'—He is still performing miracles—was performed at a wedding feast, a festive occasion, a time of merry-making and of joy. Surely there is something significant here, and we will do well to consider this thing.

There are those who feel that Jesus Christ has no place in the lighter things of life. They would confine Him to the strictly religious sphere of a man's activity, and in most cases they would set Him up in opposition to many of the forms of social activity of their day and time. But they cannot do this successfully, for Jesus came to give men life and to give it to them more abundantly, and His spirit cannot be shut up in narrow confines of life. He came not to destroy life, but to fulfill and fill full. And He demonstrates that fact in this incident at the wedding feast.

A wedding feast was a time of joy and lightheartedness. And the fact that Jesus was there is an indication that He was no "kill-joy." He was, on the contrary, the kind of man that folks liked to have around on just such an occasion. And there was a reason. He always added something worthwhile to the occasion.

A wedding feast was typical of Jewish social life. And the fact that Jesus was there was an indication that He wanted His spirit to permeate and save social life. But it is also significant that Jesus was at a wedding. There is perhaps no place where He is more needed. It is a momentous day in the life of a young man and a young woman when they stand in the presence of God and plight their lives and their love to each other, and they need the presence and the spirit of Jesus Christ. God pity the young couple who are not conscious of His presence on their nuptial day. And God pity them if they do not strive to keep Him as their unseen, yet very real, Guest throughout their married life.

The mother of Jesus was there. These mothers of men! Thank God for them, and for their confidence in us. It was natural and inevitable that she should turn to Jesus in the hour of need. And it was typical of motherhood that she had confidence in her boy. "Whatsoever He sayeth unto you, do it." This is sound advice today as it was when Mary spake the words. Jesus Christ is the world's supreme authority, and He has a right to be heard, and He must be obeyed if people are to be happy.

The story speaks for itself. It will bear reading and rereading. And as we read it, certain great truths stand out.

1. Jesus Christ sanctifies social life wherever He touches it.
2. Jesus Christ is the most logical place to find help in time of need.
3. Jesus Christ can meet the deepest needs of human life.
4. Jesus Christ deserves a hearing and demands obedience.
5. Jesus Christ transforms that which He touches.
6. Jesus Christ always has better things in store for us.
7. The confidence of others in us is a dynamic factor in life.
8. No wedding is complete without Christ's presence.
9. Jesus began His "signs," or miracles, in Galilee, at Cana. He is still doing them everywhere.
10. People may think that it is embarrassing to have Christ, but it is far more embarrassing not to have Him.
12. Men have only to see the glory of Christ to believe on Him.

BEAUTIFUL THINGS IN NATURE.

Topic: "Beautiful Things I See in Nature—Their Lessons."

Scripture Lessons: Matt. 6:26-34.

(An Outdoor Meeting.)

The most beautiful thing that we can see in nature is our Creator. His working hand, and His great power. We see Him everywhere. Go to the seashore, watch the billows roll, and God is there. Go to the mountains, and watching the towering peaks, we see God there. Go to the Western prairies, and lo! God is there. The thought of nature's obedience to the Master-hand should inspire us to become more obedient. When we see the beauty of nature, we only see the result of obedience to God. "Consider the lilies how they grow: they toil not, they spin not; and I say unto you that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." Why do lilies grow beautiful? They obey God, and are constantly growing at the command of their Creator. And in their beauty we see their Maker's face.

Some one said, "cutting an apple into thin slices at right angles with the core, and holding the slices up to the sun, you will see the outlines of the flower that foretold the fruit." Should not we get a message from nature, and become so obedient to our Master-gardner's plan for us that people seeing our deeds could see the Master's life in us?

Jesus saw God everywhere—in the fluttering bird, and in the springing grass—and I imagine that He could wonderfully sing from His heart that wonderful hymn, "This is My Father's World."

"This is my Father's world, and to my listening cars
All nature sings, and round me rings the music of the spheres.
This is my Father's world, I rest me in the thought
Of rocks and trees, of skies and seas—His hands the wonders wrought.

"This is my Father's world, the birds their carols raise,
The morning light, the lily white, declare their Maker's praise.
This is my Father's world, He shines in all that's fair;
In the rustling grass I hear Him pass; He speaks to me everywhere."

Questions.

What beautiful things do you see in the different seasons that teach you a lesson? How may we develop the power to see lessons in nature? Is nature-study worth while? Why? How may a notebook or camera help in nature-study?

JIBARO HEAD HUNTERS.

From the highlands of Ecuador to the east of Riobamba, a very rapid descent is made into the heavily forested Amazon Valley, and the traveler finds himself in the land of the Jibaros, formerly a very numerous and war-like tribe, who exterminated the Spaniards who had established prosperous cities in that region. These people are devil-worshipers. If God is good, they reason, they have nothing to fear from Him. The devil, however, is malignant; therefore, he must be propitiated by worship and sacrifice. The witch doctor is their chief authority and resource in time of sickness and need. In case of serious illness, some child or other helpless person is looked upon as the cause, and tortured, frequently to death, in order that the sick person may find relief. A strong man or warrior is never chosen to be made the subject of these tortures. An able-bodied man is so strong that he cannot be made the tool of the devil in producing sickness, the Jibaros argue; but children, women, and old men may be so used. Women do the heavy work, such as tilling the ground and carrying burdens. A man may have several wives, and it is customary to kill the old and useless ones.

War is the normal state of the Jibaro Indian, first for the purpose of getting wives from neighboring or enemy tribes; second, for revenge of injuries inflicted upon relatives during those wars, then for enemy heads that are supposed to bring good luck to the possessors because of the sacrifice of the victim to the devil. The heads of their enemies also become a source of income to these savage Amazonian tribes, since they are exchanged with traders for arms, ammunition, etc.

The skull is removed from the head of the decapitated enemy through a slit in the back from the neck up. The skin is then boiled to arrest putrefaction, after which it is dried and reduced in size by inserting hot stones the size of an orange. When the interior has been shrunk to the size of the stones, hot sand is used to continue the process of drying and shrinking. After the process is completed, the head is hung up in the hut as a trophy and feasts are made in its honor. These miniature heads retaining to a remarkable degree characteristic likeness to the living person, are unfortunately in demand in the outside world. Merchants in Lima, Peru, and even in Panama, have these gruesome objects mounted in glass cases upon their counters as a side attraction to their places of business.

During the last two centuries the Jibaros have greatly decreased in numbers. Their attitude toward the whites has become more friendly, and they respond readily to kindly approach.—F. W. Jordan, in Christian Herald.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

We are always appreciative of any contribution we receive for the Orphanage, whether it be large or small, but sometimes when we know the circumstances under which a contribution is made it makes us feel that we should be a little more appreciative. It is easy for a person to give us a thousand dollars when they have plenty and to spare, but the man or woman who has to sacrifice and save and do without the comforts of life to make a contribution to help care for the Orphanage, deserves a great deal of credit, to say the least.

I once read of a good woman who was filled with the very spirit of enthusiasm for work in the foreign field. She wanted to carry the gospel to the people who knew not God and His great love, but she was an invalid and had to lay flat on her back for a number of years and it was impossible for her to go, but she had a vision of the great good she might do if she could go, but she realized to go herself was impossible, but she did not give up because of her handicap. She lay on her bed for years and knitted with her needle and made fancy work and sold it and paid the salary for another to go and preach in her stead. I wonder if she was not a burning bush like unto the one Moses saw. She was full of the flame of enthusiasm and was not consumed. She was a bright and shining light and an inspiration to others.

Last week, Mrs. J. C. Cox, of Durham, N. C., sent a nice quilt to the Orphanage to help keep the children warm next winter. I am informed by a good friend that Mrs. Cox is an invalid and suffers a great deal from rheumatism and other troubles, but in her hours of suffering she caught the vision of the hundred little children at the Orphanage and wanted to help them. She got some cloth and her needle and made a nice quilt and sent it to us. This bears out the idea that where there's a will there's a way. She had the will, and she made the way. We are very grateful indeed for her contribution, as we know the circumstances under which it was given. May God bless this good woman and cause others to catch the vision she had, and then act as she has.

Don't forget to can some fruit for us.

MAKING MEN OUT OF CHILDREN.

The use of educational films in schools is on the increase. The demand has been held ephemeral by many producers, but it has kept up so steadily and become so insistent that many companies are finding it pays better to produce them to sell to schools than to engage in the making of plays, which have at best but a short life.

Visual education has always been recognized as a powerful aid in the acquiring of knowledge. Actual travel is better than the illustrated lecture; the chemical experiment performed is worth a dozen read about in books. The motion picture, so life-like, is worth any quantity of illustrations; its showing of processes beats any possible description.

Educators are naturally, and rightfully, conservative. The educational world has learned to beware the fad, the fancy, the radical idea in teaching. Some are still averse to the motion picture, but their number is decreasing. The fact that conservative educators find the film a real help is the best argument why school boards should see to it that schools are equipped with projectors and that the higher type of producers should provide that the supply of educational films becomes inexhaustible.

After all is said, the real work of the world is providing for its continuance and its betterment. That means making citizens out of children, educated men and women out of students. There is no more important work before any of us than that; conquest, invention, commerce, exploration, discovery, are all less important than the people who will one day carry on the torch we pass to their hands.

Let us, then, do our part in emphasizing the need of more and better educational films, travel films, scientific films; let us insist that our children's school be equipped with a suitable projecter and screen, that our children have the utmost in benefit from one of the great inventions of the nineteenth century, which is only now, in the twentieth, coming into full fruition.—Selected.

THE LAND OF THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

The summary of the world's Sunday School statistics is at once a great encouragement, a great challenge, and a great anxiety to every thoughtful Christian. The total number of Sunday School members in all the world is 32,677,611; but of this number the United States alone furnishes almost one-third, or 19,970,629. The Sunday School membership of Europe makes up almost another third of the grand total, being 9,100,000. Of the comparatively small numbers remaining, the whole continent of Asia supplies only 1,564,475; and Oceania, with Australia as its largest unit, comes next, with 869,705, while Africa follows with only 769,567. The whole of South America, Central America and the West Indies is only a little over 300,000. In a word, the Anglo-Saxon race has developed the Sunday Schools of the world; and the Sunday School, as a Christian institution, has made but little progress in other lands. Two or three highly important conclusions emerge from this situation. First of all, the Sunday School as an institution is peculiar to the Protestant Churches of Christendom; and the Sunday School is the most forceful agency by which Christianity is being introduced into non-Christian and non-Protestant lands. It is manifest also that the nations having the largest number of Sunday School members are the most peace-loving nations of the world. The third conclusion follows quickly. It is this, that the best soil for the propagation of peace sentiment is among the Sunday School millions of Great Britain and America.—Methodist Recorder.

PROSPECT GOOD FOR PEACH CROP.

Housewives in the Eastern and Southern States who have been waiting for a chance to combine cheap peaches and cheap sugar will find their opportunity this season, according to the United States Department of Agriculture.

Not since 1915 has the peach crop east of the Rocky Mountains been so large as it promises to be this year, the department says. Georgia has by far the biggest peach crop ever grown in that State, and in most of the Cotton States the crop is the largest since 1915. A good peach crop is expected in all the Atlantic Coast States.

The same sections that expect a good peach crop also expect more than the usual production of pears.

The highest security against temptation lies in the steady development of an affirmative life. The final aim in life is to be something rather than to avoid or to escape something. The best form of defense lies in spiritual attack. If we walk in the grip of some splendid, far-reaching purpose, we shall put down temptation under our feet. We are in the conqueror's path if we walk in the Spirit; we shall then walk secure from attack.—Chas. R. Brown.

WICKER.

Mrs. B. W. Wicker was born October 15, 1849; died June 29, 1924. Early in life she professed faith in Christ, and until her death continued a faithful follower of Him and a consistent member of the Church. She leaves to mourn their loss her husband, a son, Kenneth Wicker; three daughters—Mrs. William Wicker, Mrs. Hal Rigsbee, and Miss Ida Wicker; besides many relatives and friends, who weep with them in their sorrow and rejoice with them in their hope of seeing her again. Funeral was conducted by Rev. T. E. White, assisted by Rev. L. C. Lee and the writer. May the Lord comfort the bereaved.

R. L. WILLIAMSON.

HENSHAW.

Died at his home near Pleasant Hill Christian Church, Alamance County, N. C., Jabin Henshaw, July 22, 1924, aged 77 years and 1 month.

On December 28, 1871, he and Miss Ruth Edwards were united in marriage, and to them were born ten children. His wife and two children preceded him to the spirit land. Surviving him are eight children, twenty-three grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

Bro. Henshaw was a member of the Cane Creek Friends Church and had been for a number of years. He was a very quiet, unassuming, faithful man. He trusted Christ and died in the blessed hope of a glorious immortality. The funeral services were conducted from Pleasant Hill Church, by the writer, assisted by other ministers present, and his remains were interred in the Church cemetery.

He has passed from mortal sight; but not forgotten. Sweet be his sleep till Jesus bids him arise.

The grim fortress surmounts a rocky height and commands enchanting prospects of Scotland's most picturesque scenery on all sides. Its history, filled with human thrills on every page, runs back a thousand years. Tardy recognition awarded in England to William Wallace, the national hero of Scotia, awakens vivid memories of his might and daring and as a valiant fighter for freedom. There is world-wide significance in Bannockburn to lovers of liberty, and the splendid struggle of Robert the Bruce with Edward the First of England through a whole generation of war-

WHEN GOD SEES THE CROSS.

Men can see Christ on the cross—and forget Him. God can never forget the sight He once saw—of His only begotten Son on the cross. It means more to God than it can mean even to those saved sinners here on earth who know and love the Lord best. Isaac Watts' great hymn, which God has blessed to uncounted multitudes of Christians, "When I Survey the Wondrous Cross," gives one side of the truth; but there is another side, even better, which has been brought out in a hymn by Anna Ross. She introduces it with Andrew Murray's words: "In prayer let us expect an answer like the value of the blood of Christ in His Father's sight." This new hymn, with its infinitely precious truths, is as follows:

"When God surveys the wondrous cross
On which His own Beloved died,
His richest stores of heavenly grace
To sinners all are opened wide.

"Forbid it, Lord, that I should boast,
Save in the death of Christ my God;
The inheritance of peace and power
Are mine own portion through His blood.

"See from His head, His hands, His feet,
Sorrow and love flow mingled down;
God freely gave His Son to death—
What will He do that death to crown?

"The whole wide universe is His,
But that were riches far too small;
In answer to the death of Christ
God gives Himself, His love, His all."

An inscription on a monument in Alabama reads: "In profound appreciation of the boll weevil and what it has done as the herald of prosperity, this monument is erected by the citizens of Enterprise, Coffee County, Ala." The weevil proved a blessing in that it taught the farmers the prosperity that follows crop rotation.

Why Drugs Fail

Many chronic diseases fail to respond to drug treatment, even in the hands of the best physicians, whereas acute diseases usually respond readily. When a disease has become chronic, drugs often seem to do as much harm as they do good, for the system rebels against them. It is just this class of cases which derive the greatest benefit from drinking Shivar, America's best stomach, liver and kidney Water. If you suffer with chronic dyspepsia, indigestion, sick headache, rheumatism, kidney or liver disease, uric poisoning or other curable conditions due to impure blood, do not hesitate to accept the Spring's liberal offer as printed below. Their records show that only two in a hundred, on the average, have reported "no benefit." This is a wonderful record from a truly wonderful Spring. Sign the following letter:

Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if I report no benefit you agree to refund the price of the water in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return within a month.

Are You Losing Your Grip on Health?

Physician's Prescription to Increase the Health and Strength of Anaemic, Run-down Men and Women

As a result of the tremendous strain of modern living many people find that the nerve cells have become devitalized, the whole system weakened, and thousands of men and women are today losing their grip on health simply because their blood is thinning out and possibly starving through lack of sufficient iron. It is through iron in the red coloring matter of the blood that life sustaining oxygen enters the body and enables the blood to change food into living tissue, muscle and brain. If people would only keep their blood filled with sufficient strength-giving iron by taking Nuxated Iron when they feel weak and run-down they might readily build up their red blood corpuscles and quickly become stronger and healthier in every way. If you are not strong or well you owe it to yourself to make the following test: See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired. Next take two five-grain tablets of ordinary Nuxated Iron three times per day after meals for two weeks. Then test your strength again and see how much you have gained. Nuxated Iron will increase the strength of nervous, 'run-down' men and women in many instances or the manufacturers guarantee successful and entirely satisfactory results to every user or they will refund your money. Nuxated Iron is on sale at all good druggists.

Fine Community Co-Operation.

A community organization of Davella, Martin County, Ky., has raised $27.50 of a necessary sum of $250 for the purchase of a radio receiving set, that the three hundred people living within a radius of three miles of Davella, which is without Church services, may hear sermons delivered by ministers in other parts of the country.

Whether an American chil dattends good schools depends largely on the accident of birth—that is, on whether it lives in a community wealthy enough and enterprising enough to support good schools.

There are many communities which lack the enterprise; some lack the means.

While some States are poorer than others, not one, say persons who have studied the subject, is too poor to see that all of its children have opportunity to attend good schools.

Unscientific State aid involves complications and dangers which would be much augmented by Federal aid. As a rule, the best schools are in those States which provide out of their treasuries the smallest proportions of money spent on schools.

There is much that the States can do in equalizing educational opportunity, and in fact much progress in that direction is being made by them.

There is an ex-United States circuit judge running for the nomination for Governor of the State of Missouri. He is making his campaign as a "wet." A few evenings ago he said that foolish laws ought to be disregarded. The German-American organization (silenced during the World War because of disloyal and enemy propaganda) before which this former judge was speaking, applauded the remark. Of course. But who would vote for a man as chief executive who says beforehand some laws ought to be disregarded? No scoff-law is fit to be Governor, or even to be regarded as a decent citizen. The voters of Missouri know what to do, and will do it at the primaries.—Ex.

There are 2,700,000 employees on the pay rolls of the Federal and local governments in the United States, and 700,000 former employees drawing pensions. Every group of twelve citizens having jobs is supporting one citizen in government capacity.

Vaults, supposed to be of Egyptian origin, have been found near the site of Fez, in Morocco, and are supposed to be vestiges of a town destroyed about the year 1000 B. C.

Building a Country Sunday School

By E. L. Middleton.

Mr. Middleton possesses definite qualifications for the preparation of this work. For twelve years after leaving college, he was a day school and Sunday School teacher in a village that had "once-a-week" preaching, with half the membership of the Sunday School living in the open country; while for fourteen years more he has been a State Sunday School secretary in rural State. Mr. Middleton urges the adoption of no novel or revolutionary ideas or methods. He recognizes the place and the value of recognized Sunday School policies and methods, and has prepared a digest of the essentials in a manner plain enough to render it adaptable for use in any rural school. Methods, administration, organization and development are each and all discussed in this book in an eminently practical way.

The price of the book is $1.25. You can order it through "The Christian Sun," 1536 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By Rev. S. M. Lynam.

General Smuts Resigns.—

The inevitable has happened in South Africa. General Smuts is finally defeated in his own constituency as well as in the entire union. For this reason, he has resigned, and General Hergog, with the labor support, is Prime Minister. General Hergog states that he will take no steps to sever the connection between South Africa and Great Britain.

During the last century, Great Britain has learned in some sort of way how to deal more equitably with her colonies, and now they are not desirous of complete independence. Some of them want home rule, and it is to the best interest of the British government to grant them this. It will train more of her subjects to bear responsibility should a crucial hour come.

Bobbed Hair no Joke.—

"To bob or not to bob" is no longer a joke, if the final decision arrived at is "to bob." Especially is this true to the manufacturers of hair nets and hair pins who have been thrown into a state of despair by the bobbed-hair craze of the moment. The situation has become acute in the last few months. New York newspapers reported recently that 2,000 girls were having their hair cut in that city alone.

All of us have thought of bobbed hair, either as a joke or as it reflected the moral tendencies of the present generation of women; but few of us had thought that it held such dire threats for big business. It brings again to our attention that the great enterprises of the world rest, in the last analysis, on the very small decisions of insignificant people. "To bob or not to bob" becomes a question of great importance to great manufacturers.

A Very Rich Church.—

Trinity Episcopal Church, New York, is the wealthiest Church in America. Last year its income amounted to $1,248,681, and its assets on January 1st of this year were $13,320,053. Of its income, $1,131,258 came from real estate rentals.

This is a very wealthy Church, and, with its wealth, could do much for the world; but when we read of its immense figures and of its rentals from real estate, we think again of the Catholic pontiff, who stood and looked down on the table piled with silver and gold, the income of the Catholic Church, and said: "No longer can the holy Church say, with Peter and John, silver and gold have we none; and neither can it say with them to the lame man at the gate beautiful, arise and walk." To be rich is a dangerous thing, is the teaching of the Master, and it is as true of Churches as of individuals. Faith may be crushed beneath the weight of gold.

Of World-Wide Interest.—

Figures recently given out by the school of religious education of Boston University show how far-reaching is the ministry of such a school. Besides the United States, eleven countries helped to make up the last student roster. The foreign students who were there were: from Russia, 1; from Korea, 2; from Portugal, 3; from Canada, 3; from China, 1; from Greece, 3; from Japan, 1, and one each from South America, Italy, and New Zealand. Formerly there were students from Armenia, West Africa, and Lithania.

This widespread enrollment in the school of religious education reveals an interest in the subject which is world-wide. It is, of course, a compliment to the university, but it has a far deeper meaning for Christianity. It demonstrates beyond the possibility of a doubt that men and women everywhere are turning to the Church and Jesus for leadership in this momentous time.

Canadian Union Definitely Formed.—

Among the last acts of the Canadian Parliament before its adjournment on July 10th was the passage of the Union Church bill. Under this act, the new union of Methodist, Presbyterians, and Congregationalists will come into effect on July 19, 1925. The Presbyterian opposers of union, or "bitter-enders" as they are called, are discussing the course they will pursue. They cannot, under the law, continue under their denominational title; but under some other name, those not desiring to enter the United Church of Canada may form their own communions.

The passage of this act makes union a definite thing. It has long been discussed in Canada, but now it is a fact. It is a great day when the followers of Jesus can unite on the great essential. The prayer of the Lord Himself is being answered before our very eyes after all these centuries of waiting. We should take courage and build on in the kingdom for the prayer of the ages too shall find an answer when His will is done on earth as it is in heaven. Having prayed, let's arise from our knees to the task of answering our prayers with the courage of the Christ.

What Tithing Can Do.—

The effect of tithing upon the resources of a Church is given by reports from the Seventh Day Adventists as to their recent income. Statistics just made public show that this Church, with 104,000 members in the United States and Canada, during the first three months of this year, gave a total of $1,451,750, or about $14 per member. The tithe amounted to $898,000, while $350,000 in additional gifts was given to missions. There are now 210,319 Seventh Day Adventists in all the world, and the denomination holds property valued at over $34,000,000.

The Seventh Day Adventists insist on their membership tithing, and teach it is one of the doctrines of their Church. It has brought marvelous results, and it will bring the same results to every Church which will try the tithing method. Besides the increase which it will bring to the resources of the kingdom, it will deepen and enrich the Christian life and experience of those who tithe. It is God's method of supporting His work in the world, and merits the prayerful consideration of every Christian. The Bible is no more definite in its teaching of other truths than it is in its teaching of tithing. Let us read and practice God's will in our giving as well as in our living.

Dangerous Propaganda.—

In a letter written recently by an American professor in the College of Commerce, at Otaru, Japan, we see how our military training strikes the Japanese. The letter is written to the National Council for the Preservation of War, and it speaks for itself, as follows:

Gentlemen,—All mail from the United States of America is post-marked something like "Let's Go! Citizens' Military Training Camps." By a curious coincidence, a letter from your quarters bore a similar stamp—an anti-war envelope with a pro-war post-mark.

There may be no misunderstanding of this mark within the boundaries of the United States, but outside the United States, particularly in Japan, and particularly at this time, such post-marks are apt to be misunderstood and are odious.

Citizens' military training camps may be good things, though we have serious doubts of it; but to use United States post-markings as a means of advertising them is dangerous propaganda. We talked much about militaristic Germany during the war, but the United States must keep silent or our government must change its tactics. While the Church of Jesus Christ is attempting to carry the message of the heavenly choir at the birth of our Lord to all the world, our government is seeking to build a war machine. Every individual American is a part of our government, and as Christians—for our allegiance is God—we should see to it that such propaganda does not go on. Christianity should have a fighting chance to save the world from another war.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Twelve branches of science will be represented in the 1925 Asiatic expedition conducted by Roy Chapman Andrews. It is believed that the life of the Nestorian Christians, who went east from Persia, may be further uncovered.

Rev. and Mrs. E. H. Rainey, Franklin, Ohio, are happy over the arrival of a son on July 31, 1924. Here is wishing that the fine fellow may grow up to be a great and good man and follow in the footsteps of his worthy father in being a consecrated and devout minister of the Word.

Dr. L. E. Smith, pastor of Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., is spending his vacation, with his family, in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Whitaker, out from Kittrell, N. C. Here is devoutly hoping that Dr. Smith, one of the very hardest-worked men in all our acquaintance, will find renewed strength and zeal during these days of rest and recuperation in this good country home for the great burdens of the Church which he carries.

Another wet prophecy has been smashed by the record made in freight handled on American boats and in the amount of freight which passed throughout ports. When the prohibition policy became effective, the wets freely predicted that it would practically close our ports—that the nations of the earth would give us a wide berth. These predictions were reiterated when a ruling from Washington made our United States boats dry. Instead of interfering with shipping, the prohibition law has aided it just as it has aided all lines of legitimate business.

President and Mrs. W. A. Harper left Elon College last Tuesday for a ten days' vacation trip through the Valley of Virginia and on to New Jersey and New York. Here is wishing for them a most happy, wholesome and helpful trip. On their return, they will take in the annual session of the Valley of Virginia Conference, which meets this week near Harrisonburg. President Harper works so incessantly and energetically that he does not know how to take a vacation, but deceives himself into it by planning many business trips and engagements along the way. After great men learn how to work, they forget how to play. When we are youths, it is easy to plan a vacation and also to decide that when we are older we will make them longer and better. However, as we grow older we forget, or do not know, how to plan or to take a real rest. This seems to be the experience of most mortals who carry great burdens along the journey of life.

Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., at the Elon Chautauqua, July 29th to August 2d, delivered a series of five addresses, entitled "The Music World." The five topics treated under this general topic were: (1) "The Origin of Music"; (2) "The Development of Music"; (3) "Music as an Art"; (4) "The Masters of Music"; (5) "The Uses of Music." Many of those who heard the lectures insisted that they be put in book form, but failing in this, they will be printed in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. To this latter request, Dr. Staley very kindly consented, and it is a genuine pleasure to present this week the first of these very fine addresses—"The Origin of Music." It will certainly delight and edify SUN readers to peruse carefully what Dr. Staley has written and presents on these themes. He went through many volumes to acquire the information which he is giving THE SUN readers and then clothed what he found in the books in the fine garb of his own great philosophy and spiritual insight. These articles are certainly a distinct contribution to the worth and weight of THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

POPE'S CHAPEL.

The protracted meeting here closed last night. Bro. Dowell, pastor of the Baptist Church, was present one day. Bro. Davis, pastor of the M. E. Church, was present most of the time. The services of these able and consecrated men of God are highly appreciated wherever they go. The splendid young men of the Federation of Christian Workers from Creedmoor and Wilton came over every night and threw themselves enthusiastically into the work. I received fourteen names for membership at Pope's last night. Some of the converts will unite with other Churches.

MEMORIAL FUND.

Previously acknowledged	$11.00
Rev. E. M. Carter, Wadley, Ala.	1.00
Total	$12.00

Rev. E. M. Carter writes: "I send one dollar for the O'Kelly Memorial Fund. I hold THE SUN to send this contribution while I think of it. While the fund grows slowly, I feel that it is sure and will come, for we Christians have delayed this good matter all too long."

The Southern Convention at Norfolk, in May, decided to erect monuments at two historic spots, long neglected by us Christians. One is to be at the site of Old Lebanon Church, Surry County, Va., where all party and sectarian names were discarded by our Church ancestors and the name Christian only was adopted.

The other is the late resting-place of Rev. Jas. O'Kelly, near O'Kelly's Chapel, Durham County, N. C. We should have $2,000 with which to erect suitable markers. What will you give?

COMMITTEE ON MONUMENT.

(Judge J. F. West, chairman, Waverly, Va.; Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, secretary, Durham, N. C.; W. E. McClenny, Suffolk, Va.; J. O. Atkinson, treasurer, Elon College, N. C.)

Send funds to the treasurer, and same will be acknowledged in THE SUN. One liberal friend says if $900.00 is contributed to the Old Lebanon Monument, he will add a gift of $100,00, so as to mark this spot, now one of the most conspicuous on a Virginia State highway, in a manner that will reflect credit and honor upon those who wear the name Christian. That is fine! The way is now open for contributors. The Christians must do this good thing right, now that we have made a beginning.

J. O. ATKINSON,
Elon College, N. C. Treasurer.

AN APPRECIATION.

BROTHER EDITOR:

Please find enclosed one dollar for six months in advance for THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Times are hard, money scarce, but we can't afford to do without spiritual food. We better eat less cornbread and more of the bread of life; better be poor in flesh and rich in spirit.

God grant that we catch the vision of the Christian Church and her mission—that one great incentive of faith in our love for Jesus Christ, which is the inspiring motive for all Christian living and Christ-like service. Prove all things; hold fast the good; pray God's kingdom come, His will be done in our hearts and lives.

Sincerely,
Sedley, Va. MRS. JASON JOYNER.

MEDITATIONS FROM A PARSON'S DIARY.

"I have often noticed that the people who do the least for the Church are the ones who have the most to say in criticising what is done."

Bit of History Recalled.

On a notable occasion during the war when President Wilson delivered a personal message to a joint session of the Senate and House, all the galleries and all members on the floor arose in respectful attention when the President entered the chamber—all except one. That was the Senator from Missouri, who remained seated, his countenance a sullen scowl, throughout the proceedings. And it is this man who now declares the former President has "personally insulted" him.—Charlotte Observer.

FACING LIFE WITH OUR BACKS TO THE ALTAR.

By Rev. John A. Hutton, D. D.

Ezekiel gives more than one illustration of the general collapse in morals and religion which followed upon those political disasters which culminated in the captivity.

In one vision, for example, the prophet saw a body of "men sitting with their backs to the temple and with their faces to the sun, worshiping the sun towards the East." He does not tell us, in any way that would be helpful to ourselves in these very different times in which we live, on what principles these men were acting, or on what principles they supposed themselves to be acting, or what kind of mood they were indulging at the time. He blames them. He denounces the attitude which they had taken. He sees no justification for it. His words seem to mean that the national situation was bad enough indeed and desperate enough; but that this—"men turning their backs upon the temple"—if it represented the general spirit of the people, was the end of everything. It was bad enough to have suffered as they had at the hands of Assyria. It was bad enough to have lost their political prestige. It was bad enough to have had the manhood and womanhood of the nation transported to Babylon, there to serve as slaves to that ruthless and contemptuous world-power. Yet, bad as all these things were, there was still, in the prophet's view, a basis of hope in God.

Ezekiel gives us no guidance as to what led these five and twenty men to repudiate the religion of their fathers. Were they angry, and in their anger did they do this and say many things out of the soreness of their hearts? Had they become bitter and headlong in consequence of the defeats and humiliations to which they had been subjected? By taking up this public attitude to the piety of their fathers—sitting with their backs to the temple—were they saying in effect what we in our own bad hours sometimes feel, though we have either the grace not to say or the want of courage to say frankly what we feel; were they saying, "What is the use of a religion which does not secure us against misfortune? Behold the godless people of the world how they prosper!" Was it in that frame of mind—angry, narrow, unjust—that they planted themselves between the porch and the altar, and determinedly turned their backs to the temple and their faces to the sun?

We do not know; but certainly it is often, in some such mood of anger, disappointment, impatience, that people today declare that they have done with the religion of their fathers—which, indeed, is the only religion that any of us has. In some cases, the mood is a passing one, and we do well to remain quiet in the presence of those who are suffering in this way. If they are sincerely unhappy, their outburst against the serious and believing view of life will do them good, so long as they do not go too far. And later on, once more if they are really unhappy meanwhile, they will be sorry for every foolish word they have spoken.

But it frequently happens that people who behave in this way are only half sincere. There is often a good deal of affectation in their words. No one who is really unhappy—unhappy in that ultimate way which alone would justify any one bringing in the question of religion at all—could speak so much as they speak.

But even in such a case, and when we know that there is not very much reality in their declarations and threatenings, still there is perhaps some genuine feeling of soreness, and for the sake of that we should keep still. For what we are witnessing is not the turning away of the soul from God; it is quite as obviously the clinging of the soul to God in spite of certain experiences which would alienate it. For whenever in ultimate matters there is a struggle, there are two forces contending, and one of them is representative of God.

If our hearts are well guarded by the peace of God; if the love of Christ is all to us that it should be; if we would rather be able to lift up our face to God without spot than enjoy any crown that may be in the world's gift; if we see quite clearly that we could never for more than a day, and even that a miserable day, find happiness in anything which we had acquired by an outrage upon our private honor—in such a case, all is well with us, and after one moment of hesitation our soul will sweep back in a more passionate love of what is good and pure, in scorn of consequence.

But if we are not thus upon our guard; if we have allowed our minds to become corrupted by this world's prizes and this world's maxims, then in an emergency we may very easily, in secret, be angry at ourselves for being tender and scrupulous, and in sullenness say, like those five and twenty men, "turn our backs to the temple and our faces to the sun."

Once again: there are those who turn their backs to the temple and their faces to the sun not, as in the example we have given, because troubles have befallen them and they have become sudden and contemptuous of all rules. There are those who take up this attitude, and urge it upon us all because of their view, as they allege, this is the true and proper attitude for man—"to have his back to the temple and his face to the sun."

I believe not one of us has fairly faced the question, how far such a spirit has already penetrated society and corrupted our own lives. It is the religion of this present world, and in its permanent features is simply today what it has always been. It has its philosophers, its dramatists, its poets, novelists, artists; this spirit which, in all soberness, is simply the spirit of anti-Christ. It is the spirit of which the cross of Christ is God's historical condemnation. Even if it could be proved to be true doctrine for secular society, it can never be the way for Christians. For we might define the Christian community as the company who in all ages and in our own have their faces turned towards the altar—and this whether the sun of this world is rising, lighting up their faces, or setting, leaving them with shadows and the approach of night.

It would be an easy task to prove that this attitude of self-seeking—this repudiation of the moral wisdom of the human race, to say no more—is no true doctrine for such beings as we are.

For one thing, it will not work. What is social life, what is our dwelling together in communities and States under general laws, but the confession that the life of self-seeking is theoretically not possible; that unless it be qualified and restrained it must lead to a state of war.

If people who proclaim in our day the idea, or by their own way of life recommend it to others, that we are here in this world to do what we like—and this is turning the back upon the altar—would only use their imagination, and try to conjure up what a state of things would ensue if everybody acted upon this principle, they would perceive that it leads straight to Bedlam. We have the proverb that "what is good to give cannot be ill to take"—and what if the millions of our disinherited people were suddenly to take seriously the common teaching of our time, and an example from the regardless self-seeking of so many of those who are at ease, and were to arise, declaring that they also propose henceforth to turn their back upon their particular altar, to throw down as an unworthy thing their particular burden, to endure no more the monotony of their surroundings, their hungers, their anxieties, their responsibilities in wedlock and parenthood—that they also are out for the day, not knowing what is to follow and not caring!

But it is our very business as Christians to be within every secular society the element of salt. Behind that metaphor of salt, there must have lain in our Lord's mind the idea that the world or human society, guided by its own material principles, is always falling into corruption; that self-seeking in the individual always leads to satiety and weariness, or, where it is defeated, to anger and the cruelties which spring from envy; that the same self-seeking, the same repudiation of the altar on the large scale leads inevitably to the collapse of States through the want of the solidarity of love; and that it is the one great function of the Church, of the community of the altar, to keep sending into the vortex of the world's life men and women who follow the holier way, to keep singing above the chaos of its strident voices snatches of a nobler song.

A BACK NUMBER.

Lord Dawson, of Penn, physician to King George V, has become one of the "booze champions" of England.

During the debate on the liquor-control bill, sponsored by the Bishop of London in the House of Lords, he made one of the real old-time wet speeches, claiming booze was essential to health and that most medical men were disciples of John Barleycorn.

Where could "my lord" have been in the last twenty-five years? Does he not know that booze has been kicked out of the pharmacopaeia, and alcohol as a medicine is out of date in America? Can it be that he is still administering calomel for malaria, phlebotomising for fevers and giving sulphur and molasses as a spring tonic?

He states that drink takes away the awkwardness of dinner parties, and "one can see them melt one by one into ease and content as the wine circulates." Sure thing! We've seen 'em melt down till they slid off their chairs and rolled under the table and became as contented as a pig in a mudpuddle, but it was not very dignified.

He declares booze sets the mind free when work is finished. Nay, more—we've known it to set even the soul free which winged its way to realms eternal. "Brightens the outlook." Of course it does for the moment while he imagines himself a millionaire; but it darkens the outlook when he sobers up and finds he is not as rich as when he cashed his pay cheque.

"An inspiration to high endeavor in art, literature and music." It must be a fact, for that soul-stirring gem of exquisite literary merit, rythm and music, "On the Sidewalks of New York," Lawler claims was composed while he was drunk.

As a clincher, he hands this wise statement to the House of Lords: "The best way to promote temperance is to improve facilities for drinking." That is wisdom worthy of a Solomon. All the "no tobac" crusade should do to stop the use of tobacco is to provide facilities for easy smoking. Do you want the drug addicts cured? Then make dope easily accessible. Jack London said the drunkards of America were made because of the easy accessibility of drink.

Just as the "hayseed clown" in the circus provides entertainment for us by performing his antiquated stunts, so Lord Dawson is furnishing amusement for American readers.

Come again, lord. Give us another merry ha! ha!—Geo. McGinnis.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

DR. W. S. LONG.

In the passing of Dr. William Samuel Long, the Christian Church sustained a distinct loss. He fell asleep in the hospital at Sanford, N. C., Sunday afternoon, August 3d, as the result of an automobile accident sustained some miles from Sanford on Wednesday, July 30th. In October of the present year, had he lived, he would have rounded out eighty-five years of energetic activity and consecrated leadership in Church and in State.

Although a clear-thinker and an able expounder of the truth in the pulpit, Dr. Long's greatest distinction was achieved in the educational world and in the founding and building of Elon College. For years before the institution opened its doors, Dr. Long plead in season and out of season with the people of the Southern Christian Convention to build and equip an institution of higher education for their own young people. If one will go through the "Christian Annual," which records the proceedings of our Conferences and Conventions many years prior to the opening of Elon College, one will see with what persistence and determination Dr. Long kept the matter of the necessity of a college before the minds and hearts of our people. There was no assembly, no Convention, no Conference of our people here in the South to whom Dr. Long did not carry his appeal, again and again, with a zeal and with a conviction that overcame all opposition and surmounted all difficulty. His face once fixed toward the achievement of this great thing for the Church, he refused to hear or heed argument that would thwart a noble purpose and holy aim. He was indeed the Moses who led the Christians of the South out of the wilderness of their ignorance and established for their children an institution of higher learning, in whose classrooms, culture and atmosphere, high academic achievement was made possible and Christian character was taught and emphasized through the whole college course. In 1890, Dr. Long, as the seer and prophet of Christian education, saw his dream realized in the opening of Elon College, and for four years, during days and ordeals of sacrifice and hardships, which later generations neither comprehend nor can understand, he bore the burdens of an institution until those burdens became too much for even the giant of mental and moral achievement who had sought so valiantly and so nobly to bring the thing to pass. From the days of Moses, who wore his endurance out in leading the Israelites through the wilderness and who, because of his exhaustion in that great effort, was not permitted to lead them into the promised land, and even to this hour, the noble ones, the great souls, the sages and the seers have given their strength, laid down their lives in their efforts to lead on and to lead upward without being permitted to stand in the glory land of their own successful achievements.

God provided for them and for us some better thing than that they should enjoy the fruitage of their own achievement, and so left it to other hands and hearts to carry on that which they themselves had so well begun, but which had consumed their zeal and their power in achieving.

After four years in the president's chair of the institution which he had built, he passed on to others the burdens that he had successfully carried; but never until his dying day did he lose interest in the institution of his founding and the glory of his manly achievement. As long as the Christian Church shall love and seek to nurture her youth in an atmosphere of Christian character and influence, so long will that Church love and honor the name and the memory of Dr. William Samuel Long. Thousands rise up now to call him blessed, and generations yet unborn will sing his praise and honor his memory. God rest his noble soul, and multiply in the world individuals like him inspired with sublime faith, invincible energy, and an all-conquering love and sympathy.

ELON INCREASES HER FACULTY.

As rapidly as conditions demand and circumstances allow, the trustees of Elon College seek, year by year, to increase the number and efficiency of the teachers in our beloved institution. The present year is no exception to this rule. Among other additions to the faculty which the writer does not now recall, it is to be noted with pardonable pride that Prof. J. W. Barney, who graduated from Elon several years ago and has since made his mark in the educational world, returns to Elon to become teacher in the department of English language and philosophy. Since graduating with fine distinction from Elon College, Prof. Barney has also graduated from Columbia University, and afterwards became a graduate student of the University of Wisconsin. Bro. Barney is now a father of a fine family, whom we are glad indeed to add to our number at Elon and who are in a position to make a distinct contribution to the society and fellowship of our community.

With equal pride, it is to be noted that Bro. Leo D. Martin becomes professor of history and social science in the college. Prof. Martin, after graduating from Elon, took his M. A. degree in the University of North Carolina and then went to Yale, where he won the fine distinction of a teaching fellow in that university and where he taught and studied for the past year.

From the faculty of Union Christian College, Merom, Ind., himself already a success, and with a successful experience behind him, Prof. Simon A. Bennett becomes professor of religious education in a department which President W. A. Harper is to give much thought and direction to during the coming year. Prof. Bennett is a graduate of Miami College and the University of Chicago.

Ex-President W. S. Alexander, of Union Christian College, in addition to his duties as pastor of the local Church, is to be professor of Church history and polity in the department of Christian education. Dr. Alexander is a graduate of Union Christian College and the University of Indiana, and is a preacher of great power and a close student of current Church history and polity.

These four men, by their successful experience and achievements in the educational world, certainly make a distinct contribution to the increasing weight and worth of the Elon College faculty. The trustees are to be congratulated in their persistent and untiring efforts to strengthen the faculty of Elon and to be satisfied with nothing less than the best.

From reports which the editor gets incidentally in these days, and from conversations with our friends in many parts, he has the right to believe that the enrollment of students the coming year will be the largest in the history of the institution, and that the faculty who will be here to lead and instruct will be the strongest and most efficient yet attained in the history of the institution. This is as it should be. We have never had material equipment at Elon to even compare with that which the students will find here on their arrival. But all this outlay of funds and material equipment will be in vain unless the mental, the moral, and the spiritual equipment and achievement shall be greater than ever before. "Our spiritual salvation depends upon our material redemption," to quote a fine phrase from the late President Woodrow Wilson, is applied to institutions and individuals, as well as nations.

We may say all we wish about fine buildings and write all that can be written about strong teachers and do all we can in the way of sacrifice for material progress and improvement, but unless we improve ever and always upon the moral and spiritual tone and atmosphere of the institution, all these other things will count for naught. The world will judge us, and rightly, not by how often nor how loud we acclaim "Christian character first and always at Elon," but by how nearly we come to putting that high ideal into holy and wholesome practice. A college would far better have one building, and from that send forth a power that makes for righteousness and for the development of Christian character, than to have five or fifty buildings and fail to send forth such power and wield such influence. And because the writer knows that the trustees of the college have no other thought in mind than this in the selection of its teaching force, as well as improvement in its physical plant, he feels that the present additions to the faculty will make for strength and efficiency in this direction.

OUR HOPE OF A FUTURE LIFE.

Threescore years and ten of trials and tribulations, and of struggle for existence does not spell the meaning of human life. Hope for future life after our earthly pilgrimage is ended is human desire at its best. This hope grows stronger in proportion to one's faith in and appreciation of the present—one's faith in the moral order, the inherent good of things, the ultimate triumph of right over wrong; and in proportion to one's faith in a personal God.

That we are now we know. The fact that no one can prove that we will not always be, gives us a right to believe in a future life, if such belief fits us better to live in the present.

Faith in and appreciation of the present life creates in us a hope of a future life. Our social institutions, the home, the school, and the Church, seem to be eternal in their significance. We hope we build for eternity. Those who believe most in the present life and seek to make the largest contribution to the present are they who believe the most in a future life.

Faith in the moral order creates in us a hope for a future life. Moral instruction points toward a future life. Our moral nature thirsts for it. The men and women who live above the fog in the clearest moral atmosphere are the most anxious for a future life as a continuation of the present. Moral perfection demands a future life, for such is never attained in the present life. Our moral aspirations are delusions if there is to be no future life—no future opportunity of attaining our ideals of moral perfection. Moral purpose is but a siren's call if death ends life. The hope of a life after death makes moral heroes of us all. If there were no future life to give us an opportunity to attain our ideal of moral perfection, then life is a lie, God has imposed upon us an impossible task, for He commands us to be perfect, even as He is perfect. For the realization of the same, another life, free from physical restraints, is required. Virtue does not receive its full reward in this life. The cross for Christ, the assassin's bullet for Lincoln, the disgrace thrust upon countless noble mothers are but convincing testimony that virtue does not receive its full reward in this life.

Our estimate of the value of human life strengthens our hope for a future life. As we come into a larger appreciation of self and the opportunities for self-realization, we think more about the future life. The passion for self-realization reaches out toward a life after death. Society bends every effort to protect the lives of its members. What effort would God not make to preserve life eternally if men will make every effort to preserve it even for a single year, month or even a day? Our lives are certainly of too much concern to be cut off at the end of threescore years and ten.

Our appreciation of each other increases the hope. Friendships are too sacred to be cut off forever. The mother who lays away the body of her child in the cold ground wants another opportunity to know the child of her heart. Plato's words seem full of meaning to many of us when he says: "All the mysteries in this world will be explained in the next."

Faith in God goes hand in hand with the hope of a future life. Jesus' words, "In my Father's house are many mansions," and His promise that He has gone to prepare a place for those who love to do His will, bring great comfort to the Christian. Those who have lived the Christ-life believe that human life is of too much concern to God for it to be left forever in the grave. Man is God's chief concern. Would it be in accord with a loving, Heavenly Father to allow His children to be blotted out of existence, not to keep them eternally, when the keeping is within His power?

"Thou madest man, we know not why;
We believe he was not made to die."

Belief in God's love and power impel us to hope for a future life. Our daily life is influenced by the hope. The world has received its greatest service from those who lived as if they were immortal. The thought that our future life will be determined by our present life spure us on to make the most out of the present. We believe that the life that now is, is the gift of God, and that "the supreme gift of God is eternal life." And our faith in God and in the value of human life persuades us that if a man die he shall live again.

THE DEAR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

One who is interested in all our Sunday Schools and in building other Sunday Schools and Churches than those we now have could wish most earnestly that every Sunday School in the Southern Christian Convention would adopt the very wise plan worked out by the Convention for all our schools, and most highly recommended to them. The plan is twofold. First, to take one offering a month for missions; second, to have some one in the school make a brief talk on missions the day the offering is taken. Practically all of our leading and loyal Sunday Schools are now doing this good thing, and one who knows the needs and opportunity of our missionary work feels like calling these the near, good, amiable and helpful schools. This plan may not seem great to a casual observer, but it is great beyond all calculation because of the ideas involved in it and the purpose in view.

This plan serves to plant the missionary idea in the minds of the young where the idea must be planted if it is to grow up and bear fruit in the Master's name. No Church has ever yet come to be missionary in spirit and in activity until its young people have been imbued with the missionary spirit. The minds of young people are open to the missionary message, are impressed with the missionary appeal and respond readily to the missionary challenge. It is the writer's candid conviction that among the best achievements, if not the very best, in our missionary task the past decade has been the work done for missions in the Sunday Schools. It takes neither prophet nor the son of a prophet to see that the decades to come will be bearing the fruit of our missionary zeal now being shown in the Sunday School.

More than this, our children are taught, with their gifts to missions once a month, that they should help to carry others the message of love and of life that has made their Sunday School what it is and that has made them what they are. By giving one offering a month for missions, the children, as well as the grown people, are showing that they have an interest in the salvation of others as well as their own salvation. The schools which have undertaken this good work have been universally helped so far as we have ever heard, and none have been hurt, so far as we have learned. From this, it is concluded that a school has all to gain and nothing to lose by giving one offering a month to missions and by having a little missionary program or talk once a month. Many of the dear, good schools are availing themselves of this opportunity, and it is to be believed that every Sunday School in the Southern Convention that really cares for its own life and progress and growth will be employing this method at no far distant date. If any school doubts the propriety or the wisdom of the plan, let such a school undertake it for a season and be convinced. Nothing succeeds like success, and this plan has proven such a success for so many schools that we are eager for all our school to adopt, to practice, and to enjoy it.

OUTLINE OF HEBREWS.

Rev. A. E. Courtner, A. B., of Albany, Ind., has very kindly sent the writer a brochure of some fourteen pages, neatly printed and attractively bound, entitled "Outline Studies of the Epistle of the Hebrews." Bro. Courtner has evidently given much study to this monumental book of the New Testament, and his outlines will certainly help any student who desires to know more of the book of Hebrews.

He has outlined the themes, topics and paragraphs of the book in such a manner as to make the study of Hebrews exceedingly interesting and helpful. Any CHRISTIAN SUN reader desiring a copy can get it by sending 15 cents in stamps to Bro. Courtner, or if the volume is desired in quantities for Church or college classes, the price is 10 cents per copy. Bro. Courtner is certainly a Bible student and teacher, who has done a valuable work in giving these outlines in such inexpensive form to the people.

FROM GREEN COUNTY, VA.

The statement was made publicly a few days ago by ex-Sheriff W. A. Crawford, of Green County, Va., that four different denominations had sent some of their smartest men to this section, but that Prof. A. R. Flowers has been able to reach more people than any man we have had. And the more I know of him, said Mr. Crawford, the more I think of him. Bro. Flowers is a well-informed man, of broad experience, and has been able to touch the life of the community morally, socially, religiously, educationally and industrially. He is successfully growing, on a small scale, several things that have not been grown here. He believes that it is an easy matter for our boys and girls to make a great deal of money during their vacation months, whereas they have been making nothing. In the meantime, our Church, Sunday School and Christian Endeavor have been making steady gains.

ELON LETTER.

The educational prophet of Alamance County and of the Christian Church in the South has passed to his reward. Dr. William Samuel Long is no more among mortals. He passed away Sunday afternoon, August 3d, at Sanford, N. C., in the hospital there, following an automobile accident the Wednesday before. A brief service was conducted Monday at 1:30 P. M. at his late residence, in Chapel Hill. The final service in his honor was held in the New Providence Christian Church, Graham, N. C., at 4 P. M. the same afternoon. This historic Church was pastored by him in the prime of his ministerial service, and it was there he held his membership.

Dr. Long was born in Alamance County, near Graham, October 22, 1839, and was fortunate in his parentage. Both father and mother were famous as strong characters, and they reared a distinguished family. Mrs. Long, whose maiden name was Miss Jane Stockard, daughter of Col. John Stockard, established the first Sunday School in Alamance County, and was active in Christian work throughout her life. Jacob Long, his father, came into the Church in the prime of life, from deliberate, well-thought-out choice, a custom which characterized him in all his life's undertaking. His judgments on any topic were highly prized by his neighbors. Christian character and the sound judgment they transmitted to their children explain the splendid achievements of their sons and only daughter—Col. Jacob A. Long, Dr. Geo. W. Long, Joseph Long, John H. Long, Judge B. F. Long, Dr. Daniel Albright Long, Mrs. J. H. H. Clendenin, and Dr. William S. Long, whom I have described as the educational prophet of his native county and of his denomination.

There were persons of educational vision and conviction in Alamance County and the Christian Church before Dr. Long, and several attempts were made to found an educational institution of higher learning in Alamance prior to his assuming the role of leadership in the dire days following the Civil War. These attempts were more or less temporary and sporadic. When William Samuel Long took charge of Graham Normal College, a new day dawned for higher education in his county and Church. Graham Normal College came to full flower when Elon opened her doors on September 2, 1890. The man who dreamed Elon College before there was an Elon and who made his dream a reality could be no ordinary man. Great soul qualities always signalize the spiritual outfit of such leaders. In these great qualities, Dr. Long was a marked man.

Among these qualities that made Dr. Long the initiator of great enterprises, I would place first faith. With Dr. Long, faith was a trinity—faith in God, faith in his fellow-man, and faith in himself as the servant of both, to do what he conceived to be his duty. The fountain source of his life achievement was his unfaltering faith. It made him a creative genius.

He was equally distinguished by unconditioned consecration to any cause which he espoused. His will-power was inflexible. He concentrated on a doubtful situation like a trip-hammer with its rapid blows on stone or steel, and all obstacles were swept from the path of his progress. There was no compromise, no willingness to substitute or adopt half-way measures in his make-up. Straight to his objective, he hewed his way, and be it said to his eternal honor, when he arrived, even those who had most obstinately opposed his efforts applauded his achievement. He never undertook a mean or unworthy enterprise. Churches, schools, college, orphanages—these were the objectives of his quest, enterprises that challenged men's hearts and called for sacrifice.

His energy, too, knew no abating. He never tired in a good cause. When victory had crowned his banners, he was as fresh with enthusiasm and energy as if no battle had been fought to win his objective. He was invincible in advocacy of a measure, and equally invincible in opposing what he conceived to be ill-advised, though he was always ready to be convinced in favor of a course. His prevailing mood was advocacy, not opposition.

This radiant trinity of soul qualities made our beloved brother the possessor of many friends. Those who knew him best, loved him best. Great on public occasions and in leading the battle for great causes, he was greater in his private life. His home was a Christian cathedral; his fireside was a sanctuary of the Lord. In social intercourse and in uplifting conversation, as well as in those personal graces that in every age characterize the true gentleman, Dr. Long reigned as a prince of the realm, with no superiors and with few peers.

And now this noble Christian warrior sleeps with his fathers. But his spirit will live on in the lives of his family and friends whom his great life touched for good, and in the college his heart conceived and his genius founded. His spirit of undaunted faith, of invincible consecration, of terrific energy well spent, we veritably believe characterizes Elon and will continue to characterize it in the years that are to come. His spirit is stamped on the college he found. His spirit is incarnate there.

I recall three recent incidents, that will not die, of his devotion to Elon and of the faith and hope and love he cherished for the college he conceived and to which his sacrifice and devotion gave birth and being and assured success.

On the day of the great fire—January 18, 1923—when the administration building of Elon had gone up in smoke, the building he had in 1889 erected, with a cost to his soul which no man can compute, I called him over long-distance and broke to him the sad news. My own heart ached as I talked with him. "I am deeply grieved," he said, "to learn of this misfortune; but don't be discouraged. Elon has more friends today than in 1889. They will build our college back on a higher scale." I hung up the receiver with a quickened hope.

Six days later the trustees met in a small room of the east dormitory. The landscape was capped with snow and sleet, all save the smoldering ruins of the administration building, which yet slowly burned and which were in plain view of the room in which we were met. I called on Dr. Long for the opening prayer. He thanked God for the friends who had made the old building possible, for the men and women whom it had aided in their life preparation, and for the brighter day that lay ahead. He besought that God would raise up great hearts to make the college an even better servant of the spiritual life. He had hardly ceased praying when Col. J. E. West was called over long-distance by Bro. J. M. Darden, who counseled that the trustees pitch their rebuilding program on a scale worthy of the college and of the cause of Christian education in our Church. "I knew it would be so," was Dr. Long's simple comment.

He went home, and in a few days I received a letter from him that set the hearts of a host to examining themselves to know their duty in the hour of Elon's crisis. He wrote that he was beyond eighty and had just got his home paid for. "I am ready to mortgage it and give a thousand dollars to rebuild our college." I wrote him back that I could not think of allowing him to make such a sacrifice. His willingness to do so broke the hearts of many, and the greater things at Elon became increasingly possible. How I wish he could have lived in the flesh to see the rebuilding program completed!

And so I sorrow as one of his family at his translation. As the one who undertakes to fill the place he so prophetically created and filled, I feel insignificant in the presence of the pioneer and prophet of the Elon idea. But for him there would be no Elon. Words fail me in my desire adequately to portray the character of my beloved educational father and to indicate the debt of obligation Elon owes him and which I feel is my personal debt as well. To him as the far-seeing prophet of God, to him as the man of faith when vision was blurred and the path not only uncertain, but doubtful as well, to him the pioneer of unfaltering and intrepid courage, to him the energetic and unconquerable zealot of causes that promised hardship, criticism, and martyrdom; to him the friend of my boyhood and the strong and courageous counselor of my later years; to Dr. William Samuel Long, minister of God, friend of man, prophet of education, founder and first president of Elon College—I bring, in grateful thanks and loving homage, the affectionate devotion of my own heart and of a great host who love and honor him for his works' sake and for the worth and greatness of his own noble soul. May God bless his memory and rest his loving heart in peace, and may the comfort of heaven solace his wife and children and relatives in their sad bereavement!

Noble patriarch in the realm of statesman-like Christian service, farewell! We shall not soon see your likeness again. Thou hast nobly wrought. Enter thou, dear beloved leader of our hearts and of our Church, into the joys of thy Lord.

W. A. HARPER.

THE MUSIC WORLD.

By Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D.

(At Elon Chautauqua, July 29 to Aug. 2, 1924.)

I. THE ORIGIN OF MUSIC.

Music is a speaking art, using instruments and voice to express emotions. It is a mode of motion in atmospheric air. It has its origin in God, in nature, and in man. All things originate in God. "All things were made by Him, and without Him was not anything made that was made." God made this plain to Job in the words, "When the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy" (38:7). The idea is expressed again when there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men" (Luke 2:14). David touched the highest notes of praise in the psalms on the strings of his harp; and John "heard a voice from heaven, as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder; and I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps" (14:2).

Nature was made by God in the beginning, and nature is full of harmony, which is the soul of music. While there is no real music in nature, the Greek conception of the "music of the spheres" carries with it the suggestion that music has its origin, at least in part, in nature. But we must look to man for the origin of music as a science and an art. Man is next to God in his creation and dominion. "In the image of God and with dominion over the world"; and it is in the soul of man, and not his mind, that music is born, for music had its origin in the religious nature of man. In all primitive races and nations, such music as they had was in praise of their gods. The nine muses in Greece inspired song, and Homer says they were daughters of Zeus, and they brightened the banquets of the gods by their lovely voices, attuned to the lyre of Apollo. In all primitive ages, music is in touch with deities. Its origin suggests the hunger of the human soul after the divine. This thought of "feeling after God" (Acts 17:27) is universal, and any question on that subject is the fallacy of modern doubters whose science makes them ascend from monkeys. It is safe to say that music originated in a crude form of worship of an unknown, but realized, deity. In all countries of mythological types, their gods have been regarded as the inventors of music and musical instruments.

Historically, Egypt is regarded as the mother of music among civilized nations. Greece borrowed ideas and instruments from that ancient source, improved upon their knowledge, then instructed the Romans in this divine art. Music, therefore, is a growth like all other arts. It did not originate, like architecture and sculpture, in visible material, but in spiritual capacities, with no visible material or expression. While suggested somewhat by nature, it is above nature in origin and expression. It springs out of the inner life and appeals to the inner life. It is heavenly in origin and expression. It belongs to the religious world and inspires worship in the soul of man. It seems to be an historical fact that Christianity is the only living religion that inspires song. Hindoism, Buddhism, Mohommedanism, have no hymn book. The Hebrews, no doubt, carried the musical impulse from Egypt and made it a part of their worship. Their musical instruments—trumpets, psaltery, harp, stringed instruments, and organs—were all used in worship. The psalms were their hymn book, and they praised God with their voices. No poetry is comparable to the psalms in the conception and expression of soul-impulses. Homer's "Illiad" and Virgil's "Aeneid" reached the highest in Grecian and Roman poetic composition; but neither of them touches the soul as do the psalms. They are compositions of intellectual masterpieces, classic in thought and expression, but do not reach the heart of the common man.

Primitive man ascribed the origin of music to a special god. It is a part of the whole universe, a creation which has always been with us, a part of us; but because it is so deep and so high in its origin and expression, its progress of development has been slow. Its origin is most divine, its cultivation limited, its expression difficult, but its power is unequaled. Some one has said: "The father of poetry is music; the father of music is rhythm; and the father of rhythm is God." The rhythmical is always the natural form of our movements, and, as Spencer has said, "Every stronger emotional excitement tends to express itself in rhythmical movements of the body." Music seems not only to be the father of poetry, but of painting, sculpture, and architecture. Music has its origin in God, is developed and rendered to God by man, and thus runs in a circle like man himself—made in the image of God, spends his life in the service of God, and then returns to God. Music is the rhythm of the universe, the echo of eternity, the soul of man in its finest feelings and highest expression, the soother of babes, the inspiration of manhood, the mark of civilization. Its soul is pure, its tones are true, its melodies are sweet, and its harmonies divine.

It has been suggested that in prehistoric times, music passed through three stages, characterized by three classes of instruments, and their uses in barborous nations seem to confirm this assumption. The oldest were percussion instruments; the next, wind instruments; the third, string instruments. The stamping of feet and the clapping of hands, suggested drums, cymbols and bells. Then came the blowing of reeds, horns, and pipes; then instruments with strings, as harp and lyre. Egyptian fable ascribes the invention of the lyre to god Thath; Greek fable gives it to god Hermes. In both cases it is ascribed to their gods. The Greeks thought that music was of superhuman origin, and Apollo was called the god of music. The Scotch are wont to claim the origin of music. Hence it has been written:

"Music first on earth was heard,
In Gaelic accents deep,
When Jubal in his oxter squeezed
The blether o' a sheep."

It is not possible to state the origin of music in a positive way, because it is so etherial and heavenly in its spirit and sweep; but it is safe to assume that heaven is its home, God is its author, and man is the only medium through which divine melody speaks. When music is degraded by improper use, it is sin, for sin is the wrong use of the best. Man was God's best, and man only could sin. Music is God's best in man, and man is at his highest when he makes best music; and music will find its highest expression around the great white throne.

A LESSON FROM GIDEON.

When the Lord says "go," He follows it up with a "fear not"' or an "I will be with thee," or both. He never commands without a promise of His keeping power. When Gideon heard his Lord's command to go and save Israel from the hands of the Midianites, he, like Moses, Jeremiah and many others, even down to this day, felt his complete inability. He sought to escape from the mission upon which the Lord would send him, by pleading the poverty of his father's family, and that he was the least in his father's family. But the Lord does not care anything about men's environments. When He puts His hand upon any one to separate them for a given service, He equips them for that service. Notice how quickly He says, "Surely I will be with thee." How much that word "surely" adds to the promise! It doubles its strength and unfailing power.

First, Gideon built an altar unto the Lord; then, in obedience to the Lord's command, he began by casting down the altar of Baal. Just here we get a lesson which we would do well to apply to ourselves. The Word tells us Gideon "did as the Lord had said unto him." When the Holy Spirit had that recorded, there was a purpose in it. We might do well to stop and ask ourselves quite often if it could be truthfully said of us that we are doing what God says through His Word. His commands ring out sharp and clear all through the Book; but do our lives give a clear, ringing testimony for Him?

Notwithstanding God's sure promise, Gideon had to have his faith twice strengthened by the fleece test before gathering his men for battle. The most impressive lesson of all is, out of the 32,000 men gathered, there were only 300 fit for service. The Lord had said there were too many people with Gideon. There was the danger of them vaunting themselves, saying, "Mine own hand hath done this." There is still the same danger, for men are given to boasting much about their Christian work. However, when they get to boasting, the Lord lets it be known, "without me, ye can do nothing."

In the test which was given Israel's men, 22,000 proved to be cowards and were dismissed. In the next test given, 9,700 were found to be not watchful. The Christian has been warned by his Lord to "watch, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh." People are going to be taken by surprise one of these days, for the Lord is going to appear suddenly and unannounced. Only those who have on the whole armor of God and are "praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance," will be permitted to go to be forever with the Lord.

Only 300 out of the thousands of Israel's men were fit for the occasion. Thousands were not up to the mark. How solemn the thought! It reminds us of the "many called but few are chosen." And again we are led to think of the broad way, with its pleasure-loving crowd, and the narrow way with its few travelers. Then comes to our remembrance the warning, "If the righteous shall scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?" May we all heed the solemn warnings of the Bible, and find our joy in the Lord while we serve the living and true God, and wait for His Son from heaven.

A HELPFUL CONFERENCE.

It was my privilege to attend the fourth annual midsummer conference for ministers and religious workers held at Union Theological Seminary, New York City, from July 7th to 18th. There were about 200 in attendance, including six from our own Christian Church.

This gathering was designated as a conference, but it was a school as well. There were delivered five lectures on each of the following subjects: "The Fundamentals, What They are and How to Find Them," "The Motives of Certain New Testament Books," "The Preacher and His Work," "The Social Functions of the Church," "Personality, its Origin, Development and Deviations," and "Implications of Modern Psychology for the Religious Worker."

In addition to these, there were several reconciliation trips to places of interest in the city, including mystic centers, Oriental centers, China Town, Radical Headquarters. We heard addresses on new thought, theosophy, Socialism, Communism, the I. W. W., and others. We were impressed with the earnestness of the speakers and their readiness to answer questions pertaining to the subject under question.

It was indeed a student atmosphere we were breathing for those two weeks, and the fellowship was delightful. Just across Broadway there were about 15,000 students registered for the summer school at Columbia University.

We heard some interpretations a bit more liberal than some of us have been accustomed to, but so far as I could learn, all our brethren left for their homes "sound in the faith" and with a determination to render a more efficient service. I feel that it would be a fine thing for all our Churches to encourage their pastors to attend some good summer school each year.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

MEN AND MILLIONS.

August is the first month of the second quarter for Men and Millions pledges. At the beginning of this quarter every one who pledged should resolve to make some payment. If, at the difficult period and in the most needy time, one will make some payment on one's pledge, the matter will come easier when times are better and conditions are more favorable. We are now in the fifth and final year of the movement, and in the second quarter of the year. Paying these pledges will prove a blessing, though at the time it may seem a burden. What we all need to do is to keep in mind the great objective of the movement, namely: that of carrying forward all the enterprises, institutions and interests of the Christian Church. We should bear in mind that these enterprises depend for their progress on the payment of these pledges, and every dollar paid on them not only proves our loving loyalty, but our abiding faith in the Christian Church and its work of saving souls and building up the kingdom of our Lord.

If the captain or pastor in the Church has not called to the attention of the subscriber the matter of paying these pledges recently, let the reader who is interested in the Church and has made a pledge now inquire as to the amount of the pledge yet due, and out of sacrifice make some payment on that pledge. If all will pursue such a course, our Convention's burden will be lighter and our great undertaking in the name of our Lord shall be accomplished.

FROM THE VIRGINIA MOUNTAINS.

DEAR SUN READERS:

The summer months will soon be gone, and with the change of seasons, other duties will engage our attention. But the summer months will leave their mark upon us.

Thus, in a community in the Blue Ridge, the summer days are full ones for the mountain folk. The hillsides are dotted here and there with men, women, boys and girls working in the fields.

The school-house is about two miles from the Fancy Gap road. It is a one-room building, with a seating capacity of thirty students. The county built it three years ago. The people here were unable to secure a teacher for last winter.

I visited among the people for the first few days, finding out their attitude in regard to school and Sunday School. They seemed anxious to have both. While visiting, I found about seventy children between the ages of five and twenty-one. This large number of possible students offers a wonderful opportunity for a winter school. Of course, in summer nearly all, except the very small ones, work in the fields.

Our school this summer is to run for eight weeks. I have enrolled thirty-eight pupils. It begins at 7 o'clock in the morning, and closes at noon. Our school hours are thus arranged so that the pupils can attend school, and yet have a half day to work in the fields. During the five weeks of school we have had an average attendance of about fifteen scholars. This is a good record for the busy summer season. Each and every student is earnest in his work. They seem to have as their sole purpose in attending school to grasp as much as they can in these eight short weeks. Their eagerness and ability are a clear challenge to us.

The attendance at Sunday School, in spite of the rainy Sundays, has averaged about twenty-five. Mr. Sorrell preached here one very rainy Sunday, and there were about forty persons present. I believe, in a shot while, that the Sunday School could become a well-working, organized school.

There are only three more weeks of summer work in this community; but the winter months, with all their possibilities and opportunities, lie before us.

Sincerely,

EMILY MIDYETTE.

THE DENOMINATIONAL COLLEGE.

It may be well for me to say in the very beginning that I have never been in sympathy with those who denounce our State colleges and universities. They are our own institutions, and many of the sons and daughters of the Church are attending these institutions. We ought to do all within our power to throw a Christian influence around our State institutions and around our sons and daughters who are attending them.

But the denominational college still has a large and unique service to perform. It can do some very important and essential things which the State institution, from the very nature of the case, cannot do.

1. The denominational college can apply the religious tests in electing its faculty, and the State institution cannot. For eighteen years I have been a member of the board of trustees of a denominational college. When we come to the election of a new member of the faculty, there are always three questions I ask about him. Is he a Christian, and will his influence on the campus be positively Christian? Does he know his subject? Can he teach it?

The first of the above questions is the most important, but the State institution cannot ask it. In the long run, the personality and character of the teacher will mean more to the student than what he teaches. Think of the teachers who have meant most to you, and ask yourself which meant most to you, what they were or what they taught?

I have recently heard of several professors who use profanity in the class-room, and they do not live a thousand miles from where I write. A man like that could not hold his position in a denominational college for ten minutes, but they hold positions in State institutions with none to molest or make them afraid. One man like that can neutralize and destroy all the good that a dozen of his colleagues who are Christians may do.

Perhaps we do not realize what it means for a college to have a faculty that is 100 per cent Christian. I heard a man ask the other day what is the difference in the teaching of mathematics by a man who is a Christian and by a man who is not a Christian. Of course, there is no difference in the mathematics, but there is a world of difference between having your boy study under a man who teaches mathematics with profanity and one who teaches it with the bearing of a Christian gentleman. One man of the profane type in a faculty, no matter how fine the other members of the faculty may be, is like a fly in the precious ointment.

2. The denominational college can teach religion and the State institution cannot. Practically all of our denominational colleges have courses in the English Bible. Some of them have courses in religious education and in the evidences of Christianity. This is of incalculable value in this particular stage of the Church's history. When a question mark is being placed after many things that we hold dear.

Not only so, but many subjects can be taught from a Christian point of view in a denominational college. When the professor of science, who is a Christian, goes to interpret science to his students, he does not leave God out of account. He faces, as he pursues his scientific investigations, that He is only thinking the thoughts of God after Him. His study of science makes the world and the universe infinitely greater, and thus he gets an infinitely greater conception of God.

The same is true of the teacher of history. The Christian teacher of history thinks of history as the unfolding of God's eternal plan. He sees God in it all. So it is with psychology, philosophy, sociology, literature and many other courses which are usually taught in colleges. It makes a vast diffreence whether they are being taught by a devout Christian or by an unbeliever.

3. The denominational college can select its students by a religious test if it so chooses. I heard of an institution, not so far away, that has been in a religious turmoil during the past year. The trouble was caused by some gifted Jewish students who began an active propaganda against Christianity in the student body. The denominational college could have controlled that situation in a very few minutes, but the State institution could not.

There is a distinct challenge to the Church today to stand by her Christian colleges and to give them the best possible equipment. There is also a challenge to the Church to co-operate with those professors in State institutions who are doing all in their power to keep them Christian in the face of a tide that is running strong in the other direction.—Walter L. Lingle, in the Presbyterian of the South.

A CHRISTIAN EDUCATION PILGRIMAGE.

BY HERMON ELDREDGE.

VI. UP TO LONDON.

One would not dare to leave bonnie Scotland without a visit to Edinborough Town, the home of John Knox, especially on a Christian education pilgrimage.

Famous for its castles, Churches and its university, and sacred for a thousand memories, old Edinborough is at once both impressive and depressive. Impressive for its sights and history, and depressive for its scenes of bloody intrigue and the shadow which beautiful Mary, queen of Scots, threw over herself and all Britain with her sad life and death story.

Beautiful Princess Street, with its gay shops and jostling crowds, and with its beautiful crown in Walter Scott's Gothic memorial is the first thing which a pilgrim encounters, and he has not traversed many steps in the way along its terraced gardens until he is impressed with the mighty background of the old city castle frowning down on all the beauty and keeping silent guard over its own treasures as well as the treasures of the city. For centuries beyond the records of man, this gigantic fortress has dominated the city and stood guard over the changing scenes of history. As we mounted the great sweep of street to the castle entrance, the mighty "Mons Meg" cannon boomed forth in salute, and I told my driver that I did not know that any one in the castle knew of my coming; but he soberly informed me that Mons Meg speaks at noon every day, sir. And so I found it true. A ball on Lord Nelson's monument, a mile away, was connected with Greenwich, and at exactly noon each day the ball drops, making an electrical connection with the castle and announcing by the roar of great Mons Meg that it is 12 o'clock, according to King Sol, no matter how men may turn the hands of the clock in a vain endeavor to save daylight.

It is a long, steep way to the castle bridge, where a series of seven ponderous gates, one after another, keep out the invader and impress one with the impregnable fortress. Its great stone walls are from ten to twenty feet thick and builded on a solid mountain of rock which rises two hundred feet above the level of Princess Street, and with its forbidding towers defies the power of man to enter. At least, its defiant attitude was well taken in those earlier centuries, but one can imagine what modern Big Berthas and airships and bombs might do to even such a seemingly impregnable place. We walked the weary way over the stones and under the arches where many a brave Scot has marched to death for his religion and to the dungeon where the Duke of Argyle slept his last night. Here Mary, Queen of Scots, was imprisoned, and from these walls she let her infant son, James, down in a basket, that he might be christened a Roman Catholic in those bloody days of the Scottish Reformation.

Here, too, on the heights of the castle is the oldest and smallest chapel in all Scotland, and called "Queen Margaret's Chapel," because of the devotion and sacrifice of this saintly woman in days which tried women's souls as well as men's.

Looking from the heights of this castle, almost three hundred years ago beautiful Queen Mary could see through the chinks of stone, which they called "windows," in her prison cell, the house of her enemy, old John Knox, of St. Giles. His quaint house still stands in High Street, and I went reverently into his study and sat in meditation in the chair of that sturdy prophet of God who did more than any other one man for Scotland. When Queen Mary had won all but him by her wiles and beauty, she attempted to do the same for him and win Scotland for Catholicism. But John Knox said he had faced too many stern men's faces to be beguiled by her beauty or the artful ways of the queen, and his fearless answer and denunciation of the queen and her court sent the grand ladies shrinking in terror from his stinging words and left the queen herself in tears, despite her hatred of him and all the Protestant religion he stood for.

Then my old Scotch guide took me to St. Giles, the spiritual castle of Edinborough, where John Knox lies buried beneath the stones of the court. Mighty columns rise on every side, and great aisles lead between them to the great pulpit. A hundred records and stones and statues speak silently of the brave deeds of the dead in defense of Church and country in the days where it meant business to be a real Christian.

But space bids me hurry on, and not dwell on High Street or Holyrood, or even in old Edinborough University, all of which were vibrant with the story of yesterday in Scotland.

But we must spend a day with Walter Scott and "The Lady of the Lake" in the Trossachs, out where the "Bens" and "Lochs" of the highland still hold sway and tell in their own way the story of the lady fair and those who loved and lived in her day. Through Stirling Castle to Loch Kathrine and Ellen's Isle and Ben Lomand and Rob Roy's cave, made the old tales of Walter Scott live again as it did later when we visited Kenilworth Castle, in England, and walked in fancy through its courts with Queen Elizabeth and her gay court to the banquet hall.

But we are to go up to London for a week, and we must hurry on with a vow that we will reread much of English literature after this journey.

Our guide corrected me when I said "down to London" from Scotland, and advised me that no matter which way you may come to this "capital of the British empire" and the greatest city in the world, that we must always say "up to London" with greatest respect.

We travel "third class" in great comfort, since there no longer is a "second class" and nobody travels first class but the "nobility and fools and some Americans." Our seats for the four-hundred-mile ride are facing each other, with a table between on which our noon meal is served. But if we do not desire a meal, we travel in a compartment which only holds eight or ten people and which is entirely separated from all the rest of the car and train and can only be reached by a side door on to the depot platform by a heavy swinging door. Even the conductor (the "guard" he is called here) cannot get to you or any one else without stopping the train and getting off and on again to get into the compartment. It is the sort of privacy the English people like, and while it is new to us, it is very delightful.

We arrived in London in the early evening, having traveled at a speed of fifty miles an hour for eight hours, with only three stops. There are no grade crossings in England, and the railroad right of way goes over or under the public road everywhere, which gives greater speed and safety, a thing greatly to be desired in our own vast country.

But we are "up to London" at last, and a great bus drives us to Hotel Grafton, which serves the sort of a meal that Hotel Grand did in Glasgow, and Hotel Caledonia in Edinborough, and the hotels in the Trossachs and in the English Lake country and everywhere you go in England and Scotland, in the hotels at least.

When one gets his first, or fifth, or tenth meal all alike, he thinks that it is very good, but, as my father, who was born in New England, says: "Beans are fine for a hundred meals or so, but after that they do get a little monotonous." But we never get weary of a good bed, and surely we never had such wonderful beds anywhere as here on Britain's Isle—except that there's no place like home.

But we're housed and fed and comfortable in London town, and stretched out in this wonderful bed we say:

"We thank Thee, Lord, for
Snug-thatched roof,
From cold and storm;
And that beyond my need
Is room for friend forlorn.
We thank Thee most for place of rest,
And more for shelter for the guest.

London, England.

NOTICE.

Rev. Roy C. Helfenstein, D. D., pastor of People's Christian Church, Dover, Del., wishes it announced through THE SUN that our Dover Church has on hand fifty copies of the new Christian Hymnaries, which his Church will dispose of at 30 cents per copy; also about 200 copies of the same book, used some, but in excellent condition, at 25 cents per copy.

If any Christian Church will take 200 or more of these books, both the used and the unused copies will be supplied at 25 cents. He will be glad to send a sample of the used copy to any one interested. Here is a real opportunity for some of our Christian Churches who are in need of Christian Hymnaries and who have delayed this matter. Let any Church interested in this notice, write immediately to Mr. J. S. Collins, Secretary, Dover, Del.

OUR PLEDGES
Men and Millions Sacred, Solemn and Binding.

These obligations were made through the Church to the Kingdom of God and to all that pertains to building up that Kingdom in the world, so far as our Christian Church is concerned. As Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., has so pertinently pointed out: "A Christian can no more drop his pledges than he can drop his prayers or his Church membership. Misfortune may make it impossible to meet financial obligations--'When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both' (Luke 7:42)--but not till 'they had nothing to pay.' Obligations to God are as binding as obligations to men, and God will help those who try to keep their pledges."

Many are making great sacrifices to meet these obligations and pay these pledges. Is your Church on this list? If not, let's do our best to get it there. If there, let's get it in first place.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

"Wherefore take unto you the whole armour of God."—Eph. 6:13.

The loins must be girt about with truth; there must be no falsehood, no duplicity, no want of transparency, no insincerity, no deceit in the character. "Having on the breast-plate of righteousness," there must be no crookedness, no want of straightforwardness, no unrighteousness, no dishonesty of any kind. "Your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace," so that you can carry peace and restfulness with you wherever you go, and into whatever home you enter. "Above all, taking the shield of faith wherewith to quench all the fiery darts of the devil." Christ Himself is your shield. He will quench the enemy's darts, if you are committed to Him, and fiery though they are. He will quench them in His precious blood. "Take the helmet of salvation"; be careful never to lose your hope; however fierce the fight, see that the hope of victory, now and always, covers your head, like a helmet, in the day of battle. If you lose your hope, you become an easy prey to the cruel enemy. Say with Christian, in his conflict with the devil: "Rejoice not over me, O my enemy, for when I fall, I shall rise again."—Dr. J. G. Mantle, for the Alliance Weekly.

"Surrounded by a host of foes,
Stormed by a host of foes within;
Nor swift to flee, nor strong to oppose,
Single, against hell, earth and sin;
Single, yet undismayed I am,
I dare believe in Jesus' name.

What though a thousand hosts engage,
A thousand worlds my soul to shake;
I have a shield shall quell their rage,
And drive the alien armies back;
Portrayed it bears a bleeding Lamb,
I dare believe in Jesus' name.

TUESDAY.

"Put on the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the Devil." —Eph. 6:11.

"Take the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God." This is the only aggressive weapon allowed to the Christian soldier. He who is mighty in the Scripture; in whom the Word of God abides; who treats the Word of Jesus as he would treat Jesus Himself, will be able to give a good account of himself in the day of battle. Jesus has taught us how to use this weapon against Satan. Refresh your mind, again and again, with the record of His victory in the wilderness. But you are not ready yet. You must advance on your knees; "praying always with all prayer." Praying in fighting. Pray fighting, and fight praying.

"He stands best who kneels most;
He stands strongest who kneels weakest;
He stands longest who kneels lowest."

And always remember that the indwelling Christ is the Christian's complete panoply. He is, to those who take Him so to be, "the whole armour of God."—Dr. J. G. Mantle.

"Me to retrieve from Satan's hands,
Me from the evil world to free;
To purge my sins and loose my bands,
And save from all iniquity;
My Lord and God, from heaven He came,
I dare believe in Jesus' name.

Salvation in that name there is,
Salvation from sin, death, and hell;
Salvation into glorious bliss,
How great salvation who can tell?
But all He hath for mine I claim,
I dare believe in Jesus' name."

WEDNESDAY.

"If ye were of the world, the world would love his own: but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you."—John 15:18-19.

"A half-Christianized world, and a more than half-secularized Church get on well together. When they do agree, their agreement is wonderful. And it is a miserable thing to reflect that about the average Christianity of this generation, there is so very little that does deserve the antagonism of the Church. Why should the world care to hate or trouble itself about a professing Church, large parts of which are only a bit of the world under another name? There is no need whatever that there should be any antagonism at all between a godless world and hosts of professing Christians. If you want to escape the hostility, drop your flag, button your coat over the badge that shows that you belong to Christ, and do the thing that the people round about you do, and you will have a perfectly easy and undisturbed life. Reckon the antagonism of the world as a sign and test of your true union with Jesus Christ, and meet it by not dropping your standard one inch. Keep the flag right at the masthead. If you begin to haul it down, where are you going to stop? Nowhere, until you have got it draggling in the mud at the foot.—Dr. Alexander Maclaren.

"In full and glad surrender
I give myself to Thee;
Thine utterly, and only,
And evermore to be.
O Son of God, who lov'st
I will be Thine alone,
And all I have, and all I am,
Shall henceforth be Thine own."

THURSDAY.

"Whosoever shall be ashamed of me and my words in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him also shall the Son of Man be ashamed when He cometh in the glory of the Father with the holy angels."—Mark 8:38.

Christ has united Himself inseparably with His words. Together they come to seek the soul's confidence and allegiance. With great tenderness, and with equal clearness, He intimates that not to receive His words is the companion sin to rejecting Himself. Nor could it possibly be otherwise. Christ claimed that His doctrine was not His own, but the Father's, who sent Him; and a few hours before His crucifixion, in the calm survey of His lifework in His Father's presence, He declares "I have given them Thy word." The conviction is inevitable, that a professed confidence in Christ which does not embrace His words as well as His person, is not the saving faith of the New Testament. "Ye seek to kill me, because my word hath no place in you"—such is the glimpse He gives us into the hearts of His enemies. The faithful disciple, therefore, "in this adulterous and sinful generation," is one who is ashamed neither of his Lord nor of His words.—Dr. J. G. Mantle.

"Ashamed of Jesus; that dear Friend,
On Whom my hopes of heaven depend?
No! when I blush be this my shame,
That I no more revere His name.

Ashamed of Jesus! Yes, I may,
When I've no guilt to wash away,
No tears to wipe, no good to crave,
No fears to quell no soul to save."

FRIDAY.

"Love . . . thinketh no evil."—1 Cor. 13:5.

John Wesley described the sin of evil speaking as "the universal sin." Let such a horror of this sin fall on you as you now feel for drunkenness; put it among the impossible things to which you reckon yourself dead. If the old habit breaks through again, acknowledge it as a most direct disobedience of the expressed will of God; confess it with your face in the very dust, and forsake it as you forsake lying. The whole moral law is contained in the words "dwell in love." Let us, then, abhor evil speaking, and hate it, as we hate lying, stealing and drunkenness. Above all, I would most solemnly warn against speaking evil, or even slightingly, of those who are called of God to preach His gospel, even though they may not as yet recognize, or even may oppose, truths dear to you. A Christian lady, whose husband was as yet unconverted, as she left the Church, made a critical remark upon the preacher. As her eye met her husband's face, she saw that he was in tears. She had placed an obstacle to obstruct the entrance of the gospel into her husband's unregenerate heart. Never again, my reader, risk doing the same thing. If the devil tempt you to it, overcome the attack by praying for the preacher.

A bright horizon out at sea
Obscures the distant ships;
Rough hearts look smooth and beautiful
In charity's eclipse.

Sweeten my bitter-thoughted heart
With charity like Thine,
Till self shall be the only spot
On earth which does not shine.

SATURDAY.

"They shall be gathered one by one."—Isa. 27:12.

A good many years ago, the Liverpool Sailors' Home, in England, was discovered to be on fire. At length, by dint of great energy on the part of those who were at work, it was supposed that all the inmates had been saved. But suddenly a loud shriek was heard, and three sailors were seen standing upon a narrow ledge of wall some forty feet above the ground. A ladder was brought, but alas! it was too short. What could be done? "Stand back!" said a resolute and daring man, as with another ladder in his hand he mounted the former, and put the one to the other—but, alas! even that was too short. Then, with the ingenuity of a daring man, he turned his back to the wall, and putting the shorter ladder on his shoulders cried out, "Come down over me!" Those in the street held their breath as they saw one after another of the sailors safely come down over him; and when they reached the ground a deafening cheer was heard from hundreds of throats. The ladder of the pulpit, the platform, and the class-room is often too short, and men continue unsaved; but add your length to the ladder, individualize your work, let your brother reach a place of safety over you, and though no deafening human cheer shall fall on your ears, the courts of heaven shall reverberate with gladness, for "there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth."—Dr. J. G. Mantle, for the Alliance Weekly.

"Thou must be true thyself, if thou the truth wouldst teach;
Thy soul must overflow if thou another soul wouldst reach—
It needs the overflow of heart to give the lips full speech.
Think truly, and thy thoughts shall the world's famine feed;
Speak truly, and each word of thine shall be a fruitful seed;
Live truly, and thy life shall be a great and noble creed."

Kiddies' Korner

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT, Editor.

DEAR LITTLE SUNSHINE KIDDIES:

Your real editor is away this week, enjoying a house-party at Beryle Bay. In order that she may be entirely free from her regular duties, I am undertaking to occupy, not fill, her place.

The story contest is coming along fine, and I hope many more will try before the time is out.

Of course, you are all playing hard now, for August will soon be gone and school will open; and that means real work, because the children of our "Kiddies' Korner" can't fail to make good grades. Much of your original work shows time well spent in school.

Let us all hope that the "house-party" does not get drowned in the bay or have any other misfortune, and very soon your editor will be home again ready to tell you all the amusing things that happened on her trip. Until then will you bear with me and overlook my shortcomings? I shall do my very best to make this page interesting for two weeks, and you can help a great deal by sending me little poems and short stories about your own every-day life.

Perhaps next week—if Dr. Atkinson does not "fire" me—I'll tell you about my little dog "Rusty." Good-by.

Your editor's mother,

MRS. T. A. MOFFITT.

LITTLE HARRY.

Little Harry lived with his mother, who was a poor widow. She rose early one morning, and, looking out of her window, saw that the ground was covered with snow, and calling Harry, told him if he didn't think he could take his shovel and earn a little money by clearing off snow from before the houses.

He thought it was pretty cold work, but did not like to go without any breakfast either, so he shouldered his shovel and started for the village. He did not know whether to knock or not at the first house he came to, but saw a face at the window, and a woman came to the door, and said: "What do you want, my boy?" "Can I clear the snow from your walk?" he asked. "Certainly you can, but come in first and get warm and something to eat."

So he went in and had a nice breakfast, and while he was eating he thought of the poor little birds out in the cold, and carried out a few crumbs and gave them.

When his work was done, the kind woman had him come into her warm kitchen and tell her how poor they were and how they had gone to bed the night before cold and hungry.

So she filled a basket as full as he could carry, and gave him some money, and he went home feeling very happy that he had done so much towards making his mother comfortable.

THE LITTLE SAILORS.

Paul and Mary lived on the bank of a river not far from the sea. Ships sailed past their home every day, and the children stopped their play to watch the vessels as they sailed up and down the river. They sometimes called the ships birds with white wings, and one day when it was blowing hard they made a sail with Mary's handkerchief, and putting his hoop and stick on the ground, Paul took hold of the two corners at one side, and May took hold of the two corners of the other side; then they held the handkerchief against the wind. Mary was almost blown over, and Paul laughed to see their sails filled by the wind.

When they went home they told their mother what they had been doing. She told them that sailors used a large sheet for a sail and fastened it to a long pole called a mast, and stretched it with spars and ropes. Large ships have several sails fastened to masts, and by these are blown over the sea from one country to another.

One day Paul and Mary were taken to the seaside, where the river that ran past their house ended, and when they saw a vessel bounding along with its sails set they were delighted.

When they went home their mother showed them how the sailors can roll the sails up when they wish to slacken their speed or to stop their vessel.

Paul profited by what he had learned, and made a little boat, and showed Mary how to sew a sail on a mast. They took it down to the pond in the garden, and the wind filled the sails and blew the little vessel across the pond.

In the summer, Paul and Mary were invited to the seashore to pass a number of weeks. They played all day on the beach. Paul brought his little boat with him, and when the sea was calm Paul and Mary waded into the water to sail the boat. Paul tied a string to it, so that he could pull it along. When they were tired of playing they went fishing for shrimps. May carried a basket on her back to put the shrimps in as they caught them, and they carried them home and ate them for their supper. On other days they walked on the smooth, shining sands, and looked for shells and pretty-colored stones, and carried them home and placed them in the garden among the flower beds.

As Paul grew older, he still had the same fondness for ships, and determined to be a sailor. So he gained a reluctant consent from his mother, and went on a voyage to the West Indies, where we will leave him for the present, and at some time in the future, when he is captain of a vessel, may take up our story and tell of his adventures on the sea.

THE JOLLY GIANT.

Grace May North.

There once was a jilliful-jolliful Giant
(Who jumped over mountains to keep his legs pliant),
Whose three heads were grinning from each day's beginning
Till star-light was shining, just never repining.
That jilliful-jolliful Giant Ha-Ho
Who lived in a land that's not on the map; so
Just how to reach it, no small boy can know.

Next door to the jilliful-jolliful Giant
(Who jumped over mountains to keep his legs pliant),
An ogre so fearful, who wouldn't be cheerful,
Whose three heads were scowling and snarling and growling,
Would mutter and sputter at Giant Ha-Ho
Because he was laughing and chortling so.
He'd roar-r-r, "What's funny, I'd like to know!"

"Ha! ha!" laughed the jilliful-jolliful giant,
"Come, jump over mountains, and keep your legs pliant.
The way to be happy, not snarly and snappy,
Is just to keep hopping and never once stopping
Until you feel jolly," said Giant Ha-Ho
As he stood on his three heads, as boys do, you know,
One after another and all in a row.

"Prut! prut!" roared the ogre to jilliful Giant.
"Huh! I can jump higher. My legs are so pliant."
Then, just to be showing how far he'd be going,
He ran with a thumping and soon was a-jumping
From mountain to mountain with Giant Ha-Ho;
And, too, he was shouting as boys do, and so
He changed to a jolliful ogre, you know—
That made him a pleasanter neighbor, Hi-O!

NOTHING TO DO.

I know a little girl
About as big as you,
Who sighs ten times a day:
"I don't know what to do!"

She has new toys and games,
A baby brother, too;
And yet she still complains:
"I don't know what to do!"

The baby likes to romp,
And mother's busy, too;
Now, can't you think of something
That this small girl could do?

HE ALWAYS FITS.

A peg that's round won't fit, I'm bound,
In any hole that's square;
But if a boy that's square is round,
He'll fit in anywhere.

Don't be afraid to soil your hands,
Don't wear a lazy frown;
You can't make footprints on the sands
Of time by sitting down.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

Subject: "Jesus Cleanses the Temple."

Lesson: John 2:13-22.

Golden Text: Matt. 21:13.

There are some who would cut this story out of the gospel record. They think it shows Jesus in an unfavorable light. There are others who "tone it down" by elaborate Greek exegesis until it becomes flabby and harmless. There are still others who accept the story and apologize for it. And all this because of the fact that Jesus apparently became angry and used force. But these well-meaning people overlook the fact that there is a pugnacious instinct in human life and that anger has a rightful place in a well-ordered life. If Jesus Christ had not had this combative instinct, He would never have waged such an implacable warfare against evil, and He would not have been the Master of men, for anger is an inherent quality of real manhood. It is not anger that is wrong; it is the abuse of anger. It is not wrong to have a temper; it is wrong to lose one's temper. Anger is a driving force, a dynamic power in life.

The Master had gone up to Jerusalem to the feast of the Passover. He had come not to destroy, but to fulfill, and He accepted what was good in Judaism. There was something of real value in these Passover feasts, and Jesus approved them by attending them. Those who say that they can be just as good out of the Church as in it find no sanction for their position in Jesus.

When He arrived at the temple He found that mercenary and greedy-minded men were making capital of the religious ceremonies and demands. Many of the people had come from afar, and they could not bring their sacrifices with them. They also needed money of an accepted standard, coming as they did from the ends of the earth. Hence these money changers and these sellers of animals for sacrifice saw an opportunity to do a land-office business. And they made bold to invade even the outer court of the temple.

It was not necessarily wrong for the men to sell animals or to change money. In fact, they could have performed a real service to the pilgrims to the feast. But there was something about their actions, and especially about their brazenry in invading the temple, that stirred the Master to the depths of His soul and fanned into flame His indignation—yea, His anger! And He made a scourge and drove the animals from the temple court and poured out the changers' money and over threw their tables—and I do not believe He was very gentle about it, either. And I make no apology for Him, either. He was as divine then as at any time. There was an element here that we need. The trouble with us folk is that we are too prone to condone the evils of our day. We need more of the Master's spirit of righteous indignation and anger against all that is wrong. And perhaps it would not be amiss to start at the Church of God. It is significant that Jesus (according to John's gospel) cleansed the temple at the beginning of His ministry.

A Few Suggestive Teaching Points.

1. Organized greed dares to enter even the Church of Christ.
2. There is a legitimate place for righteous indignation or anger in life.
3. We must direct our energies against wrongdoing wherever we find it.
4. Jesus never allowed personalities to enter into our issue; it was against evil that He waged.
5. God's house should be a house of prayer.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

By Wm. T. Scott.

Topic: "What I Find in Romans 12."

Lesson: Roman 12.

Daily Readings: M., Aug. 11, Consecration—V. 1, 1 John 3:14-18. T., Aug. 12, Transformation—V. 2, 2 Cor. 3:14-18. W., Aug. 13, Humility—V. 3, Matt. 8:5-13. T., Aug. 14, Co-operation—V. 4, Mark 6:7-13. F., Aug. 15, Kindness—V. 10, Matt. 22:34-40. S., Aug. 16, Earnestness—V. 11 2 Tim. 1:1-11.

Theme: The whole life for God.

The doctrine of the epistle to the Romans is justification by faith; the practical lesson of the epistle is self-consecration to God. The twelfth chapter is the application of the epistle to the individual life.

The idea is not that sacrifice should be made in order to be Christian, not that we have to do in order to be, but rather to be in order to do. "Be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good and acceptable will of God" (12:2). God does not simply want our deeds, but our lives—then the deeds will come. We cannot "present our bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God," unless our lives are first consecrated to Him. Paul also reviews the Golden Rule in this chapter.

In the world of temptation for good and for evil, where the life is active either in the field of sin or righteousness, Paul realizes that the life must continuously be active. Sin, he says, cannot be overcome by merely abstaining from sin; that is not the cure, but "overcome evil with good."

Questions and Thoughts.

What thought in Rom. 12 most impresses you? Tell why.

How can we train ourselves to render good for evil? Is it possible?

CRADLE-ROLL RALLY.

The annual missionary cradle-roll rally of the Elon College Church was held on the afternoon of June 28th, at the Christian parsonage. More than fifty-five babies and their mothers were present.

We used the program given in the Christian Missionary, with slight changes.

Our missionary from Porto Rico, Rev. D. P. Barrett, and the local pastor, Dr. N. G. Newman, were present and made appropriate talks to the little folks. As the superintendent called the roll, the little tots came, one by one, and placed their mite-boxes on the table.

Following the program, ice cream and cakes were served to all. The proceeds from mite-boxes, including mothers' offering and dues, were $25.

We wish those who have difficulty in getting the mothers to attend the rallies could be present at one of ours. We think they would get a new vision and inspiration. We have no difficulty here in getting mothers to attend, and both mothers and babies enter heartily into the spirit of the occasion.

Our trouble is lack of room to accommodate them, and this will be remedied by another year, when the Mooney Christian education building will be completed.

Mrs. N. G. Newman,
Cradle Roll Superintendent.

NOTHING NEW.

It is a trite saying that there is "nothing new under the sun," but from time to time discoveries are made that tend to prove its truth. In fact, instead of being a "discovery," it is often found that the unearthing of some long-buried thing is merely a "rediscovery." This applies to one at least of the numerous archeological finds made near Odessa by Professor Semenov Zusser, a distinguished Russian scientist.

These discoveries consist for the most part of large numbers of ancient Greek tombs of striking design, and among the articles found in the tombs was a small linen bag containing a mirror, a rouge-stick for the lips, and a charcoal pencil for the eyebrows. As the bag was found in a woman's grave with tufts of false hair and a number of silver bracelets, earrings, beads and other jewels, no other conclusion can be come to than that it is the forerunner of what the woman of today calls a "vanity case."

It is often said that the use of cosmetics and other supposed aids to beauty, or at least their excessive use, is peculiar of the modern feminine mind, but here we have the women of more than a thousand years ago resorting to the same artifices.

Looking at it from another angle, it may be that the find in the tomb of the woman of ancient Greece is but a proof that, as frequently asserted, modern woman is not modern at all, but is only reverting to the manners and customs of pagan times. The difficulty about this hypothesis is that research has shown there is scarcely a period in the world's history when women did not seek to improve upon nature by the use of some nostrum of the beauty specialist.

However, at certain periods and in various countries, the women mainly relied on the plentiful use of pure water, sunshine and healthful exercise, and there are not a few at the present time who think that the most pleasing and permanent results can be secured by the employment of the same simple means.—Ex.

Brighten the Corner Where You Are.

The world needs more sunshine-makers, more dispensers of joy. The great world of today, with its varied ramifications of business and social life, needs more cheerful men and women, with more hopefulness and laughter. Life is too full of treasures, too full of good things, to be wasted in listening to harsh words and looking at sour faces. Brighten the corners and you will make the world better.

Sunlight develops an antiseptic in our blood which kills germs very quickly. People who live in darkness do not possess this "antiseptic" blood.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

The Orphanage farmer boys are very happy, because of the fact they have the finest prospect for a summer crop of soy beans that they have ever had at this season of the year. The corn crop is also looking good, but a little late on account of having so much rain in the early spring.

The boys have worked splendidly this year, and if we have good rains till the first of September I feel sure they will make a good crop. We threshed our wheat crop last week and made 167 bushels, and 125 bushels of oats. We have also dug 150 bushels of Irish potatoes. So you see our boys are not such bad farmers after all.

Frank Collier and Joe Jones smile when you say you have plenty of bean hay for the cows. They are making plenty of milk and butter now for all the children. It is a much-needed blessing. The girls are having their joys, too. This is the canning season. Our beans for canning are just coming in, and we have canned one day. Our little peach orchard has fruit this year for the first time. We gathered eight bushels today, and the girls peeled and canned thirty-two gallons and finished before 11 o'clock. They are always happy to put up fruit and have it for winter. We have no apples. I wonder if our friends would not give us some apples to can. They seem to be plentiful in the country, and we have our own canning outfit, so if we could get the apples we could can them here. It takes lots of fruit for the children, and it is good for them. We will be grateful to you for fruit to can or to have you can some for us.

HOMES AND ORPHANAGES.

The study of whether or not the children who live in orphan homes in North Carolina are better cared for and better educated than children in the average North Carolina home and the average North Carolina school, is well worthy of the best work of the State Department of Welfare, the State Health Department, local health departments, the State Tuberculosis Association, one or all combined. Should the question be answered in the affirmative, as it probably will be, the question would immediately arise, are not the children in our homes and public schools entitled to as good care and as good education as children in our orphan homes? This is easily answered in the affirmative. Then it would be necessary to follow this up with another question which is not nearly so easily answered—if not, why not? what is lacking, and what is the remedy for it?

The Marion County (Ind.) Tuberculosis Association has done a most interesting piece of work, covering a period of two years, in the nutrition phase of this problem. A brief report of this work in the Nation's Health says:

"The glaring fact brought out is that the child, as a rule, seems better off physically under the system of training and the diets of the average orphanage than he is under the diets of a normal home and the system of living that goes generally with the average public or parochial school.

"The studies in Indiana show that the child is nearer normal weight for his height after a stay in an orphanage than he is living in a normal home and attending the average school. Almost invariably, according to Miss Mary A. Meyers, executive secretary of the association, a lower percentage of children is found underweight in the orphanage than in schools which draw their attendance from homes of the middle or higher class."

Studies of this kind in North Carolina should be made, and the North Carolina Tuberculosis Association offers to donate height-weightage charts to any or all orphanages that will undertake the work.

AGRICULTURAL NOTES.

Virginia's corn crop is very late, so an early frost will cause considerable loss, according to the statement of the agricultural statistician in his report released July 18th. The rains have prevented cultivation, and most fields are grassy and weedy. Some early planted crops on well-drained land look good, but river and creek-bottom crops are very poor. Conditions are worst in the eastern part of the State and best in the southwest. The wheat harvest, which is usually completed in June, has been very late, and in the northern part of the State many farmers have just finished cutting. There is generally a large crop of straw, but the heads are not as well filled as usual in some sections, and the rains have caused some damage to the grain in the shock. The yield per acre will probably be up to the average for the past ten years, however. The digging of early potatoes progressed rapidly during the past ten days, and the shipments during the second week of July were unusually heavy. Total carlot shipments to July 12th were 10,916 cars, compared with 10,719 cars to the same date last year. The yield on the Eastern Shore has been better than expected, while in the Norfolk section the crop turned out poorly except on well-drained land. Peanut growers have had great difficulty in keeping their fields clean, and the condition of the crop is poor. Fruit prospects continue to be above the average in most parts of the State. The peach crop is one of the largest ever grown, with an estimated production of 1,241,000 bushels in comparison with 504,000 bushels last year, and apple production will be greater than last year by approximately a million barrels. The hay crop is generally ready for harvest, but the wet weather has prevented much progress with this work. The yield will be unusually good if all of the crop can be saved. Pastures have made splendid growth and are unusually fine in all parts of the State.

In North Carolina the corn outlook is reported perhaps the best of any crop. The best fields are found on uplands, bottom-land crops being poor because of floods. Bud worms have done considerable damage in some localities, and the crop is generally backward in keeping with other crops. The fruit outlook in North Carolina is good, in spite of adverse winter conditions and spring lateness, followed by a long period of wet weather. The quality of peaches is good in size, but poor in flavor and keeping qualities. A heavy drop of apples during June was reported from the large commercial orchards in western counties. Truck crops are generally good to fair. Cantaloupes are very unsatisfactory, due to lack of sunshine primarily. Wheat may not turn out as good as was expected, due to the bad weather during harvesting. Both wheat and oats are reported as sprouting in the fields, while other reports note that these crops are rotting. An increase in fertilizer used this year is reported, but much of it has been washed out by excessive rainfall.

South Carolina's corn acreage is 4 per cent less than last year, but the condition is good, being placed at 80 per cent on July 1st, in comparison with 73 per cent a year previously and 81 per cent the ten-year average. The indicated production of 31,933,000 bushels is about 500,000 bushels less than last year. Weather conditions have been favorable for cowpeas, and also for soy and velvet beans. Soy beans are steadily gaining in favor in many sections and are replacing to some extent cowpeas and velvet beans. Conditions of tomatoes, watermelons and cantaloupes are fair to good. Cantaloupes are being shipped and watermelons are beginning to appear on the market from Southern counties. Peaches, apples and pears are plentiful and of good quality. The commercial acreage of sweet potatoes is 2 per cent less than last year, and the condition is 81 per cent of normal. The acreage of hay shows a 2 per cent increase, and present prospects point to a fine hay crop this year.

Georgia reports show that about the same conditions prevail.

FIELD NOTES.

The meeting began at Needhams Grove the third Sunday in July. Rev. J. C. Edwards did the preaching, and it was fine. His messages were plain and inspiring. Mr. Edwards is a fine young man and is a member of the Baptist Church. He is a nephew of the pastor.

There were twelve professions, ten additions to the Church, and the Church was grately revived; there is great promise in the future for Needhams Grove. Would be glad if our brethren would visit Needhams Grove.

THE A B C OF PRAYER.

When the results of a survey in one of our colleges were announced, "Scanty acquaintance with the Scriptures" was revealed. Seventy per cent of the student body did not know what to call the Sermon on the Mount; 65 did not know the Golden Rule, and 12 per cent did not know the first clause of the Lord's Prayer. This impresses one with the deplorable need of religious instruction in the home, the Church, in the school and in private life.

We cannot afford to be ignorant of the Lord's Prayer. Not only its "first clause," but all its noble phrases should be treasured in the heart, for this prayer opens the door of approach to God; it reveals the path that leads to the Father. And it is so plain that the wayfaring man need not err therein.

We come as pupils into Christ's school of prayer. All may learn the secret of the way to God, even the child, or the humblest servant of the Lord. The wayward and lost son may come back home. However poor, or ignorant, or lowly in position, you may gain access into this grace, into the Father's presence. "Lord, teach us to pray," is the quest; "When ye pray," is the answer. Here is the first lesson. Here we learn the A B C of all praying.

This model prayer was given to inquiring minds; to dumb, bewildered disciples who had no language but a cry. It deals with the primary, elemental needs of life. It sums up, in a few choice sentences, comprehensively and briefly, lofty petitions which give direction to all true Christian thinking and prayer and conduct. "It is," as Dr. Bruce says, "the alphabet of all possible prayer." It is the A B C of prayer. It is the beginning, and is for spiritual minors.

There are six petitions in the Lord's Prayer; the first three refer to God's glory, the remaining three to man's good.

The first clause brings us face to face with the divine being. "When ye pray, say, Our Father," or "Father." With this word, Jesus began His prayer in Gethsemane. This encourages trust and confidence to speak to God when we call Him Father. This conception of God as Father lies at the basis of Christian praying.

The initial petition, "Hallowed be Thy name," the first breath of prayer, is a profession of reverence and personal devotion. We should always think and speak of God devoutly and never use His name lightly or irreverently.

The second phrase goes one step further. When we seek to have that kingdom take the first place in our hearts, we must have a passion to help establish the reign of God not only in our hearts, but in all the world.

And a more beautiful pearl of prayer than the next one would be hard to find. "Thy will be done." Jesus said, "My meat is to do the will of Him that sent me." Thus the great objectives of all religious activities are put at the top—universal reverence for God, the kingdom as the goal of life, and the universal doing of the Father's will as meat and drink. When William Carey, the shoemaker, was taken to task for neglecting his business, he replied: "Business! My business in the kingdom, and I cobble shoes to pay expenses."

Then come the human needs, the "daily bread." The child asks the loving Father for the necessary food and strength to do one's daily work and the spirit to be dutiful. What an expression of confidence! This petition would spur the lazy, check the greedy, and incite brotherly love. It will create a spirit of democracy and comradeship, for we must not lose sight of that little pronoun "our." It is "Our Father," "our bread," "our debts." It binds the brotherhood with a new sense of God, the Father.

And now in the last burden of entreaty, we lay before the Father-heart the most baffling and perplexing of all our problems, the moral evil. There are temptations that thickly beset us every day. Was there ever a time when the students in our colleges and schools, the boys and girls in the streets, and men and women in all the walks of life, were facing such fiery trials as today? The world pull is strong, the battle is keen and strong and seductive. Was the world ever in need of spiritual re-enforcements more than at this very hour?

And what is the hope of mankind? What the cure of its ills? Whence shall salvation come? Our only hope is in the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. In the love and fatherliness of God we find strength and refuge. We find shelter from the storms of life here.

This is the first step. This beautiful prayer opens the door of faith, of communication and communion with the Father. As the child comes to his earthly father with his plans, his misgivings, his hopes and fears, so, when we pray, there is a divine Person who is interested, a prayer-hearing Father. "Casting all your care upon Him, for He careth for you." "The Founder of Christianity emphatically teaches that God is not only ready to allow the approaches of man, but that God is anxious to meet man, care for him with a Father's love and care, and rejoices when he turns from evil ways to seek the face of God."—B. Waters, in the "Christian Evangelist."

WARNING

WHAT KIND OF IRON HAVE YOU BEEN TAKING?

The Newer Compound of Iron Containing Organic Iron Like the Iron in Your Blood, or Ordinary Metallic or Mineral Iron—It's Important to Know the Difference—How to Tell.

A child must have lime to make bone, but it gets organic lime from milk and not mineral lime from lime rocks. So the millions of red blood corpuscles in your blood must have iron, but nature put food iron—not mineral iron—for your blood in the husks of grains and the peels and skins of vegetables: modern methods of cookery throw them all away, hence the alarming increase in anaemia—iron starvation of the blood, with the devitalizing weakness, nervousness and other attendant ills it brings. You should either go back to nature or take the newer form of food iron to make up for this great loss and maintain your bodily and mental vigor The iron that people usually take is mineral or metallic iron and is made merely by the action of strong acids on small pieces of iron. The newer form of iron is like the iron in your blood and like the iron in the husks of grains and peels of vegetables. It is so prepared that it is ready for almost immediate absorption and assimilation by your blood, while some physicians claim mineral iron is not absorbed at all This newer form of iron may be had from your druggist under the name of Nuxated Iron. It costs much more to make Nuxated Iron than it does to make mineral or metallic iron. But when your health is at stake, get the best. Your money will be refunded by the manufacturers if you do not obtain perfectly satisfactory results For sale by all druggists.

TATE.

Carl Tate, of Fancy Gap, Va., passed away July 31st, after a few hours of severe suffering. He was sleeping in the attic of the log-house of his father when he awoke with flames covering him. By the time he made his escape down the ladder that led to the attic, he was burned so badly that his clothes had been consumed. Carl only lived a few hours after this. The writer had the privilege of being with him a short while before his departure. While Carl had not united with the Church, he had made a profession a few days before in a revival conducted by the writer. In his dying hours he asked that we insist on all meeting him some day. He asked his father and people not to worry about him, as he was going to a better place. He died with a smile on his face, regardless of the severe suffering he was undergoing.

The funeral services were conducted by the writer. It was one of the saddest ever witnessed by this community. Bro. Tate, the father, had not only lost all he had and now looked for a helping hand from the world, but faced the sad hour of a departed son that was loved by all who knew him. Carl leaves a father, mother, several sisters and brothers to mourn their loss. He was born March 17, 1907, and died July 31, 1924. M. T. SORRELL.

BROWN.

Mrs. Arabella Brown, widow of Maca Brown, died at her residence, Franklinton, N. C., August 6, 1924. Surviving are four children—one son, Calvin W.; Mrs. F. T. Catlett, Mrs. A. W. Sandling, and Mrs. W. S. Fuller—and two sisters, Mrs. Ann Champion and Mrs. Jennie Merritt.

She gave her life to God in the days of her youth and remained faithful to the end. A lovely Christian mother of highly honored children, and grandmother, is now more than mother; she is a ministering angel between earth and that beautiful home to which happy pilgrims are going every day. D. A. L.

ALLISON—MASSEY.

Mr. Wade Allison, of Burlington, N. C., and Miss Louise Massey, of Youngsville, N. C., were united in marriage by the writer at the Christian parsonage, Elon College, N. C., on July 31, 1924. Only a few relatives and friends were present. The bride is a former Elon College student. May their wedded life be long, happy and useful.

N. G. NEWMAN.

A writer in the "Iowa Bulletin of State Institutions" gives some interesting comparisons between orphans of Civil War soldiers and orphans of World War soldiers. At the Soldiers' Orphans' Home at Davenport, Iowa, 800 Civil War orphans were admitted within three years after that war. During the corresponding period of time after the World War, no soldiers' orphans applied for admittance and only five have applied up to date.

Building a Country Sunday School

By E. L. Middleton.

Mr. Middleton possesses definite qualifications for the preparation of this work. For twelve years after leaving college, he was a day school and Sunday School teacher in a village that had "once-a-week" preaching, with half the membership of the Sunday School living in the open country; while for fourteen years more he has been a State Sunday School secretary in rural State. Mr. Middleton urges the adoption of no novel or revolutionary ideas or methods. He recognizes the place and the value of recognized Sunday School policies and methods, and has prepared a digest of the essentials in a manner plain enough to render it adaptable for use in any rural school. Methods, administration, organization and development are each and all discussed in this book in an eminently practical way.

The price of the book is $1.25. You can order it through "The Christian Sun," 1536 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By Sion M. Lynam.

A Good Showing.—

Investigations by the Department of Commerce, under Secretary Hoover, reveal the fact that Americans send seventy million dollars annually abroad for religious and philanthropic purposes. This sum does not at all compare with that spent in trade in foreign countries, but it does show that Americans have an interest in the religious and personal welfare of other peoples. It might be largely increased with profit to the Churches, but it is a good showing as it stands.

May Help America.—

The World League Against Alcohol, in its sessions at Winona Lake, considered two lines of thought—first, the enforcement of the dry laws in the United States; and second, the anti-liquor propaganda for the world. Reports were heard which showed that law enforcement in this country is increasingly hopeful, and that world-wide prohibition is not as distant as some may suppose. It was shown that anti-liquor propaganda elsewhere relieved the strain on American dry laws, and aided in their enforcement.

Japanese Earthquake Losses.—

Summaries made public recently state that the financial loss in property destroyed suffered by the Christian forces at work in Japan at the time of last year's earthquake was yen 9,093,500, and doubtless there was unreported losses that would bring this item up to the ten million yen mark ($5,000,000). The loss in life among Christians was small, but three missionaries, two from the Y. W. C. A. and one from the Reformed Church, being reported among those killed. Nearly four thousand Japanese Christians were reported as homeless, but the actual number was doubtless far larger.

A Regrettable Move.—

Within twenty-four hours after the passage of the bill forming the United Church of Canada from the Methodists, Congregationalists and the Presbyterians of that country, those Presbyterians who opposed the formation of the union took steps looking to the formation of a separate Presbyterian Church. A committee of twenty-two issued a statement giving assurance of such a step and declaring that such a Church would be formed.

We had hoped that the day of an answer to our Lord's prayer for unity among His believers was nearer than now seems to be the case. What a lamentable thing it is that we who claim to be followers of Jesus see only those truths, or partial truths, which divide, and hear not His prayer that we might be one in Him.

Some Figures to Think On.—

Dr. William Russell Owen, speaking before the B. Y. P. U. Conventon, in session at Denver, Colo., July 9th to 13th, declared in his address, "Angels in Ash-Heaps," that the Church has become an ash-heap, and pointed out that 5 per cent of the members do not exist at all, 10 per cent can never be found, 25 per cent never darken the doors of a place of worship, 50 per cent never contribute to the needs of their Churches, 75 per cent never attend a mid-week worship, 90 per cent have no family altar, while 95 per cent of them never attempt to win another to Christ and His kingdom.

The figures given out by Dr. Owen should make us think seriously on the condition of the Church at this time. Such organization of young people as the B. Y. P. U., Christian Endeavor, Epworth League, and others, can and must remedy these things. After all, the challenge is to youth, and they must make good for God.

A Great Editorial.—

An editorial from the Los Angeles Times that has been widely copied by American newspapers was written originally by Dr. Charles Coke Woods, a Methodist preacher. When the Leopold-Loeb murder shocked the country, he wrote on "Educating Moral Idiots." He pointed out the danger of a certain type of education without moral undergirding. "Wanted, schools that teach the essential worth of the human soul," he declared. "Wanted, colleges that put first in importance conscience and character." "Wanted, universities that regard great souls as of more importance than great sprinters. The citizens who support these educational institutions have the moral, the financial, and the civil right to expect from them 'first things first.' "

It takes things like the Leopold-Loeb murder case to shock the country into a realization of the need of Christian education. Every parent owes it to his child to see that he attends the college or the university which does put first things first. Every parent which does not see to the moral education of his child, risks constantly the recurrence of the Leopold-Loeb murder with his boy or his girl as the offender. It is a matter which demands the best thought and the exercise of Christian strength from parents. The trouble today is not with our young people, but with their parents, who have dared to leave off the education of their souls.

President Defends Defense.—

President Coolidge wrote to Frederick J. Libby, on July 23d, criticizing Mr. Libby's work against the keeping of September 12th as National Defense Day. Mr. Libby is executive secretary of the National Council for Prevention of War. The President wrote:

"It is now brought to my attention that your organization is profoundly concerned because of the assumption that the plans for a national defense test on September 12th constitutes a militaristic gesture. This assumption seems to be based chiefly on a confusion of terms. In some unofficial and unauthorized way, the defense test has been denominated 'Mobilization Day.' The government did not do this. It would be proper to call it 'inspection day.' But it is not a mobilization, and the government is not responsible for any such designation. As a result, some well-meaning people have misconstrued its character and purposes, assuming that a nation-wide mobilization of forces and of the civilian and industrial resources available for a national defense is to be carried out on that day. This, of course, is far from the truth. . . .

"It is not a mobilization, and the people who first attached to it the term 'mobilization day' and then proceeded to condemn it, have been utterly unfair. Most of them, I am sure, have been innocent of intent to be unfair, but they have been misled."

Mr. Libby, in reply, showed that authorities very close to the War Department itself were responsible for the first use of the term. The "Army and Navy Register" of January 5th, under the heading "Prospective Mobilization Day Maneuvers," announced that the "greatest peace-time military denomstration in the history of the United States" had come one step nearer "when Secretary of War Weeks had given favorable consideration to the Mobilization Day plans on which general staff officers have been working for months." The Chicago News for April 11th, in a story given to Junius P. Wood by the War Department's publicity bureau, referred to the day as "Mobilization Day," Mr. Libby's letter offers very conclusive proof that the proposition has impressed most people in America as a really militaristic one.

By whatever name we may call September 12th, it will have the same effect. If the country learns in a very definite way just what it has in men and materials for national defense, it will also know just what may be requisitioned for national "offense." The thing which made Germany the Germany which we remember was just that knowledge. The government first, and then the people, believed that Germany could conquer the world. They built a war machine, and, like a child with a toy, they wanted to use it, and did use it to the ruin of the world.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Celtic Christianity is said to have preceded the Roman faith in Iceland, being introduced from the British Isles, where it lingered for several centuries after the followers of Columba were vanquished at the council of Whitby in 664.

In making estimates on the cost of the air mail recently established between San Francisco and New York, it appears that on the first eastward flight 8,000 pieces of mail were carried and $2,308.48 received. This netted a profit of more than 40 per cent, or, to be exact, $539.68.

I would like to see more of our preachers give an account of their work; also I have looked for a record of our Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention which was held the fifth Sunday in July, at Pleasant Ridge, in Randolph County. Come on, preachers and laymen, and let our brethren know what we are doing to help build up the kingdom. W. C. MARTIN.

A good friend asked, the other day: "Is there a fund with which to send THE SUN to aged people who want it but have no way of securing money with which to pay for it?" On being advised that there was not, he said: "Well, I know a mighty good old lady who wants her Church paper, THE CHRISTIAN SUN, but is too poor in this world's goods to subscribe for it. Here is $1.00 for half a year's subscription." The editor wonders if some reader of these lines would like to send the other dollar and make out the subscription for a year? To this item, the managing editor has just received in stamps $1.00 from one whose identity is not made known.

PLEASANT GROVE REVIVAL.

No doubt many have been watching THE CHRISTIAN SUN to see a report of the meeting at Pleasant Grove, Va., since so many knew that the program was to be put on at that time by Dr. Howsare.

I wish to state that any Church will do well to avail itself of the opportunity of having Dr. Howsare come to the Church and put on such a program as we had at Pleasant Grove.

Many are wondering as to the results of this program. The results cannot possibly be estimated yet. We had two services in the afternoon, as the custom with the Church; this, together with rainy weather at the beginning, kept us from putting on the program in full. It is true, some are expecting a large addition to the Church, but this could not be, since there were only nineteen reported as being prospective members for the week. Out of nineteen, thirteen came into the Church.

It was interesting to note the results manifested by the members of the Church in coming out for the purpose of winning souls. The preaching was inspirational, the members enthusiastic, and the results fine. This is not the greatest benefit that came to the Church by having Dr. Howsare. The roundtable discussions, teaching, and the lectures that were given each morning were great for the pastor and the members of the Church. We hope and pray that the good Lord will send our friend and brother to the South again, that others may learn of these things.

MEMORIAL FUND.

Previously acknowledged	$12.00
Rev. J. D. Wicker, Sanford, N. C.....	1.00
Mrs. M. A. Walker and Miss Edith Walker, Burlington, N. C.	3.00
Total	$16.00

Bro. Wicker, in remitting his gift, says: "As a Church, we have neglected this memorial all too long, and I very much hope that pastors will mention the matter to their people and that funds shall come in rapidly now. We should certainly put a proper marker to the memory of Rev. Jas. O'Kelly."

Mrs. Walker and Miss Edith, in transmitting their check, write: "It gives us great pleasure to send this small amount toward erecting a proper monument to the great and noble founder of our beloved Church."

The Southern Convention at Norfolk, in May, decided to erect monuments at two historic spots, long neglected by us Christians. One is to be at the site of Old Lebanon Church, Surry County, Va., where all party and sectarian names were discarded by our Church ancestors and the name Christian only was adopted.

The other is the late resting-place of Rev. Jas. O'Kelly, near O'Kelly's Chapel, Durham County, N. C. We should have $2,000 with which to erect suitable markers. What will you give?

COMMITTEE ON MONUMENT.

(Judge J. F. West, chairman, Waverly, Va.; Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, secretary, Durham, N. C.; W. E. McClenny, Suffolk, Va.; J. O. Atkinson, treasurer, Elon College, N. C.)

Send funds to the treasurer, and same will be acknowledged in THE SUN. One liberal friend says if $900.00 is contributed to the Old Lebanon Monument, he will add a gift of $100,00, so as to mark this spot, now one of the most conspicuous on a Virginia State highway, in a manner that will reflect credit and honor upon those who wear the name Christian. That is fine! The way is now open for contributors. The Christians must do this good thing right, now that we have made a beginning.

CALHOUN—STALEY.

At 1 P. M. August 19, 1924, at the residence of Hon. Ben T. Holden, Louisburg, N. C., Dr. J. M. Calhoun and Miss Annie Staley, sister of Mrs. Holden, were united in marriage by the bride's father, Rev. W. W. Staley. All of the marriage party were of Suffolk, Va.

The bride and groom entered, while Mrs. O. Y. Yarboro rendered Wagner's "March" from Lohengrin, and she played softly during the ceremony "Traumerei."

John Staley Holden, nephew of the bride, acted as ring-bearer. The bride wore peach Georgette, beaded in silver, with black velvet hat, and slippers and gloves to harmonize.

Those present were Mrs. Bessie Staley Cheatham and son, William Staley Cheatham, of Washington, D. C., and G. C. Moore, of Sacramento, Calif.; Miss Rebekah Mitchell, of Wilmington, N. C.; Mrs. Annie Mitchell, Miss Nellie Mitchell, and Lewis Mitchell, of Franklinton, N. C. Mrs. S. C. Holden and Mrs. C. K. Cooke, of Louisburg.

After the marriage, the bride and groom left for a motor trip through the mountains of North Carolina and Viginia, after which they will reside in Suffolk, where Dr. Calhoun will continue to practice his profession as optometrist.

GOD'S FOUR SORE JUDGMENTS IN THE LAST TEN YEARS.

[This is a marvelous presentation of facts, appearing in the Alliance Weekly, with which most readers are more or less familiar, and they are well worth the careful and prayerful study of any person. It looks as if some prophecy is being fulfilled in our day.]

Our Saviour said: "Nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom, and great earthquakes shall be in divers places, and famines and pestilences (Luke 21:10-11); "all these are the beginning of travail" (Matt. 24:8)—the first birth-pangs, preliminary travail-shudders. According to the man of the world, famine is overcome by transport, pestilence by disinfection, and war by diplomacy—he is silent on how to counteract earthquake—and it is impossible for God to express His estimate of a nation's enormities, or of a world's sin; whereas the truth is that behind all physical laws are moral laws—moral laws which are far more inexorable and eternal than the laws which bind the planets in their orbits, or the stars to their courses; and while sometimes God suffers the physical laws to give way to the moral, under no circumstances does He ever subordinate the moral to the physical. So for the whole world, our Lord reveals that a moment is coming when, by sickness, by starvation, by war, all on a huge scale, God will hold forth the red lamp, as indicating a danger point past which intercession will be useless. Is that moment arriving? "Though these three men, Noah, Daniel, and Job, were in it, they should deliver but their own souls by their righteousness, saith the Lord God" (Ezek. 14:14). It is doubtful if there has yet dawned on the Church of Christ any conception of what God has been doing in a decade unparalleled in the history of mankind.

Famine.

God's fourfold judgment opens with famine. "Son of man, when a land sinneth against me by trespassing grievously" (A. V.)—exceptional sin calling for exceptional judgment—"and I stretch out mine hand upon it and break the staff of the bread thereof, and send famine upon it, and cut off from it man and beast" (Ezek. 14:13). The two greatest famines of history have occurred within the last two years, and within six months of each other. Here is a summary from the Times (Dec. 15, 1920) of the Chicago famine: "The population now totally destitute in Chihli is 6,000,000; in Shantung, 2,500,000; in Honan, 3,500,000; in Shensi, 1,000,000; in Shansi, 500,000—a total of 15,500,000." How many of these actually perished will never be known. The Russian famine, following half a year later, is said to be the greatest the world has ever seen. In January, 1919, a thousand people were dying of starvation daily in Petrograd alone (Times, Jan. 15, 1922). The Times said: "Men and women die of hunger by hundreds every day in its streets" (Jan. 10, 1919). Dr. Nansen reports (July, 1922) that two million Russians are now dead of starvation; that further millions have died of starvation plus disease; and that this year's harvest is twenty million tons below the pre-war average. "Europe," he says, "is on the edge of an abyss." The Soviet authorities themselves acknowledge (Times, June 8, 1922) that "tens of millions' 'are in jeopardy of life. "I passed whole families," says the correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, "dead on their door-steps." "The fact of a famine on an unprecedented scale," says the Times (Aug. 5, 1921), "is now demonstrated beyond any possibility of doubt."

Earthquakes.

In the place of noisesome beasts—for during the Great Tribulation this judgment will take the form of wild beasts from the infernal regions (Rev. 9), as well as the wild beasts of the earth (Rev. 6:8)—our Saviour puts earthquakes as the second great judgment act of God: "There shall be famines and earthquakes in divers places" (Matt. 24:7); "and there shall be great earthquakes" (Luke 21:11). In December, 1920, an earthquake occurred in China, which literally shook the globe, greater than any known in China since one in the eighteenth century, and another twelve centuries ago (Times, June 4, 1921). The principal shock fell on an area of 15,000 square miles, and vast landslides engulfed numbers that will never be known, wiping out whole villages and towns under falling hills. The official Chinese report, issued six months after, recorded (though probably with gross exaggeration) a million deaths; and even foreign computations, which put the number as at least two hundred thousand, rank this earthquake as the most destructive in the history of the world. The following is from the journal of a C. I. M. missionary:

"God's hand may be clearly seen behind the earthquake, for the trembling of the earth just came in time to smash up a Mohammedan rebellion. It is said that 10,000 of the Mohammedan troops were swallowed up in one of the Kansu valleys, and that Ma Shen Ren was buried beneath the ruins of the mosque with 300 of his leading men. An official report gives the number of the loss of life around the Ching Ting Chow district at 300,000; working on this proportion, it would mean that somewhere between 500,000 and 1,000,000 lost their lives. The opportunities for preaching the gospel have increased, and we have been told that there is an openness to hear and receive the Word of Truth such as there never was before. Surely God is doing a quick work in these days, when His judgments are being poured forth."

An aged worker in Kingston, Jamaica, once said to me: "I have worked in the slums of London, Glasgow, and other great cities, but I have never known such sin as there is in Kingston; I do not know how God withholds His judgments." Within two years of her utterance, Kingston was rocked to ruin in thirty seconds.

War.

God's third judgment is war. "If I bring a sword upon that land and say, 'Sword, go through the land,' so that I cut off from it man and beast"; or, as the Saviour puts it: "Kingdam shall rise against kingdom." Ten years ago there were forty-one royal dynasties in the world. In seven short years, twenty-four thrones—including the three greatest land empires in the world—had collapsed and vanished. Today the sword has left only seventeen. At the Battle of Waterloo thirty-seven tons of metal were used; on one day alone in the World War, and by the British only, eighteen thousand tons were hurled; in the whole South African War, 2,800 tons were used; by the British alone, in the World War, three and a half million tons (Times, Sept. 10, 1919). The figures, out of all proportion to the mere growth of population, are due to the fact that nations, not armies, now engage, and to the portentous growth in the science of destruction. And the sword has indeed drunk its fill. The casualties in the World War, for England alone, were 3,266,000; and the total death roll of Europe ran into ten millions, at a cost of £50,000,000,000; and civilization so reeled and rocked as to threaten complete collapse.

A World Upheaval.

"We are living," says the Times (June 30, 1919), "in one of the immense upheavals of the world. There has been no change comparable to it among the States of Europe since the downfall of the Roman Empire, not even the changes wrought by the rise of the Arabs and of the Turks. It has newleavened the minds of the masses of mankind as the Reformation did, or the French Revolution. All around us are fresh thoughts and fresh visions making potent appeal to the strongest passions of the heart. We are conscious that we stand amidst a universe of forces unknown, imponderable, pregnant with measureless good or evil, happiness or woe. We hear the great loom of time roaring. We see it weave the 'living garment of God.' The pattern we do not see, or see from the wrong side. All the old military monarchies are gone. The crowns of the Hapsburgs, of the Hohenzollerns, and of the Romanoffs are in the dust. The minor monarchies and duchies of Germany have disappeared. The Sublime Porte is a suppliant with all the lesser satellites of Germany. The whole system of Central and Eastern Europe has perished by the sword." An internecine hemorrhage without parallel in the history of the world has included a revolution (the Russian) more gigantic and more malignant than mankind has ever known.

Pestilence.

The last of God's four judgments is pestilence, least observed and most mysterious of all, without warning and in the order of Scripture—that is, immediately after the World War—fell one of the greatest epdemics of history. "If I send a pestilence into that land, and pour out my fury upon it in blood"—a human hemorrhage—"to cut off from it man and beast." In 1918, the medical correspondent of the Times (Dec. 18, 1918) said: "Six million persons have perished of influenza and pneumonia during the last twelve weeks. Business has been interfered with in every country of the world, and enormous losses in trade have been suffered. This plague is five times more deadly than war; never since the black death, has such a plague swept over the face of the world." It broke out mysteriously in ships two thousand miles from land, and no country in the world succeeded in eluding its grip. In South Africa it took a toll of human life greater than three wars had done (Times, Feb. 21, 1919); and in India, 4,933,133 deaths occurred within a few months, whole villages were wiped out (Times, April 13, 1919), the ultimate mortality reached six millions (Times, March 11, 1919); and the total world mortality was not less than twelve millions. "It is an epidemic," said the sanitary commissioner for India, Major Norman White, "in many respects witohut parallel in the history of disease" (Times, April 12, 1919). .It is extraordinarily significant that, while earlier influenza epidemics fell mainly on the aged and youthful, this devastated all of military age from eighteen to forty-five; so that (as was just) civilian hemorrhage exceeded the hemorrhage in the trenches. Most solemn for the Church of Christ is the fact that, in Samoa, the Church—in connection with the L. M. S.—was simply devastated by the plague, and its leaders swept away: of a native advisory council of twenty, only eight survived; and the entire finance committee, except one, died. Of possible consequences of the Russian famine still before us, we are told: "There will be terrible epidemics again. The congress of bacteriologists prophesies the extreme of horror" (Times, June 6, 1922).

So is the Most High thundering at the conscience of mankind. It is a mystery that the Church is not prostrate on its face before God, so acute is the crisis, and so awful and imminent the danger; if these are but preliminary travail-shudders—and they can be no more—what will be the birth-agonies? It accentuates the tragedy (though it but confirms the prophetic page) that a section of the Church of Christ, of unknown magnitude, while these thunders are actually in its ear, begins to tread the world's infidel way. Dr. Peake's Commentary says: "We have outgrown the view that storm, famine, pestilence, plague, and droughts are used for the punishment of nations; as at the flood, in the plagues of Egypt, in the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah, in the destruction of Dathan and Abiram."

Can it Be True?

The very consciousness of God is dying out of the faces of men. Not so have we learned Christ: the earthquake tremors thrill and throb in the heart of him who is waiting for the King. In the admirable words of Dr. Duncan Main: "We do not know anything which so certainly sanctifies life to its highest service as this great truth, steadfastly believed and maintained by God's servants while they are journeying, not toward darkness, but the sun-rising. When through the mystics, moral mists, and half lights of earth the promise of the glorious Appearing is discerned, it determines not only the direction of the journey, but also its character. It settles the question of our affinities. It corrects and brightens our outlook on the things seen. It forbids pessimism and long-faced Christianity. It smiles at fear, and inspires an unquestioning and dauntless courage, and puts stiffening into the backbone. It reveals every difficulty to be but an opportunity of new discovery. It chases all gloom and care from the heart, and all weariness from the feet. It keeps the first love alive, and fans the smoking flax into a flame. It puts a new song into willing lips, and makes all life tuneful and joyful. It transforms every cruse of mourning into a horn of anointing oil. It makes even the lame man leap as an hart, and replaces the tiredness of exhausted nature with buoyant energy."

"Even so come, Lord Jesus."

"AND THE ROUGH WAYS SHALL BE MADE SMOOTH."

(Luke 3:5.)

"The road is too rough," I said;
"It is uphill all the way.
No flowers, but thorns instead;
And the skies overhead are gray."
But one took my hand at the entrance dim,
And sweet is the road that I walk with Him.

"The cross is too great," I cried—
"More than the back can bear;
So rough and heavy and wide,
And nobody by to care."
But one stooped softly and touched my hand—
"I know. I care. And I understand."

Then why do we fret and sigh—
Cross-bearers all we go;
But the road ends by-and-by
In the dearest place we know,
And every step in the journey we
May take in the Lord's own company.

The Tokyo telephone bureau has issued detailed statistics that are very interesting. When a woman is talking to a woman, it is claimed, 26.4 per cent of the talk is idle and unnecessary; when a woman calls a man, the waste is 13.8 per cent; when a man calls a woman, it is only 9.7 per cent; when two men talk, 10.6 per cent.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE HAZARD OF THE MINISTRY.

Much has been written about the dearth of the ministry, and one reason or another has been assigned for it, most of them being reflections on the spirituality of the times and the degeneracy of the age.

I think I know as many ministers of the Christian Church as any man among us. I have some acquaintance with the ministers of other denominations. I associate constantly with the choicest young people of our day, the material out of which ministers are made. From these associations, over a period of twenty years now, I am going to assign a new reason for the dearth in ministers, and it is a reason the remedy for which is entirely within our hands—

It is the Hazard of the Ministry.

I do not mean that there is in the ministry the hazard to physical life there is to the policeman or the fireman. Cowards take counsel of such hazard, but brave men face it with smiling faces. No! the preachers that I know are not cowards.

The hazard I refer to is twofold—the hazard of the heresy hunter, and the hazard of involuntary retirement in the prime of life. These are real hazards, and they deter men from entering the ministry.

Not so long since, the son of one of our ministers and I engaged in serious conversation relative to his lifework. He loved and honored his father, this splendid young fellow did, and I knew the anxiety of his father that his son enter the ministry. So at the time which appeared to me proper, after discussing various callings, I ventured to suggest his father's profession. "You know I love father," said this fine, clean young fellow; "I love him too good to be a minister."

We sat in silence a brief space. I knew he would tell me why. And he did. In substance, he said his father was not free to think, or at least to express his thoughts. Some reactionary preacher or layman would say he was a radical or some progressive might style him a back number. Neither might be correct, but all the same it would impair his usefulness. Evidently the father had confided in his son. I happened to know that the good man was so free from being a factionist that he had in my presence at different times been declared to be a sanctificationist and a modernist. Both sides claimed him, and his son said he was afraid to think.

This is a real hazard. In other professions the man who can discover new thoughts is heralded as a great man and servant of the race, but in the ministry any effort to think God's thoughts after Him and to learn some of the things the disciples, because of their spiritual youth, were unable to bear, and which the Master said He would later tell His followers—such effort is branded as heresy, and the proclaimer of such holy privilege assigned to a place of rest from his labors, even often in the prime of his life.

This brings me to the second hazard of the ministry—the hazard of being shelved or involuntarily retired early in life.

You may think this would encourage young men to enter the ministry, so they can shortly replace the older men; but it has just the opposite effect. Here again I had a recent talk with a young man popular in his ministry and besought to change to other fields constantly. "This must be a source of great satisfaction to you," I ventured to suggest. The young man hung his head and said, with quivering voice: "The opposite is true. When I see such men as ——— (and here he named three of our splendid men now in the prime of life and virtually out of employment) not desired by our Churches because they are beyond fifty, it makes me sad. One of these days, I, too, shall be in their class, and what will happen to the family? These men are in their prime. Their experience in service and in spiritual things qualifies them to serve far more effectually than I can, but the Churches won't believe it, and are after young men—young men! This attitude is hurting the ministry."

This young man is right. I believe in young men, and I believe in the older men. I believe in old men—the very oldest. One very old man especially I would not exchange for a thousand young ones when it comes to giving me spiritual nurture and comfort. I sit at his feet, and when he prays, the windows of heaven open and the dark way becomes clear. God bless this old patriarch! God bless him and preserve him!

I call our Churches to solemn accounting. I deliberately charge that by going after young men to the sheer neglect of the older men of rich and wide experience, they are not only eliminating those men themselves from the ministry, but are creating a situation that must eventually lead to a permanent dearth in the ministry. The creation of such a hazard is uncalled for, and I fear oftentimes unable to be owned by Jesus.

Young men will understand my position, and they will be the last to resent it. There are certain places where young men can serve best, where the field is young and the buoyant vigor of youth is the spiritual tonic most to be desired in the responsible leadership of the kingdom. But in the older established Churches and in communities already thoroughly evangelized, except for the children as they grow up, there is no special need to change for young ministers and neglect the men who have served well in hard places, to the personal suffering of these men and to the permanent impoverishment of the ministry.

What can you and your Church do to decrease this hazard, this needless and unfair hazard, this injurious hazard from the kingdom's standpoint, which the ministers in a democratically governed Church must endure in order to serve their Lord? What will you do?

I rise to inquire if our people think God is pleased that His chosen servants should endure this hazard?

THE WORD OF GOD ENDURETH FOREVER.

The following, by Rev. C. W. Hardon, appeared in the Christian Advocate:

Infidels, skeptics, and unconverted critics have been blasting at the Bible, the eternal rock of truth, for many centuries; but their explosives of falsehood and unbelief have been like pop-guns against the everlasting hills, and the regal truth of our God stands strong and mighty. The teachings of skeptics may sow the seeds of revolution, retard the progress of civilization, break down the organized Church, and burn the printed page; but the truths of the old Book will live forever, and by its burning words the critic and the skeptic will receive judgment before the great white throne. Vile men and devils cannot destroy the Word of God. More than a century ago, Voltaire in his imagination demolished the blessed old Book and finished the job by saying: "In less than a hundred years Christianity will have been swept from existence and will have passed into history." The century is gone, and Voltaire has passed into history, while Christianity lives and sows the world down with the everlasting word of God. The old infidel's printing press was set to making Bibles, and the house in which he lived and wrote is a Bible store-room. Thus God and His printed Word mocks the fool who once blatantly said in his heart: "There is no God." Tom Paine destroyed the Bible in fine order, but for more than a hundred years he has slept in a drunkard's grave, and the world forgets his name. Since Paine's day, the Holy Scriptures have increased in circulation from six million copies in thirty languages to two hundred million copies in two hundred and fifty languages today. In the meantime, thousands of men, choosing to follow the teachings of the Bible rather than the "Age of Reason," have been saved from drunkards' graves, and not a soul in earth or in heaven can claim redemption from sin and peace for a troubled heart by following the teachings of a dead infidel.

A few years ago, when a group of scholars was completing its revision of the New Testament, putting it into more modern language, men offered five hundred dollars for single copies of the new version in advance of its publication, and the morning of publication a street in New York was blocked with express wagons waiting for loads of the precious Book. This new version of the four gospels, acts, and Romans, 118,000 words, was telegraphed from New York to Chicago for the sake of getting it there just twenty-four hours earlier. The world would not pay 10 cents to cable all the books on infidelity from New York to London. When Lepaux, a member of the French Directory, complained to Talleyrand that his new religion, "Theophilanthoopy," made little headway among the people, the shrewd old statesman replied: "I'm not surprised at the difficulty you find in your effort. It is no easy matter to introduce a new religion. But there is one thing I would suggest that you do, and then you may succeed." "What is it? What is it?" eagerly asked Lepaux. "Go and work miracles, heal all manner of diseases, cast out devils, raise the dead, be crucified, be buried, and then rise again on the third day, and maybe you will succeed." The skeptical old philosopher went again silent. The Book of our holy religion stands today with its revelation of a supernatural, miracle-working, personal Christ, and a pity it is that the modern notoriety-seekers and rehashers of ancient skepticisms who occupy prominent places haven't intelligence enough to know that none other but a divine Christ can save a world from sin. If the modern critic will follow St. Paul in genuine conversion, he will have no trouble in understanding his interpretation of the miracle-working, sin-forgiving Christ. But so long as we have the doubting critic in the world, just so long we have living witnesses to the inspiration of the Bible, for their presence in every age is fulfillment of the divine prophecies. So long as Babylon is in heaps, so long as Nineveh lies empty and Tyre is fallen into the sea and Israel is scattered to the four corners of the earth and Jerusalem is trodden by Gentiles, and other empires and kingdoms are broken down, so long do we know that God's word is immutable and eternal.

In the long ago, Isaiah, speaking to the people of his day and generation, said: "The grass withereth, the flower fadeth, but the word of God shall stand forever." The apostle Peter, writing, said: "The word of the Lord endureth forever. And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you." "For the prophecy came not in the old time by will of man, but holy men of God spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." St. Paul said: "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God." Jesus said: "Blessed are they that hear the word of God and keep it. . . . My mother and my brethren are these which hear the word of God and do it." And an innumerable multitude which no man can number have found pardon, peace, and eternal joy by reading our blessed Holy Bible. Truth is immortal, and God is immortal and eternal; therefore, His Holy Book endureth forever.

"O Word of God incarnate,
O Wisdom from on high,
O Truth unchanged, unchanging,
O Light of our dark sky,
We praise Thee for the radiance
That from the hallowed page,
A lantern to our footsteps,
Shines on from age to age!

"The Church from Thee, her Master,
Received the gift divine,
And still that light she lifteth
O'er all the earth to shine.
It is the golden casket
Where gems of truth are stored;
It is the heaven-drawn picture
Of Thee, the living Word."

BOOTLEGGERS OF THE PAST.

The bootlegger is just a smuggler under a new name. As Augustus framed the first-known excise law, it can be taken for granted that the first bootlegger was a Roman fisherman, and under cover of darkness there was plenty of booze-running along the Tiber. The smuggler has been operating ever since, and today revenue cutters patrol every water line in Europe. But by way of specific illustration, consider what happened when tea and coffee were first introduced into Europe. The beer and liquor interests objected strongly to the introduction of these new beverages, and the governments of the day were solidly behind them. Charles I of England issued a proclamation against the coffee-houses which had sprung up, terming them seminaries of sedition. Later, three thousand of them were summarily closed up in London. In Germany, Frederick the Great thundered his disapproval of coffee in the form of manifestos. He himself had been raised on beer, he averred, his ancestors had been raised on beer, his glorious victories had been won on beer, and he was disgusted to note how many of his subjects had taken to drinking coffee.

As his loyal subjects continued to drink coffee in ever-increasing numbers, Frederick endeavored to turn the traffic into a royal monopoly. Royal coffee-roasting establishments were started, and the common people were forbidden to do any roasting of their own. The hausfraus of Prussia promptly proceeded to break the law by roasting coffee in their kitchens. In other words, coffee stills became the order of the day, and Frederick was compelled to organize a new force of revenue men who went about the streets of Berlin with their noses in the air hunting for proof of illicit coffee. They became known, naturally, as coffee sniffers, and were rewarded by a share of the fines imposed as a result of their sleuthing.

Heavy taxes were clapped on tea when it first invaded Britain, and tea bootlegging at once became a profitable occupation. The smugglers devised many methods of tea-running. Most of them wore a complicated and ingenious costume which enabled them to smuggle in as much as thirty pounds of tea concealed on their persons.

We have, unfortunately, given the world a grossly exaggerated idea of the extent to which we break the Volstead law. If statistics were available, it would be found that only a small percentage of the men of America are dealing with bootleggers and that the home still is becoming extinct. Disregard of the law may be glaring and wide open, but the number of people who break the law is, nevertheless, comparatively small. It is getting smaller all the time. We are adjusting ourselves to the new condition more rapidly than would be possible in foreign countries with their centuries of smuggling back of them.—Saturday Evening Post.

PASSING OF THE I. S. S. ASSOCIATION.

Little, now, is really left of the old International Sunday School Association, which did such a great work for North America's Sunday Schools during the past two generations. In 1922 it was merged, together with the Sunday School Council of Evangelical Denominations, into the International Sunday School Council of Religious Education. The convention which took this action, at Kansas City, recommended by an overwhelming vote the use of the word "Christian" instead of "religious" in the name of the new merger. A few weeks ago the executive committee of the new organization, in annual meeting in Chicago, not only rejected the recommendation and the word "Christian," but decided also to drop the term "Sunday School." This motion was carried by a large majority, and immediately made unanimous

All that is now left of the historic, evangelical body in which once worked such men as Dwight L. Moody, William Reynolds, B. F. Jacobs, Bishop Vincent, Henry Clay Trumbull, H. J. Heinz, E. K. Warren, George W. Bailey, Marion Lawrence, and a host of other such Christian leaders, is now known as the "International Council of Religious Education."

TRIBUTE TO DR. W. S. LONG.

Dr. W. S. Long is no more with us. His work on earth is done. His militant life is ended. We will see and hear him no more as a preacher of the gospel, as a member of the Conference, Convention, and teacher. His great worth to the Christian Church cannot be truly estimated. As far back as I can remember him in Conference, he was discussing the need of a college for the Christian Church, and I am glad he lived to see it accomplished, and also to see the Greater Elon.

He was the founder and builder and first president of Elon College, and sacrificed much for its establishment. I was under him in school for four years at Graham. He gave me my first instruction in theology. He and his brother, Dr. D. A. Long, became joint principals of the Graham Normal College. While there, I took English, mathematics, Latin, and chemistry under the deceased Dr. W. S. Long. I took rhetoric, history and geography under Dr. D. A. Long, and later took Latin under Dr. W. W. Staley, and Greek and French under Judge B. F. Long. But what I want to say, and it is due that I should say it, W. S. Long was more to me for what education I received than any other man, and I thank God for what he was to me. His worth to me will be cherished as long as my memory shall serve me. While I was in school, he made me feel at home; when in his house, his wife, Lizzie, was as a mother to me. Here is sympathy for his wife, of Chapel Hill; his brothers, Dr. D. A. Long, of Franklinton, N. C., and Judge B. F. Long, of Statesville, N. C.; his four surviving children—J. E. and Dr. W. S. Long, Jr., of Graham, N. C.; Mrs. S. A. Holeman, of High Point, N. C., and Mrs. A. F. Franklin, of Richmond, Va. May God bless these bereaved ones.

WEBSTER, MD.

On Sunday morning, August 10th, following the regular morning service, a large congregation marched from the tent on the Church grounds, where services are being held while the new Church is being erected, to the new parsonage, which has just been completed.

The pastor, Rev. Milton W. Sutcliffe, used a very beautiful service of dedication of the parsonage. As pastor and congregation went from living-room, study, dining-room, hall and bedrooms, portions of Scripture were read, and suitable prayers made in each part of the house. The service was very beautiful, and will long be remembered.

The parsonage is of semi-bungalow type, 34x26 feet, and stands on a very prominent piece of ground, about 75 feet from the new Church. It was designed by the pastor and is complete in every detail. Our people here feel that nothing is too good for our pastor or any minister of our Church. They give the best—why not give them the best in return?

More Protestants Coming.

Mr. Raymond E. Cole, secretary of the bureau of reference for migrating peoples, shows that more Protestants came to this country last year than in any other year since the establishment of the bureau. The bureau operates under the home missions council and the woman's council. Mr. Cole believes that, under the new immigration law, the field for such work as his bureau does will be greatly enlarged.

If you read your Bible carefully, you will see the scarlet thread running right through every page. The blood commences to flow in Genesis, and runs on to Revelation. That is what God's Book is written for. Take out the scarlet thread, and it would not be worth carrying home.—D. L. Moody.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The last few years have introduced a custom into the city Churches in this part of the world which seems to indicate a better feeling among the denominations and a more hopeful sign for Christian progress. In July or August, when ministers are granted vacation, union services are held on Sunday nights, rotating and the various pastors taking part. This gives the pastor a little respite and an opportunity to hear other preachers. In Suffolk, for instance, these meetings were held at night during July and the first Sunday night in August, five pastors entering into these union services.

During this period the choirs have charge of the music at their own Church when the services are held there. This gives the choirs a little rest in the heated term and an opportunity to hear other choirs. The average Church member does not have an adequate idea of the work of the choir. One night in each week to practice for several hours, attendance upon both services every Sunday, and extra calls for funeral services make up a round of time and service that would very much improve attendance and worship, if all Church members would put in as much time and as much effort to maintain worship. Choirs are not appreciated by congregations as they should be. They do not have the prayerful sympathy and support which they deserve and which the congregation could easily give.

These union services not only manifest a brotherly and co-operative spirit on the part of ministers of different denominations, but furnish opportunity for congregations to mingle with one another and to hear choirs of other Churches, but it cultivates a friendly and neighborly fellowship that worship all the time in separate buildings could never do.

They may not be able to unite their creeds, but they can unite their hearts in praise; and that leads to co-operation. The clannish spirit does not belong to the Churches of Christ. Union services create a new atmosphere—a "unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace." Co-operation is the genius of this age. It is seen in commerce, education, social life, government, and more and more in religion. Phariseeism is doomed. Co-operation is coming. It is already at work on the foreign field, and it is coming at home. When it comes, no denomination will suffer loss, but all will gain; for Jesus prayed "that they all may be one." That prayer must be answered, and the Church can delay or hasten the answer. These union services may seem small, but they will help God to answer the Saviour's prayer.

It is a wonderful thing to help God; but that is what all true Christians and true Churches do when they unite to save lost souls and to redeem the world. There is nothing so pleasing to Satan as a divided Church, for he knows that "a house divided against itself cannot stand." These union services break down barriers, decrease prejudices, cultivate fellowship, exchange ideas, and put the gospel on a common basis in the thought and heart of congregations. It exalts Jesus Christ and strengthens faith. A better day dawns for Christianity and Christian civilization. Pride is dying. Love is growing. The Church will "arise and shine, her light having come, and the glory of the Lord having arisen upon her."

ELON LETTER.

Chautauqua is past! Opening days for 1924-'25 are directly ahead. The mop and broom of the cleaner are putting the dormitories in shape for the incoming troop of young people who are to be the Elon student body for the ensuing year.

The dormitories have been considerably improved during the summer. The Alumni Building and east dormitory have been thoroughly overhauled inside, plastered where needed, calcimined and varnished. The west dormitory has been floored anew on the second and third floors, and concrete steps have been placed at four of its entrances, which connect with the concrete walks that are being constructed on the campus.

The new buildings are in various stages of completion. The Alamance Administration Building, the Whitley Auditorium, and the Carlton Library will presumably be completed and ready for use. The Duke Science Building will be ready for use, we expect, by October 1st. The Mooney Christian Education Building will be ready not earlier than November 1st. The brick wall around the campus will be practically half completed when college opens. The concrete sidewalks will be completed on the west side, where they are in constant use. The east side will be completed as soon as the wall is completed.

The session 1924-'25 will, therefore, see the building program completed. The attendance ought to increase annually for the next few years, in view of the great advance in material and physical equipment. No small college will have a more modern plant than Elon, and this, when it is generally known, will be the most effective advertising we can secure.

The prospect for the freshman class is the best, so far, in the history of the college, and considering the financial situation, the former students are planning to return in large numbers. It is significant that practically a hundred of last year's student body will be teaching next year.

A thing I have often said, I will say again: Elon is the college of our Church, and our people should patronize it. The obligation is on our people to patronize their own college or to satisfy their Christian conscience with good and sufficient reasons for their failure to do so. Equipped as Elon is in her new plant, there is no real reason for any young man or young woman of our Church seeking a higher education elsewhere. I say this advisedly, because our graduates have always acquitted themselves most creditably in their lifework and in the graduate schools of the great universities, the real testing-places of a college's achievements and worth-whileness.

BETHLEHEM LETTER.

We are now permanently located in the college building, and the building is finally completed.

We moved from Graham, N. C., four weeks ago. Since arriving here, we have been so busy we have gotten behind with our letters to The Sun, but hope to have them appear regularly each week from now on. Our time has been occupied in overseeing the completion of the building and soliciting for students; also preaching twice on Sunday and two or three times through the week.

We find here a very congenial lot of folks and appreciative of the smallest efforts we put forth. On Friday of the same week in which we arrived, the good people of Wadley arranged a reception for us, which was carried out with credit to all concerned. They had addresses of welcome from ministers, doctors, professors, the president of the Parent-Teachers' Association, and the Mayor of Wadley. They gave us a welcome that we shall not forget throughout the coming years.

The Bethlehem Chautauqua and School of Methods will begin Monday night. Bro. Hermon Eldredge will make the opening address. Three of the faculty of the Chautauqua have already arrived, and they have been out doing active service and advertising the school. We have been giving the Chautauqua and School of Methods much publicity throughout the Alabama and Georgia and Alabama Conferences, and shall be disappointed if we do not have a very good attendance. We are looking forward to a week of real helpfulness, as well as enjoyment, and we know that we will not be disappointed. The Chautauqua will also help to advertise the college, and prepare the way for the opening day, which will be September 1st.

Everything looks in the direction of success for Bethlehem College at this present writing. With a creditable increase over last year, we believe we will have all we can accommodate with our present facilities, but we never can be quite sure until one week after registration day. Applications for work in Bethlehem College and Academy are coming in every day.

We have one vacancy on the faculty in the academy which must be filled by the time school opens. If any person, who is a college graduate and can teach chemistry, plane and solid geometry, rural economics and modern social problems, and desires a place, it would be well for him to write the president at once.

THE MUSIC WORLD.

By Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D.

II. THE DEVELOPMENT OF MUSIC.

Music was originally connected with the dance, military evolutions, and religious rites. In all cases, it expressed emotions. The clapping of hands, the stamping of feet, and the shout of voices are natural expressions of happy feelings. Music had simple but genuine beginnings; and no other art has had such logical and gradual development. Instrumental music leads the way and runs back into the prehistoric past. Musical instruments range from the rudest horns and cymbals to the pianoforte. In this long range, there are 778 musical instruments. The largest bell ever hung in the world is in the Kremlin in Moscow, weighing over 247 tons, and no tones are finer than bell tones for outdoor use.

The origin of the bell is unknown, but its highest use is in Churches. It is a part of home, school, Church, city, and liberty. The development of musical instruments has been the development of genius, business, pleasure, and worship. There are three outstanding instruments: the organ, the violin, and the piano. The organ has been called the king of instruments. Organ-building appeared first in Egypt, the cradle of civilization; was carried into Greece, and then into Europe. Its use in Church was introduced by Julianus, a Spanish bishop, about 450 A. D., but not until the seventh century was the organ used in congregational singing by Pope Vitalian of Rome. The Greek Church has always refused to use the organ in Church. The organ, like all great things, has had a great history. In very primitive times, the organ was blown by the mouth, and holes in the pipes were opened and closed with the fingers. Later, holes were closed by slides. The bellows was added in one or several pairs, and compressed alternately, that the wind supply might remain uniform. The bellows superadded were compressed by human bodies. Men stood upon them and compressed them by alternate treading.

As late as 1890, the four blowers of the organ in the Nicolai Church, in Leipsic, ran upstairs and jumped upon the bellows below. The first large reed organ in Suffolk Church was pumped by the sexton when the organist played. Clesibins, an Egyptian, 200 years before Christ, applied hydraulic pressure to the organ, and the hydraulic organ was made as late as 826 A. D. The prejudice against the hydraulic organ introduced the pneumatic organ. The word "key" in music was given because it unlocked the sound within the pipe. The first keys were from three to five inches, and several feet long. Players were called "organ beaters," and struck the keys with their fists or elbows. The first keyboard to be credibly recorded was in the eleventh century, at Magdeburg. It had sixteen keys, forty inches long and three inches wide. The early organ required much leather for the bellows—in one case, seventy cowhides for twenty-one bellows.

The tones were loud, and could be heard throughout the town. The swell, by which expression is gained, was invented and used in England in 1712, but slowly adopted in Germany. There is no limit now to the expression of the organ. Among large organs, the one in Prince Albert Hall, London; Music Hall, Boston, and Music Hall, Cincinnati.

The violin ranks highest as a stringed instrument, and may be classed as an Italian product. It is the most wonderful instrument in the orchestra. It ranks next to the human voice in flexibility, and outranks the voice in range. Its music charms all people. It sympathizes with wealth, poverty, and affliction. The greatest virtuoso was Pagarini, in the last part of the eighteenth century. In former times it was considered unseemly for a woman's hand to touch the violin; but that day has passed, and the finest violinists are now women.

The greatest violin-maker was Antonius Shadivanus. He received $20.00 for his best; and they have been sold since from $10,000 up to $50,000. This shows that those who contribute to the world's best are often without reward in their lifetime. "It was so with Jesus." "He had not where to lay His head," but He has made the world rich in intelligence, character, wealth, and civilization.

The pianoforte was invented by Bartholomeo, of Florence (1651-1731), and two of his make are still in existence—one in Florence, and one in the Metropolitan Museum, in New York. Germany is famous for pianos. Steinway, in America, takes high rank. The first piano sent to England was made in Rome by Father Wood, an English monk. This instrument came across the Atlantic to America, and now America is the greatest piano-builder in the world.

To estimate the pleasure of home-life, the pleasure in entertainments, the education in schools, the inspiration and joy in Church worship, the vast business in the manufacture and sale of these instruments would be to work out a problem of vast proportions and enormous financial and cultural value.

Voice is the other department of music, and voice culture is delicate, extensive and of wide influence. Voice is from heaven, as heard at the baptism of Jesus, saying, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." Voice is really the sound uttered by living beings, with man next to God in the scale of culture. There is no school for animal voice-training. Nature completes her work in all below man. Animals without lungs have no voice, as the fish; yet noises issue from some of them, as the croaker, grunt, and drum. The usual word for the voice of animals is cry. This cry takes various forms and names, as bark, bay, bellow, bleat, cackle, call, caw, chatter, chirrup, cluck, coo, croak, crow, gabble, gobble, grunt, hiss, bark, hoot, howl, low, mew, neigh, peep, pipe, purr, quack, roar, scream, screech, snarl, snort, song, squall, squeak, squeal, trumpet, twitter, warble, wail, whine, whinny, whistle, whoop, yaup, yell, yelp, and many others. Other noises are spoken of, figuratively, as voices, as in Psalm 93:3. "The floods have lifted up their voice." "The twilight voice of distant bells." (Whittier.) But we are concerned with the development of the human voice, capable of measureless cultivation. The orator's power is in his voice more than his thought; but the singer's voice is supreme.

All the emotions of the human heart can be moved by the human voice. Anger and love are known more by voice than words. In fact, music would die if the race were mad. People cannot sing when mad. Men and women leave the choir when they get mad. The lullaby of the mother, the song of praise in worship must be in a sweet spirit. Music is the fountain from which gushes pure emotions in sweet currents to soothe wounded spirits and sad hearts. It is martial and patriotic. The "Marselaise" of France, the "God Save the King" of England, and the "Star-Spangled Banner" of America arouse the patriotic feelings of these nations and stir the martial spirit as words alone could not do. The development of the voice is one of the great elements in Christian civilization; and it has sweetened home, enriched worship, made the Sunday School, entertained society, and led the march of progress along the highway of hope. This would be a dull world without music; and education and business would suffer irreparable loss if the musical voice were dead.

The more recent development of music is not greater masterpieces of production, and more artistic development of the human voice, but a wider distribution of musical books, instruments, and an increased number of those who sing and those who play.

Music is no longer the luxury of the few, but the blesser of the many. Musical instruments, books, and education are now within the reach of all. The music of our day is not grander, but wider in its uses and benefits. All mechanical inventions for reproducing the human voice, such as Victrolas, phonographs, player-pianos, radios, show the development of music in a universal way. The radio would be useless without voice. Wind, earthquake, fire failed to reach Elijah in the cave and on the mountain at the cave's mouth. It was "the still small voice" that sent him back to anoint kings and a prophet to fill his place.

THE VALLEY CENTRAL CONFERENCE.

The Virginia Valley Central Conference was held with Antioch Christian Church August 13th to 15, 1924. This was the seventy-sixth annual meeting. It was called to order by Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D., president, and the opening religious service was conducted by Rev. J. F. Morgan. After the enrollment of delegates, the welcome address was made by Bro. W. C. Wampler, and response by Rev. W. M. Clem.

The program committee made its report, which was adopted. Then followed a general discussion on "Building Up Church Membership," by delegates. Special committees were appointed. Adjourned for dinner.

The afternoon devotional services were conducted by Bro. J. E. Foster. The annual address was delivered by the president, whose theme was the "Unimportant Things." On motion, a vote of thanks was tendered. An address, "The Outlook of THE CHRISTIAN SUN," by P. J. Kernodle, followed. Then followed a roundtable discussion, "How I Manage the Financial End of My Work," by the ministers. A number of spicy things were injected into the discussion.

The night session was given over to Dr. W. P. Minton, foreign mission secretary, who gave a stereopticon lecture on "Japan and Porto Rico."

Thursday morning's devotional services were conducted by Rev. D. B. Seal. Roll called, minutes approved, and new delegates enrolled. The officers of the Conference were re-elected. The committee on college was continued.

The report of committee on moral reform was presented by Rev. W. M. Clem, which, after discussion, was adopted. Dr. W. P. Minton, in his address, told of his experiences in Porto Rico. His address was entertaining.

The report of the committee on Christian Endeavor was made by Rev. J. F. Morgan, and the report on education by Rev. A. W. Andes.

Dr. W. T. Walters spoke on "The Elon Chautauqua," reporting one hundred and seventy-eight registrations, thirty of whom were ministers.

During the noon hour, a general woman's conference was held. The Woman's Missionary Society was represented by Mrs. J. W. Patton, of Elon College, N. C.

The afternoon devotional services were conducted by Rev. J. W. Henderson. The report on foreign missions was read, after which followed an address by Dr. W. P. Minton.

The Conference Missionary Association met, Rev. J. F. Morgan presiding; annual dues collected, and several new members added to the roll.

The night session was given over to the Woman's Home Mission Board. The reports submitted show the work in a prosperous condition.

Friday morning's devotional services were conducted by Rev. A. R. Flowers. Roll called and minutes approved. The report on Sunday Schools was read by R. A. Larrick, which was adopted.

The Christian Orphanage was represented by Mrs. W. T. Walters; besides fruit and vegetables to be furnished, $35.38 were collected in cash.

The Conference treasurer, Bro. Samuel Earman, submitted his report, which was referred to the committee on finance.

Dr. W. P. Minton spoke on "Missions"; an offering was taken, which amounted to $14.11, to assist in defraying his expenses.

The afternoon was given over to the report on home missions and the report on apportionments. A resolution to approve the action of the Southern Christian Convention to increase the apportionments $10,000 was adopted. Rev. J. F. Morgan led the song service of the Conference, in which all seemed to enter heartily. Good fellowship prevailed.

Rev. W. P. Crumpler is pastor of this Church, and was busy looking after the welfare of delegates and visitors.

Our home was with Bro. W. C. Wampler. The members and friends of Antioch maintained their reputation for hospitality.

MEDITATIONS FROM A PARSON'S DIARY.

"I never could understand the attitude of some laymen who have never for a moment felt that God called them into the ministry, and yet who freely dictate to the man called of God as to what he should preach and what his program should be."

MISSIONS

Rev. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

FOUR GREAT SUMMER SCHOOLS AND FOUR INTERESTING CONFERENCES.

By W. P. Fletcher.

It has been the happy experience of the writer during June and July to have had fellowship with some of the finest of our Christian Church people in summer schools and Conferences. In these various gatherings there have been representatives of every State in the North from Missouri to Massachusetts, and the Province of Ontario.

First, there was the combined Western Convention Pastors' School and Interdenominational Summer School, held at Palmer College, Albany, Mo. A number of favorable comments have already appeared in our papers concerning this gathering, but it is worthy of numbers of references. A fine group of forward-looking ministers and laymen gathered for the commencement exercises of Palmer and for the Convention and Pastors' School that followed. One was constantly impressed with the almost unlimited field for our work in these Western States, and the absolute necessity of Palmer College as the great central dynamic for success in carrying it on. The financial slump made it necessary to curtail some very helpful field work which for some years has been carried on, but there was everywhere hope for greater things in the future. The majority of our people stayed over and were earnest students in the school that followed. The attendance at this school was double that of the former year, and a number of students, before leaving, registered for next year.

Then, eastward for a couple of days at the Indiana State Conference. To one who has always looked upon Indiana as one of the strong States of our work, the attendance was disappointing, but the spirit and fellowship were of the finest. It would look as though some great State enterprise for our Church should be at once undertaken to give State solidarity for the Christians, and some plans were discussed to this end. A strong executive was elected, from which much is expected.

During the next two weeks, the Ontario and the New York Western Conferences were held. Dr. Minton was with us at the former and gave splendidly resultful service. The Conference closed with almost triumphant hope, for it had been one of our very best Conferences, and our new president, Rev. C. E. Fockler, had cheered us with the message that though we had lost some Churches, our present membership was as large as when we had more Churches, and our givings had quadrupled; and we had succeeded in our first year's work in the support of our missionaries to Porto Rico—Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Morton. The Western New York is a small Conference—much smaller than a few years ago—and is almost entirely rural. It was very hopeful to see the loyal way in which they are supporting the field secretaryship of Rev. E. C. Hall, and their determination to revive needy fields by securing the very best pastors therefor. The hope is that Castile, one of our Churches of note of other years, may be revivified.

Then, to Keswick for Kirton Hall Summer School and the first effort in this kind of work for the Ontario folk. A strike of postal clerks help up advertising for the school, but our joy was great when forty-nine earnest religious education workers registered for a real school of training. Miss Lucy Eldredge was with us as an instructor, and splendid as she was in teaching, she soon became a comrade and friend. This year's school and its results almost cry out for another next year. One unusual and very helpful feature of this school not found in the others was the plan of taking all the students and faculty out on the lawn for five minutes after each lecture, and demonstrate a group game, with every person taking part. This was not only a great help to the students in refreshing them for the next teaching period, but it gave to them much helpful material to use in guiding the play-life of the boys and girls back in the home schools.

We went directly from this school to the Defiance Pastors' School. This school is unique, in that its program is built alone for pastors. The program this year would have been very helpful for any one, but it is the pastors who are ever in mind. It was almost impossible to conceive what it would mean to have there upwards of one hundred men spending ten days together in fellowship of the richest with one another, in sitting at the feet of teachers of mature training, of learning first-hand of the work of every department of the Christian Church, and planning together for the Church and kingdom. The work is altogether too strenuous to be dreamed of as a holiday, and yet every Church will be enriched whose pastor spent these ten days in this retreat. This school could very easily be doubled by having the second week of the school for our religious education workers as well as for ministers, but as the college academic summer course is on at the same time, the rooming accommodation is taxed almost to the limit.

The next and last school for the writer for the summer was Craigville. This gathering has been thought of, and has been so called, as a camp-meeting, and it is a dream-place for such a gathering, but the program has, during recent years, been tending to make it also a real school. The management this year prepared and presented a program of instruction and inspiration for the young people for the first week, and a very encouraging attendance gave promise of continuing this work. The second week was for pastors and laymen, young and old, and a goodly number were present at every lecture, and were eager for the very best that they could give and get.

One could easily fill a page in just mentioning the splendid people of our Church who are giving leadership to, and are being helped by, the "schools of the prophets" being held under the auspices of the Christian Church; but space would not permit, and to mention a few would be unfair to the rest. But everywhere there are indications of the best day our people have ever known, with a leadership and a fellowship trained and ready as never before.

LETTER FROM DR. D. A. LONG.

The Sunday School at this place, under the splendid leadership of Deacon J. A. Kimball, is growing in usefulness all the time. I baptized six new members today; others will be baptized at 4 o'clock on Saturday before the second Sunday in September, 1924.

Special services today in memory of Dr. W. S. Long, once pastor of this Church. The senior deacon, Thos. J. Hoskins, who was born about the same year in which Dr. Long first saw the light, made a very touching and appropriate address. Resolutions of sympathy with Dr. Long's family were adopted by a rising vote. D. A. L.

A CHRISTIAN EDUCATION PILGRIMAGE.

By Hermion Eldredge.

VII. AROUND ABOUT LONDON.

Our hotel, the Grafton, was all that could be desired by a weary pilgrim; and the bed—oh! those beds of England! I shall never forget them; big, clean and luxurious, which made you always want to get into them and never want to get out of them. These people surely do move more slowly than we of America, but they seem to get so much out of life, too. Just think of a room in a fine hotel in the heart of London without running water and with the old-fashioned water bowl and pitcher and a soft-coal grate for heat! It is as much as your life is worth to try to get a bath (or a "tub," as they call it), and you proceed, through the porter, to the office, who informs the matron, who tells the chambermaid, who prepares your bath and calls you from your room; and as soon as the bath is over, you are to settle for it at the office, with tips to the porter and chambermaid and all parties concerned, and by this time the day is far spent and you determine that you will buy a "sponge kit" at the first store at the first opportunity.

Breakfast again, and exactly the same as breakfast every day previous—coffee, fish, ham and eggs, rolls, marmalade—a tremendous breakfast to a big man on a diet; and after the meal I repair to the lobby scales to find that I weigh sixteen stone seven, by English weight, and the only comfort in this is that most of my American friends who read this will not know how many American pounds that represents.

The title of my local guide book is "Dear Old London," and every street tells me of its age, and every shop reminds me that it is dear. It is even expensive to maintain the ornaments of royalty, for while our President of the United States is given a salary of $75,000 a year, the King is given about thirteen times that amount, and then an allowance greater than the President's salary for the members of his family. And the King is only an ornament, so far as I can see, as the Prime Minister, Mr. MacDonald, is the real ruler and corresponds more nearly to our President. But Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle and a dozen other great centers must be maintained as show-places to inspire the English people with the greatness of their empire and the glory of their King. There is no doubt as to their devotion to the King and his family, and no questioning the splendid quality of King and family they are. As kings and queens and princes go, it would seem that they have the finest of the fine brands in King George, Queen Mary and the Prince of Wales. They are greatly beloved, and they return their love to their people.

When Gladstone was asked how best to see London, he said: "From the top of a bus, sir; from the top of a bus," and so I first followed Gladstone's advice. Over three thousand "double-decker" buses go everywhere in London, and I rode over 200 miles of its streets from the upper deck during my first three days there and until I got located and got the atmosphere and felt at home on its streets and knew where I wanted to go and why.

And there is so much to see that one despairs of seeing much but the high spots, such as Westminster Abby, the Parliament Building, the King's Palace, the Tower of London, the art galleries, the British and London Museums, the outstanding Churches, parks and the historic centers. To one who is familiar with our New York City, and even with the inland cities of America, there is a surprise in the very appearance of London. While our great cities have buildings towering from thirty to fifty stories into the ar, yet this greatest city in the world has no buildings over eight stories in height, and very, very few of these. In fact, the great buildings in the heart of London would average more nearly five stories in height, with very few six-story buildings. One can imagine what a difference it makes in the look of the town to the place when twenty-story buildings (in New York) are so common that one hardly glances at them twice.

And then can you imagine gas lights on the streets of this greatest world city? Down on Picadilly one night I watched an old lamp-lighter carrying a ladder and climbing up and down it at each lamp-post to light the gas—and this right in the heart of London, and on its main streets.

Another thing is the funny little automobiles seen everywhere on the streets of London. When you see them first you seriously believe that they are only playthings for children, for they are in comparison to our automobiles as a Shetland pony is to a common horse. But we soon found that they were real and taken seriously by grown people, although they were so small that our Ford touring car or sedan looks big to us after seeing so many of these "midgets." I took the liberty of going to the street one day and standing beside one of these "cars" on which four grown people had been riding, and I found that by elevating my chin to an incline of about 45 degrees I could lay my chin on the top of the "automobile." I'll never despise an American "flivver" from this day forward.

A thousand years, and more of history centers around Westminster and the Tower of London, and the old Roman Wall, and a hundred other spots too numerous to even name. I attended morning service in Westminster Abbey, afternoon in old St. Paul's, and evening at Christ Church, where Dr. F. B. Meyer still holds the position of pastor-emeritus. To me, the morning at Westminster was an awe-inspiring "exhibition," with golden crosses and varicolored ecclesiastical gowns and stately choirs and uniform-gowned ushers, and all surrounded with the statues and tombs of the kings and the saints and the sinners of the England of yesterday.

The afternoon at St. Paul's gave the Sunday School delegates to the World's Convention the right of way to the front seats, and while there was less of show and fewer tombs, yet there was formality everywhere. The evening at Christ Church made me feel at home and in touch with God and the present day again, although the Church is a great one and the service more formal than ours. The present pastor, Dr. Poole, is the newly elected president of the World's Sunday School Convention and a scholar and a Christian to be reckoned with in London and in the world in which we live. He has been in Australia and was educated and preached for some years in America (Oakland, Calif.) before his call three years ago to succeed Rev. F. B. Meyer as pastor of this great London Church. It is a delight and an inspiration, and an uplift to sit at his feet. But I must not create the impression that all at Westminster and St. Paul's was form without life. The dean of Windsor preached (twenty minutes) at Westminster, and I could say a Methodist "amen" to his interpretation and exposition of his text: "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples . . . if you have love one for the other," and the sermon of the dean of St. Paul's (strangely) after all the pomp and parade and ceremony which preceeded it was on the shallowness of outward form without inward spirit. The sermon in Westminster and St. Paul's is an incident. The service is the great thing, and while the service lasts about an hour and a half, yet only about twenty minutes is given to the sermon.

On Wednesday evening, the World's Sunday School delegates in London were given a reception by the British and London Sunday School Unions, and after "high tea" and informal mix-up and conversation, addresses were given by Lord Pelham, of Manchester; Principal Garvie, of Aberdeen; Dean Athearn, of Boston; Dr. Pearce, of Chicago; President Mackintosh, of the English Sunday School Union, and others. It was a delightful fellowship, with physical, mental and spiritual refreshments.

But religion (one cannot always call it Christianity) shoots through the background of the secular life of England in ways which we Americans have not always understood. First, back of its government is that thing unknown to us of an alliance of Church and State, so that the halls of Parliament are filled with paintings and statues and records of religious history, and Westminster Abbey is filled with the story and the statues of kings and warriors and poets until you begin to wonder whether you are in a Church or in a national cemetery, and the dead hand of the past seems to be the characteristic atmosphere and pride of England. We need more of it, and they need less, in my humble opinion.

Over the great stone columns which support the facade of the Royal Exchange and in the heart of the "Wall Street" of London is inscribed these words, cut deep into the stone: "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof." When we come to outward form in religion, we must say that England has far more of it than we; but when it comes to vital Christians, a question arises which I am not inclined to argue here.

But, all in all, and in spite of its veneration of age and dirt, and mold and formalism, I love Britain more after a month with her people than I did the first day I landed on her shores or than I have in America. A short month can do little but permit contacts and dissipate some misconceptions or misunderstandings, yet even with this limited opportunity I have come to the place where I can feel some pride in my "mother country" and some patience and even some sympathy with the self-sufficient and self-centered man-about-town who speaks of "dear old London." For back of all is a common, glorious history, even if much is inglorious, as ours is as well; and the newer history, when England's "long, thin line" held back the Huns from us as well as from France. We may say, in our American pride, that America saved the world in a crisis, but as the Bishop of Oxford truly says, we must remember that Belgium and Italy, and France and England, gave us a world to save. May this thought bind us closer in our world consciousness, and make us more keenly appreciative of our comrades in a common cause.

REVIVAL AT HAW RIVER.

The revival meeting at Union, Alamance, began on the fourth Sunday in July with good audiences during the entire meeting. Rev. Hamilton J. Fleming, of South Portland, Maine, was with us and preached to good acceptance. His contrasts are great and very striking. His mountains are high and his valleys are low. He is an interesting speaker, who gives you something to think about. The song service was fine, and the fellowship was excellent. The Church was strengthened and souls won to Christ. Nine have united with the Church and been baptized.

We are now in the midst of a revival meeting at Haw River, N. C., with the above-named minister doing the preaching. The audiences are good, and the attention excellent. The outlook is good. P. H. FLEMING.

OUR PLEDGES
Men and Millions Sacred, Solemn and Binding.

These obligations were made through the Church to the Kingdom of God and to all that pertains to building up that Kingdom in the world, so far as our Christian Church is concerned. As Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., has so pertinently pointed out: "A Christian can no more drop his pledges than he can drop his prayers or his Church membership. Misfortune may make it impossible to meet financial obligations--'When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both' (Luke 7:42)--but not till 'they had nothing to pay.' Obligations to God are as binding as obligations to men, and God will help those who try to keep their pledges."

Many are making great sacrifices to meet these obligations and pay these pledges. Is your Church on this list? If not, let's do our best to get it there. If there, let's get it in first place.

WALKING IN THE LIGHT.

"Whoso walketh uprightly shall be saved; but he that is perverse in his ways shall fall at once." —Prov. 28:18.

There are not many things in this world of which we can be absolutely certain. We cannot be certain of continued health and earthly happiness. We cannot always rely on others; sometimes we cannot even rely on our friends! Nor can we depend always upon our clocks, our fires, or our meals. They may stop, go out, or be distasteful. Among all the things of this uncertain world there are none more sure than spiritual truths. These are eternal, invincible; they transcend time and weather and every change. They are of God; and He hath ordained them and ordered them.

One of the clearest and most unimpeachable of all these spiritual beacons is this: The righteous will prosper, and the wicked will be brought low. This does not necessarily mean that the righteous will be always rich, always healthy, always successful. Nor does it mean that the wicked will be poor, sickly, and a failure. But it emphatically does mean that he "who hungereth and thirsteth after righteousness shall be filled," and that he "who soweth to the wind shall reap the whirlwind." The righteous will prosper in a way above all others, spiritually; his soul will prosper! The wicked man will be brought low in a way worse than all others; his soul will be perverted.

The wise old sage who wrote the proverb knew something about life and living; he saw how the upright man was saved from sin and shame and dishonor and wrath; he observed how the vicious man was weakened and self-destroyed. In the greatest trials of life and death, he saw that the only absolute assurance of salvation was an upright life, dedicated whole-heartedly to the Lord. Those who accept his wise counsel and follow it shall know the truth of it.—Rev. Vincent G. Burns.

TUESDAY.

BE CAREFUL AND GET MORE OUT OF LIFE.

"This is my commandment, that ye love one another, even as I have loved you."—Jno. 15:12.

Why don't you get acquainted with your neighbors? Why should you hold yourself aloof from the family in the same building with you, or in the houses near you? You have passed the time of day with them, and that is all.

Perhaps you think they should make the next advance; maybe this is what they think about you. And so you go, living within a few feet of each other, and as far as being acquainted, you are miles apart.

What do you get out of such selfishness, for isn't it selfishness? Would you not get a whole more out of life, and could you not add much to the pleasure of other persons if you were more congenial?

If you came from a small town, you can remember how much you appreciated the hearty salutations as you walked along its streets, as you neared your home.

Would you not get more happiness out of your life now if, when you reached your own locality, there were those who would meet you with a smile and a cheerful word? Aren't you missing a whole lot in life? (Copyright, 1924, International Feature Service, Inc.)

WEDNESDAY.

"It was voiced abroad that he was in the house." Or "It was reported that he was at home."—Mark 2:1-12.

Jesus could never hide Himself. Whenever He attempted it, it was reported where He was.

We often find ourselves face to face with those who are trying to be Christians in secret. Is it possible? Are we not suspicious of secret goodness?

If one is living a Christian life, why keep it a secret? Jesus thought not of trying to keep Himself and His works a secret; could not even hide Himself from the people at any time. He shone out with such radiance that folks felt it every where. Is it not just the same with man? God receives the true heart openly and blesses that life in such a way that it cannot hide itself any more than a light can—a light that is set on a hill and cannot obscure itself.

Prayer.—Our Father, may we never be ashamed to work for Thee and to acknowledge our faith before God and man. Amen.

THURSDAY.

THE SURE FOUNDATION.

"Nevertheless, the foundation of God standeth sure."—2 Tim. 2:15-19.

There is a philosophy which tells us we cannot be sure of anything. But in our human affairs we proceed upon the basis of possible certainty. We do know some things, and we know ourselves as knowing.

It is so in the realm of religion, the highest of all earthly realms. It is a realm of investment, its securities representing invisible assets. It is a realm of friendship and of love, for its realities include personal relationships between ourselves and the Supreme Soul of the universe. Just what degree of certainty are we capable of in this realm? Hear an apostle: "The foundation of God standeth sure."

May we be sure of God? Even more sure than of the gold we put into the vault. Even more sure than of the heart that beats opposite us at the breakfast table or by the fireside. The most wonderful thing Jesus ever said is reported in the gospel according to John: "Ye believe in God: believe also in me." Christ offered Himself as proof of God, and Christ is Himself the best proof of God. Art is proof of beauty—proof that beauty is. Music is proof of harmony—proof that harmony is. Christ is proof of God—proof that God is. Let us stand on that.—Rev. C. C. Albertson.

Prayer.—Lord's prayer, all the circle joining.

FRIDAY.

ANSWER AND UNANSWERED.

"Unceasingly I make mention of you, always in my prayers, making request, if by any means, I may, come unto you."—Rom. 1:9-12.

And Paul did come to them, but not as he had planned. He went to Rome as prisoner.

There are some whose better nature are more in harmony with God and to whom the Father can make greater, as in the case of paul; and these are they who enjoy many answers to prayer. Others, who are stubborn and self-determined, have minds sealed against the Spirit. To these, prayer is disappointing. The former know that God answers prayer. The latter neglect it, and then decide that prayer is only for weak souls. Here he goes away. Why? He is not in the harmony with the nature of God. God is for us all, and because He does not answer as we expect is no reason for lack of faith on our part. For instance, the following story a propos:

Our neighbor's little daughter in a former pastorate is an illustration of the man who loses all by closing his heart against the Spirit's suggestion. On the mantel was a vase of fresh-gathered red roses. The tot cried for a rose. Mother shook her head in protest against the request, but offered some white roses from another vase. There was good reason for the substitution, for the bush from which the red roses were gathered had been sprayed with arsenate of lead, a poisonous insecticide. But the child would have none but the red roses with the invisible poison. For the little one, however, there was this excuse: she could not understand.—Rev. John Harrison Allen.

Prayer.—By one of the parents, asking that we may learn the gracious art of inspiring weaker souls with assurance, both by prayer and godly conversation.

SATURDAY.

GOD'S SHIELD.

"The shields of the earth belong to God."—Ps. 47:9.

"The shields of the earth"—the real defenses and real porjectors of body and soul.

We need to be shielded. A great many foes imperil our lives. There are the fires of passion, the dull, heavy monotony of unrequited toil, the slug of sloth, the moth of indifference, the rust of contempt, the weight of years, the decay of ease, the influence of evil mind, the arch-enemy of drink, the canker of hate, the poison of envy and malace, the viles of temper, the snares of unaccomplished purposes, the plague of disappointment, success or failures, health, sickness, knowledge and ignorance. These are the mighty foes of our lives, and to resist them requires a shield, and each has its preventive. Those preventives belonging to God. They are the shields.

"He that maketh the most high his habitation, no evil shall befall him, neither shall any plague come nigh his tent." Inoculate against evil by living in close league with God.

Prayer.—Our Father, teach us how all good comes from Thee, how all protection is of Thee, and how to look to Thee. Amen.

SUNDAY.

"THE SABBATH WAS MADE FOR MAN." —Mark 2:27.

Let us reflect and ask ourselves how many Sabbaths we have lost. Any day is a lost day when it is spent without a purpose or a benefit. It is lost even when we have not caught the spirit of it.

Thou dost read a book. The author may be dead, but if he has hid his spirit in the book, he opens his heart unto thee and thou dost open thine to him, and thou dost find thyself touched as he was touched when he wrote it. Thou dost cry when he cried, and laugh when he laughed. Thou art in his spirit and his spirit is in thee.

Is not this also true with the Sabbath and us? There is a spell which makes time and place of no account, and they both slip away. But if we can be filled with the spirit of time, it cannot pass without entering into it and embuing us with its life. So is the Sabbath. Don't miss its spirit.

Prayer.—Our Father, surround us with Thy strong and tender protection. Fill us with Thy spirit every day, that we may be one with Thee every day. Amen.

Kiddies' Korner

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT, Editor.

DEAR SUNSHINE KIDDIES:

Your editor is still alive, though she is not home yet by any means. She has a huge pile of letters waiting for her, and I am sure she will be pleased that so many have written.

So far, Dr. Atkinson has not issued "marching orders" for me, so I am going to tell you about my little dog.

"Rusty" was a Christmas present to me five years ago. She was then so tiny she could sleep in your hands; but has grown to be the size of an ordinary house-cat. She is devoted to all the family, and considers it her duty to look after each one. She eats very little, but is choice about it, and is very fond of oatmeal and brown-bread toast, also milk and raw beef. She catches rats and fights every cat that crosses her path. She killed a big cat recently, and was so crippled that we had to paint her wounds with iodine. She has a nice set of harness, with bells, and enjoys wearing it, just so she is not fastened and can go where she likes. She loves children, especially babies, and never tires of playing with them. She likes to ride in the car, and knows ours from all the others; but she refuses to ride on the back seat. When we go in a coupe, she sits on the little shelf above the seat.

Now you are tired of this dog story. Come to see us some day and play with "Rusty."

Your editor's mother,
MRS. T. A. MOFFITT.

A NOBLE BOY.

Albert was the son of a poor widow who could hardly earn enough to buy food for herself and son. She had no warm shawl, and could not go to Church in cold weather. Albert felt sorry to see his mother kept at home for such a cause. His sorrow was real, too, for it made him set his wits to work to earn money. He ran errands for the neighbors and shop-keeper and sold oranges for the fruitman until he earned enough to buy a cheap warm shawl.

He kept his plan a secret, bought the shawl, carried it home, and stealing up behind his mother, spread it out, and laid it over her shoulders.

"What is my boy about?" cried the widow, starting from her chair. Then feeling the shawl, she grasped it and said, "Why, what's this?"

"A nice warm shawl for my dear mother to wear to Church," cried Albert, clapping his hands and dancing around the room for joy. Isn't it a beauty, mother?"

When his mother learned how the shawl had been procured, her heart was glad. Tears filled her eyes, and pressing Albert to her breast, she said: "My dear, dear boy!"

Was not Albert well paid, think you, for all his work and pains in earning that shawl? I doubt if there was a happier boy in the nation that night than Albert. What made him so happy? Love and duty! He had loved his mother, and had shown it by working very hard to buy a shawl. The gift had become a joy to her lonely heart, because it made her feel that her boy loved her, that he returned love for love.

If all boys wish to taste Albert's happiness, they can all do it. The way is as open to them as it was to Albert. They have but to love their mothers dearly, and to show it by acts of affectionate obedience. Boys and girls, let Albert's example teach you to love your mothers, and show that you love them.

KITTY'S TROUBLE.

The sun was shining bright and warm that morning, and you would have thought that Kitty's heart ought to have been full of sunshine too, but there was a sad frown on her face, and her little feet went up the stairs very slowly, as if it were the hardest work in the world to go at all.

Kitty was wondering to herself why she must always do just what she did not like to do, and why her mother and Aggie found so many errands for her on that particular morning.

She had been taught to obey at once, and not to grumble; but, though no word of complaint left the pretty red lips, her mind was all in a fret, and so the ugly frown grew on the rosy face.

By and by, when she had wiped the dishes, found Aggie's thimble, and brought down the basket of colored balls which were to be sewed for the new carpet, her mother called to her from the kitchen, where she was busy making pies.

"Kitty," she said, "you may go out for a little walk now, but Willie must go with you." She made no objections to taking the little brother, but wished in her heart that he could stay at home, and for once she might walk out alone.

Poor Kitty! She saw nothing beautiful in the woods that morning. Her little rebellious heart had taken entire possession of her, and she forgot how many loving things the poor, tired mother was always doing for her.

On and on went little Kitty, never heeding where the path led; but ere long her thoughts returned to the brother, for, in spite of her ill humor, she loved him very dearly.

"We must turn back, Willie," she said, kindly, "or mother will be worried about us." But when she started, everything looked strange, and there was no path. Poor little girl! As she walked on, the woods seemed to get thicker, and Willie grew so tired that she was forced to sit down on the ground and take him on her lap, where he soon fell asleep as peacefully as in his little bed at home. It was quite dark now, except where the moon shone in long, slanting rows through the trees.

"Oh, Mamma! if you only could find your little Kitty," she sobbed; "I would never be tired of work again."

And then suddenly lights flashed about her; she heard the tramp of men's feet and her father's voice ringing out in a glad shout; and the next moment she was in his arms.

How happy Kitty was, and how glad her dear mother felt as she clasped in her arms the little lost ones.

Kitty had taken cold sitting on the damp ground, and for many days she was obliged to stay in bed and let her mother and Aggie wait on her.

When at last she did come down again, she was glad to run on numberless errands for her dear mother and sister. And if she ever was tempted in her heart to complain, she thought of the terrible time when she was lost in the woods and could not see a dear fact or hear a dear voice, and it was wonderful to see what a change came over her face. The rose or the lily, laughing out-of-doors, was not sweeter than the cheerful little face which Kitty lifted to the sunshine.

Do you s'pose they have a "Sunbeam Kiddie Korner" over in Ponce? You don't know where that is? Well, sir—ree! I'll just tell you about that place. It's over across the ocean, dear Sunbeams, where we send our pennies for the missionaries to buy flour, and potatoes, and tea, and other things to keep them strong and healthy. And do you know if we forget to take that penny to Sunday School and to the missionary society—maybe, just maybe, it would keep some one from eating his dinner some day? Oh! so don't forget that important little penny!

Oh, yes, there are two little American boys that live over in Porto Rico, and they are over here now on a visit, and they have promised to write you a little letter next week. Are you glad? I know it will be interesting, so watch your "Kiddies' Korner" next week.

Among the Menangkabaus tribes of the west coast of Sumatra, the husbands have no property, no homes, no rights in their children. They are only visitors in the houses of their wives. The woman owns the property and the line of descent is through the mother.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

August 24, 1924.

Subject: "Jesus Talks with Nicodemus."

Golden Text: "For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have eternal life."—John 3:16.

Lesson: John 3:1-17.

Devotional Reading: Isa. 11:1-9.

Reference Material: John 7:45-52, 19:38-42.

Here is a scene at once simple and immortal. There is hardly a Sunday School boy or girl, and certainly few adult Christians, who do not know the story of Jesus and Nicodemus. And, even though they do not remember all the details of the incident, they do remember the immortal words which sum up in a sentence the heart of the gospel of Jesus Christ: "For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have eternal life." God forbid that we should ever become so familiar with these words that they should lose their freshness and their heart-appeal.

The setting of the incident was simple enough. Nicodemus, an elderly, perhaps the old man, a Pharisee, and a member of the Sanhedrin, had come to the young man who had recently burst upon the horizon of Jewish life. He had come at night, perhaps because he was afraid to be seen coming to this new Teacher, especially in view of the fact that, as a Pharisee and an older man, there seemed little warrant for him to seek out this seemingly revolutionary Teacher. And in spite of the fact that some writers question Nicodemus' motive and method, I believe that he had come as a sincere seeker, with a hunger for the finer things of life which the young Nazarene had hinted at. It is easy to picture Jesus, young, sympathetic, and fired with a passion for the things of the kingdom; and this old man, formal and uninitiated into the deeper spiritual truths of the things of that kingdom—as they walked in the cool of the starry night, or as they sat in the privacy of some secluded spot, and talked of things eternal. How I would have liked to be there!

"We know Thou art a teacher come from God, for no one can do these things (signs) except God be with Him." Nicodemus recognizes a fact which so many people are slow to admit. Why argue about certain theories about the idea about Jesus? Why not study what Jesus did? He who does this, will say with the man of other days, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."

Jesus goes directly to the heart of the issue involved. He insisted that unless a man be born anew, he could not see the kingdom of God. Spiritually, things are spiritually discerned. And for a man, steeped in Judaism as Nicodemus was, there was nothing that would enable him to see the spiritual realities of the religion of Jesus, except a change so revolutionary that it amounted to a new birth. And when the aged religious teacher asked how these things could be, the Master suggested that it was a mysterious, but a very real, fact. Jesus insinuated, in fact explicitly affirmed, that a man does not have to know all about religion to become a devotee of religion. He need not understand the act; he need only to recognize the fact. In short, Jesus said that the new birth was (1) essential, (2) mysterious, (3) vital, (4) real.

"How can these things be?" That has always been the question of questioning men and women, some honest, some skeptical. But Jesus replies that He knows what He is talking about. As an authority of matters spiritual, and on the basis of the experiences of others, we are justified in giving heed to His words.

And then comes the immortal words which Luther calls "the little gospel." God gave, because He loved. The Son came because He loved. And the purpose and the passion of both the Father and the Son was that men might be saved, that they might have eternal life. And He who had believed, not in the sense of giving assent to a creed, but in the sense of giving assent to a person, had—already had—eternal life. Some day we may understand all the implications of this great truth. But one thing is sure: he who acts upon it will find it confirmed in his own experience. He who hath the Son, hath life.

Teaching Points from the Lesson.

1. The highest authorities in religion can learn from Jesus.
2. The ultimate test of Christ's divinity is the miracle of His life.
3. Christ receives all who come to Him in sincerity.
4. Christ alone can satisfy the deepest hunger of the heart.
5. Spiritual things are spiritually discerned.
6. We must be born again; but there is no fixed law as to the nature of the new birth.
7. Christ was an authority on things spiritual.
8. A Christian should bear witness of the things he knows.
9. God loves everybody, and the more we love, the more we become like God.
10. There is a world of difference between believing about Christ and believing on or in Christ.
11. Eternal life is a present fact, not a future prospect.
12. God did not send His Son to judge the world, but the world is judged by Him.

SELFISHNESS.

Topic: "How Selfishness Shows Itself; How Overcome It."

Lesson: Gen. 13:1-18.

Daily Readings: M., Aug. 18, Judas' selfishness.—John 12:1-8. T., Aug. 19, The case of Cain.—Gen. 4:3-9. W., Aug. 20, Selfish indifference.—Prov. 24:11. T., Aug., 21, Self first, then God.—Hag. 1:1-11. F., Aug. 22, Selfish self-will.—Exod. 32:1-14. S., Aug. 23, Materialism.—Eccl. 2:24-26.

Selfish thoughts create selfish acts. To keep our lives free from our lives, we must guard our thoughts that they are free from this sin.

Selfishness is often a fight for bread, for elbow room. Selfishness chooses always the best for itself—greed and grab! Selfishness is the root of practically all sin. Amputation is a cure for selfishness.

Let Christian Endeavorers take Dr. Coue's motto, "Day by day, in every way, I am growing more unselfish and kind to other," and make it a life practice.

"It is our emptiness of the divine life that makes us so full of selfishness. God in the heart is the cure."—Sharp.

Questions and Suggestions.

Is it right for us ot try always to please ourselves? (Rom. 15:1-2.)

Did Christ please Himself? (Rom. 15:3.)

Does God know all our selfish acts? (Prov. 11:12.)

How are the selfish and the unselfish compared? (Prov. 28:27.)

How do people respect the selfish person? (Prov. 11:26.)

In what directions are you liable to be selfish?

What is one selfish trait, and how can it be cultivated?

What harm does the selfish spirit do the soul?

The root of Judas' great sin was selfishness, and the cause of Cain's poor sacrifice was selfishness. Abraham overcame selfishness by giving the other fellow his choice. Lot must have loved him more because of his unselfishness. Unselfishness is the way to win and keep friends. No one likes a "grabber." The selfish man is always the one in need.

KEEPING PROMISES.

Topic: "The Importance of Keeping Promises."

Lesson: Josh. 9:3-21.

Daily Readings: M., Aug. 25, God, the promise-keeper.—2 Cor. 1:18-24. T., Aug. 26, A stern rule.—Num. 30:2. W., Aug. 27, An upright man.—Ps. 15:1-5. T., Aug. 28, The advice of Jesus.—Matt. 5:33-37. F., Aug. 29, A king's promise.—1 Kings 1:28-31. S., Aug. 30, Rash promises.—Mark 6:21-26.

God kept His promise to Abraham, and we believe that He is a God of promise-giving and promise-keeping.

It is a stern rule to keep all of our promises; but if practiced, it will give evidence of a dependable person, and if care is taken in making promises that they be just, we shall never go wrong in making promises.

Jesus taught us that our character should be so guided that when we speak of doing something that the world would know that we meant it.

Promises too hastily made are worse than no promises sometimes. Such promises often bring sorrow. Herod's promise which caused the death of John the Baptist is an example of such. Unhappy homes are further examples sometimes.

All international and national business is built on promise-keeping. Destroy promise-keeping, and international good will will be destroyed too. No nation can be any greater than its own people. Therefore, the individual has a particular part to play in the policies of a national promise-keeping.

"Promises made in stress are often worthless. A proverb says, 'The peril past, God forgotten.'"—Anon.

"Our word must be our master. Once it is given, it should be supreme; and this fact should make us careful of our promises."—N. M. Maroon.

Questions.

Why should treaties be sacredly kept?

What promise do you find on a dollar bill, and how does the government keep it?

How does failure to keep promises affect character?

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

The splendid seasons continue to come, and our crops on the orphanage farm are looking good. We have the best prospect for corn and soy beans we have had at all. We are looking forward to having a bumper crop of hay for our cattle if nothing hppaens to it.

Our canning season is now at hand, and peaches, apples and tomatoes are being stored for winter. We are like the busy little ant, trying to lay in store, while we have the opportunity, something that the children will relish during the winter months. We hope our friends will join with us in this and help us by canning something to help us. It takes quite a lot for more than one hundred children, and while we do all we can here to raise things to eat, we cannot feed the children all the time from our garden. However, during the summer months we do raise all the vegetables we use, and it takes lots of planning, and planting, and working to keep things coming in as other things are giving out, so as to keep something on the table three times each day.

Three bright little children came to live with us last week; four more have been accepted, and will be here by September 1st. Applications continue to come, and children are pleading for places. Our love must grow, and our work must expand, and the little children must be reached. You must have a part.

A VOICE.

"Tomorrow," he faithfully promised, "tomorrow for revival I'll pray;
Tomorrow I'll plead as I ought to, I'm busy, too busy, today!
Tomorrow I'll spend in my closet, tomorrow I will humbly bow"—
Yet ever a "voice" kept whispering, "But the Church is languishing now!"
Tomorrow, tomorrow, tomorrow—the delay e'er repeated went on;
Tomorrow, tomorrow, tomorrow—till the years and the "voice" were gone;
Till the Church its God had forgotten;
Till the land was covered with sin;
Till millions had hopelessly perished, and eternity was ushered in!
O members of the body of Christ, O ye Church of the living God,
O editors and leaders and pastors, O saints where our fathers trod—
The "voice" still insistently whispers; answer not "Tomorrow I'll pray."

BEING NEIGHBORLY.

We are admonished by the apostle not to neglect "the uses of hospitality." This means not only that we are to receive into our homes our friends and those who need shelter and food, but it means also being neighborly with those about us—in the same block and in the same neighborhood. It seems to us that this thing is passing in city life. We live next door to folks for years and never know their names. A shock comes into a home in a community and it is a rare thing for a neighbor to know of the shock. We were visited by a dreadful accident in our home recently, and only one neighbor took the trouble to ask about it or to express any sympathy except when the knowledge was carried to them personally by the writer.

This is not an unusual occurrence. It seems to us, in these days, to a large extent, there is too much respect for the old maxim, "Every man for himself and the devil take the hindmost." It is a great pity that this spirit is growing. In our other days, if one rode on a car for any distance, a neighbor sitting in the seat with him would strike up a conversation. Now it is looked upon as impertinence, very often, to accost your neighbor, though you may sit alongside of him all day long.

The world is not gaining anything, and we are not gaining anything by getting away from the old customs of hospitality and neighborliness. It will be a distinct advance to go back to the good old days when men would recognize the neighbor and when the homes of the people were open to hospitality as a religious rite. We are in this world for only a short time at best, and sorrow is so rife and pain so frequent and the shadows so often fall, it is a pity that we cannot get together in the tender graces of neighborly affection and make the world brighter because wherever there is sorrow there is a friend; wherever there is loneliness, there is a neighbor to stand with us in the gloom.—Methodist-Protestant.

HOW SMALL IS AN ATOM?

Some of the great physicists have attempted an estimation of atomic sizes in a number of ingenious ways. Some dyes, for example, will exhibit color even when diluted 100,000,000 times, which can be interpreted as meaning that the smallest weighable particle of such a dye may be divided into 100,000,000 parts. Faraday prepared films of gold, the thickness of which he estimated to be one hundred millionth of an inch. Continuous films with soap bubbles and with oil were obtained when their thickness could hardly have been more than one-eighth the thickness of Faraday's gold leaf. Further and more complicated experiments and calculations involving such phenomena as viscosity and conduction of heat in gases, yielded a figure which indicated that six hundred million million atoms occupy one cubic inch of space.

Since these numbers have no more meaning than the present-day billion and trillion-mark quotations, let us resort to a few analogies. If a drop of water were magnified to the size of the earth, the constituent atoms would be about the size of footballs. Or, to use a variation of this analogy, if the constituent atoms in a tumbler of water could all be labeled for later identification, and the water were then mixed with all the water in the world, and if, after thorough mixing, the tumbler were again filled, it would contain two thousand of the original atoms. If you are bent upon linking the marks with the atom, you may use this analogy, due to Doctor Foote; if the paper marks are taken as being worth 60 cents per trillion, one paper mark would still be enough to buy three billion gold atoms!—Benjamin Harrow, in the July Harper's.

STAYTON RAVES OVER DRY ORDER.

Captain Stayton, head of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, the most active nullificationist organization of the nation, is in a fury over Henry Ford's order that he will not knowingly keep in his employ violators of the dry law.

Stayton condemns manufacturers for favoring prohibition and declares they are using it as a weapon to reduce American labor to a condition of peonage and to grind more work out of them. No doubt Staton thinks he is making a hit with labor by thus criticizing Ford and other manufacturers who object to drunken employees, when the fact is, sober and intelligent labor will find no fault with such an order as Ford issued.

If there were any disposition on the part of big employers of labor to reduce employees to a condition of peonage, they would prefer to deal with men whose minds are dulled by the continued use of beer. Sober, industrious and intelligent workmen will not submit to injustice. The day has pasesd when liquor dealers can tie labor to the tail of the beer cart.—Ex.

We must face the facts of life, but they include days of sunshine as well as days of cloud. There is a tendency just now to "look on the dark side" entirely. Here is a magazine filled with discussions of such topics as these: "The Habit of Getting Divorces," "Why One-Third of ——'s Banks Fail," "Murder and Suicide on the Increase," "Defective Vision Increasing," etc. Now, over against that, many and true articles could be written on the following subjects: "The Present Passion for Education," "Vast Increase in Gifts for Benevolence," "Millions Added to the Churches Recently," "Law Observance and Enforcement Growing," "Millions Being Spent for Schools and Good Roads," "Sentiment Growing Rapidly for a Warless World," "The Rising Tide of Christian Union," "Better Child-Labor Laws," "Corruption in High Places Being Called to Account," "The Great Progress of Medicine," "The Hate and Violence Generated by the World War Dying Down"—and many more like these. There is evil in the world; but there is much more good.—Evangelist.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Since God, in His infinite wisdom, has seen fit to remove from this earthly tabernacle to the home prepared for those who love and serve Him, Mrs. M. E. Nichols, 117 Poplar Avenue, Norfolk, Va., on August 1, 1924:

First, That in the death of Mrs. Nichols, the Ladies' Aid Society, of which she was president, and the First Christian Church have lost one of their oldest, most devout and loyal members. She took an active part in all of the Church activities.

Second, That while we cherish the memory of her, we bow in humble submission to our Heavenly Father's will, knowing He maketh no mistakes.

Third, To her children we offer heartfelt sympathy, and point them to the one who will sustain and comfort them in their sorrow and loss.

Fourth, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, to The Christian Sun for publication, to the daily papers, and spread on the minutes of our society's records.

Is Your Blood Starving For Want of Iron?

Modern Methods of Cooking and Living Have Made an Alarming Increase in Iron Deficiency in the Blood of American Men and Women.

Why Nuxated Iron So Quickly Helps Build Up Weak, Nervous, Run-Down Folks. Millions of People Take It to Increase Their Strength, Power, Energy and Endurance.

Is your blood starving for want of sufficient iron? If you were to go without eating until you became weak, thin and emaciated, you could not do a more serious harm to yourself than when you let your blood literally starve for want of iron—iron that gives it strength and power to change food into living tissue.

Modern methods of cooking and the rapid pace at which people of this country live has made such an alarming increase in iron deficiency in the blood of American men and women that there is a surprisingly large number of people who lack iron in the blood, and who never suspect the cause of their weak, nervous run-down state. Lack of sufficient iron in the blood has ruined many a man's nerves and utterly robbed him of that virile force and stamina which are so necessary to success and power in every walk of life.

The best thing for those who feel the need of a strength and blood-builder is to get a physician's prescription for organic iron—Nuxated Iron—or if you don't want to go to this trouble, then purchase only Nuxated Iron in its original package and see that this particular name (Nuxated Iron) appears on the package.

NUXATED IRON often increases the bodily and mental vigor of weak, tired, worn out, nervous people in two weeks' time. It's like the iron in your blood and like the iron in spinach, lentils and apples. You can eat it if you wish. It will not blacken or injure the teeth nor disturb the stomach—it is entirely different from ordinary metallic iron which people usually take and which is made merely by the action of strong acids on small pieces of iron.

Beware of substitutes. Look for the word "NUXATED" on every package and the letters N. I. on every tablet. Your money will be refunded by the manufacturers if you do not obtain perfectly satisfactory results. At all druggists.

NUXATED IRON ENRICHES THE BLOOD-GIVES YOU NEW STRENGTH AND ENERGY

WINSTON.

On July 14th, at his home, near Youngsville, N. C., Bro. Janadus Calvin Winston departed this life in answer to the summons of death.

Bro. Winston was born December 15, 1847. He joined Pope's Chapel Christian Church when quite a young man. He moved his membership from there to Oak Level, and finally to Youngsville Christian Church, where he was a charter member, loyal and true to his Church until his death.

Bro. Winston was married November 8, 1870, to Miss Henrietta Tharrington, to which union there were born eight children, as follows: Mrs. L. H. Ragan, Miss Gertrude Winston, Messrs. Lemuel E. Janadus, and Capt. S. E. Winston, of Youngsville, N. C.; Mr. Eaton Winston, Rocky Mount, N. C., and Mrs. S. C. Holden, of Louisburg, N. C.

He is survived by the following grandchildren: Frances and Winston Ragan, Clifton, Mildred and Mary Estelle Winston, Nancy and Eugenia Fleming, of Youngsville, N. C.; Elizabeth Winston, of Rocky Mount, N. C., and Margaret, Sidney, Jr., Gertrude and Martha Holden, of Louisburg, N. C.

The funeral was conducted from the Youngsville Christian Church by the Masons from Louisburg, Franklinton and Youngsville, with Rev. J. W. Patton in charge, assisted by Rev. Mr. Dowell, pastor Baptist Church, Franklinton, and the writer.

The following acted as pallbearers: Honorary—Messrs. J. B. Perry, C. S. Williams, J. F. Mitchell, J. W. Winston, J. W. Woodlief, and J. R. Catlett. Active—Messrs. J. R. Pearce, F. A. Cheatham, Dr. R. E. Timberlake, R. N. Mitchell, C. C. Winston, and Dr. C. V. Timberlake.

The body was laid to rest in the Oak Level Cemetery with Masonic honors, in the presence of a large host of friends, who expressed their love and esteem by many and beautiful floral designs.

Bro. Winston has gone to be with his Lord, whom he worshiped and loved; but he leaves behind an influence that will live on. May God help us who mourn his loss to be drawn closer to our Lord by that influence, and finally when to us the summons shall come, to meet him in that home not made with hands, eternal and in the heavens.

May God bless, comfort and console the bereaved family, and may they find joy in the blessed thought that there will come a day of reunion in a land where partings never come.

J. FULLER JOHNSON.

DRIVER.

Mrs. Barbara A. Driver was born on August 23, 1862, and died July 19, 1924, aged 61 years, 10 months and 26 days. Sister Driver was a member of Bethlehem Christian Church, and a good member she was. She will be greatly missed in the Church and community.

Surviving are two daughters and four sons. Funeral services were held at Fairview Church July 21, 1924, and the body laid to rest by the side of that of her husband. May the Lord bless the sorrowing loved ones and enable them to imitate her many virtues.

Building a Country Sunday School

By E. L. Middleton.

Mr. Middleton possesses definite qualifications for the preparation of this work.. For twelve years after leaving college, he was a day school and Sunday School teacher in a village that had "once-a-week" preaching, with half the membership of the Sunday School living in the open country; while for fourteen years more he has been a State Sunday School secretary in rural State. Mr. Middleton urges the adoption of no novel or revolutionary ideas or methods. He recognizes the place and the value of recognized Sunday School policies and methods, and has prepared a digest of the essentials in a manner plain enough to render it adaptable for use in any rural school. Methods, administration, organization and development are each and all discussed in this book in an eminently practical way.

The price of the book is $1.25. You can order it through "The Christian Sun," 1536 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va.

Church House to Honor Poet.—

Park Avenue Methodist Church, West Somerville, Mass., is building a parish house which will be called "the house by the side of the road," in honor of Sam Walter Foss, a citizen of Somerville and writer of the well-known poem with that title. It is announced that $223,000 has already been pledged to the building fund.

To Make Mexico Dry.—

A dry Mexico is the aim of General P. Elias Calles, President-elect of Mexico, according to a statement by him just before boarding the Deutchland at New York for a tour in Europe. Calles is one of the original prohibitionists in Mexico, and when he was Governor of the State of Sonora in 1916, he was mainly responsible for that State going dry.

The general would not discuss methods he expected to use to make Mexico dry after he goes into office in November.

Christian Church Paper Quoted.—

The Christian Century, an undenominational journal of religion, quotes the Herald of Gospel Liberty at length. The editorial, "Shall the United States be Prussianized?" is the article quoted. Dr. A. M. Kerr, the editor, has placed the Herald of Gospel Liberty in the front rank of religious publications. Its opinions are widely quoted and highly respected. Besides being the oldest paper of the kind in the world, the Herald of Gospel Liberty is one of the best. We should all be acquainted with this paper of the Christain Church.

Allied Conference in Accord.—

Good sense characterized the allied conference in London. All the differences in the enforcement of the Dawes plan for reparation were settled amicably. America was represented by Ambassador Kellogg and Col. James A. Logan, Jr. The going to London of Secretary Hughes was most fortuitous. Though, as he was careful in saying, he just happened to be in London as head of the American Bar Association, he had many conferences with the English and French Premiers, and aided much in the settlement of differences. Only one thing remains now, and that is to persuade Germany to accept the findings of the conference. This will be as difficult as was the securing of agreement in the conference. It is thought that Germany will be reluctant to coincide with the proposed gradual evacuation of the Ruhr, which will not, under the proposed plan, be completed until 1926. It is hopeful, however, that the allied conference was in accord. It is not difficult to recall similar conferences which were not in the least so harmonious.

First Negro Endowment.—

Fisk University, of Nashville, Tenn., has just finished raising a million dollar endowment for negro education. It is the first time such an endowment has been raised by an institution for that purpose. The General Education Board, the Carnegie Corporation, the John F. Slater Fund of Charlottesville, Va., the J. C. Penney Foundation, and individuals in many cities contributed to the endowment. The citizens of Nashville have raised fifty thousand dollars in addition. This is the largest sum ever given by a Southern city for such a cause. Fisk University was founded by General Clinton B. Fisk for negro education, just following the Civil War.

It is a fine thing for men of means to make possible better education for the negro and to help him help himself. We should all remember Franklinton Christian College when we are placing our gifts. As we help the negro, he will be enabled to help us in the solution of the race problem in a sane and equitable fashion.

Major Imbrie Murdered.—

On July 18th, Major Robert Imbrie, vice-consul of the United States at Teheran, Persia, was murdered by a Persian mob. The press story tells how, about six weeks ago, a man chanced to mention the name of Abbas Effendi, the late spiritual leader of the Bahais, and was stricken instantly blind. Because of this vindication of Mohammed by Allah, the well became a Moslem shrine. Later it was reported that the well had been poisoned, and a mob gathered there. Major Imbrie and a companion, Melin Seymour, went down to the place to make some photographs, the National Geographic Magazine having commissioned Major Imbrie to supply it with Persian photographs. The photographing was not kindly regarded by the natives, and as Major Imbrie was wearing a Persian cap, they stoned the carriage, and in the struggle Major Imbrie was fatally injured, dying that afternoon. The American government sent a strongly worded protest to the Persian government, insisting that an indemnity be paid Mrs. Imbrie, that all official honors be paid the body, and that the expenses of a warship for its transportation to America be paid. To all these demands, the Teheran government agreed. That this was not done for private citizens engaged in missionary and benevolent work shows that the United States does not regard the life of a man who is not an official so highly as the life of a man who is officially connected with the government. We like better the British attitude, which did as much for an employee of a British firm—and he was not an Englishman, but an American. Life is life, and ought so to be regarded by the government of the United States.

Kansas Satisfied With Prohibition.—

A group of Kansas citizens, headed by Governor Henry J. Allen, Governor Jonathan M. Davis, Attorney General C. D. Griffith, William Allen White, of the Emporia Gazette, and ex-Congressman Victor Murdock, chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, celebrated the forty-fourth anniversary of prohibition in Kansas by putting out the following message to the world:

"Today, more than four decades after the passage of the amendment, there is found without the State a well-developed temperance conscience—a strong disgust for intemperance. Respect for the law, which in early years of prohibition was brought about by compulsion, is now voluntary. Each generation is further removed from an appetite for poisonous drink.

"When the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States closed all the distilleries and breweries of other States, a few people in Kansas proceeded to equip themselves to produce what they wanted. The result was a new violator of the law—the manufacturer of home brew. Thereupon, Kansas proceeded to provide a law which penalized these violators.

"Kansas' views on prohibition, summarized through the expression of her peace officers, are:

"No repeal or modification is wanted, needed, or considered.

"Ease of enforcement grows with enforcement.

"Officials and private citizens are agreed that prohibition is the State's best business asset.

"Many crimes that are committed in communities that tolerate liquor are absent from Kansas.

"Conviction of violators is easier now than at any other time in the past, due to the years of proof that intoxicating liquor is a social and commercial detriment to any community.

"Many undesirable influences that attend liquor were banished from the State when liquor was banished.

"Liquor sales are not even permitted in Kansas on doctors' prescriptions. Liquor is an outlaw in Kansas.

"Kansas is forty-four years removed from the thought of ever returning to the days of the saloon."

This message was issued by gentlemen from Kansas, but they speak from experience, and we who are having trouble with law enforcement at present may gather courage from their words.

NOTES-PERSONALS

The Virginia Valley Central Conference was a success this year. Will the secretary give THE SUN the outstanding items of interest?

Dr. W. P. Minton, foreign mission secretary, manifested a lively interest in the work of the Valley Central Conference at its recent session.

Dr. W. T. Walters, pastor of First Christian Church, Richmond, Va., is moving this week to 3206 Grove Avenue, just two blocks west of the Church.

Communities, Churches and schools, as well as individuals, must make up their minds not to be dependent on outside help. They should think rather of helping others and their neighbors.

Not only must the goal of life be true, but its method must be righteous also. When a cause is promoted by a wrong method, the seeds of its destruction have already been sown in its heart.

Rev. M. T. Sorrel, in charge of our Christian forces at Fancy Gap, Va., was a recent visitor at the college, and reports his work going well. The mission secretary last week visited Bro. Sorrel and the work, and will write of this in a later issue.

The college committee of the Valley Central Christian Conference was continued at the recent session. Some of the well-to-do men of the Christian Church live within the bounds of this Conference, and if they make up their minds to do, they can have what they wish.

This is the harvest season in most of the Churches in our Southern Convention, and here is devoutedly hoping that there will be a large ingathering of souls into the kingdom and workers into the Church. From many quarters come fine reports of great and good revival meetings.

Dr. Calhoun and Miss Annie Staley, both of Suffolk, Va., second daughter of Dr. W. W. Staley, were happily married at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ben Holden, Louisburg, N. C., Tuesday, August 19th, Dr. Staley performing the ceremony. Heartiest congratulation and best wishes to the happy pair.

"Religion saw me out," said one, after he came back from the World War with untarnished life and unclouded faith. That is a way religion has—it sees one through the worst temptations and gives a light through the valley and shadow of death. We get into hard places, but religion will see us out if we will have it so.

Rev. N. G. Newman, D. D., who resigned as pastor at Elon College in the spring, has accepted the pastorate of Holy Neck Church and moves with his family to Holland, Va., this week. Bro. Newman and family will be much missed from the Elon community, where they were a real asset to all that meant for the moral, spiritual and social betterment of town and college. He and family carry with them the love as well as the profoundest admiration and respect of all whom they leave behind here.

Rev. and Mrs. D. P. Barrett and family left Elon College Tuesday, August 19th, for New York, whence they were to sail on the San Lorenzo Thursday for Porto Rico. They have been on furlough in the States since May. Their health is much improved, and they are anxious to get back to their field of labor and friends back home. Miss Alice, who graduated from Elon last commencement, returns with the family and will teach in a high school in Ponce. Miss Olyn, the second daughter, remains in the States and is to be in Elon College the coming year.

The mission secretary has been recently advised that there is a large number of members of the Christian Church now residing in Birmingham, Ala., and that the number constantly increases from our Georgia and Alabama Churches. One Brother said he was confident that we had between thirty and fifty members of the Christian Church living in Birmingham, to his knowledge, and there must be a large number with whom he was not acquainted. Great is the pity, indeed, that we have not the means and the man to begin building a Christian Church in Birmingham. This growing city will continually be a source of drainage on our denomination and leakage for our Church membership until a Church is organized there.

Rev. S. L. Beougher, who recently went from our Graham pastorate to the presidency of Bethlehem College, seems quite happy in his present work, and the people of the Conferences whom he has met and with whom he is laboring, are more than delighted at the fine beginning and splendid impressions he has made. Dr. Beougher is very hopeful for a fine opening at Bethlehem, as many applications are going in for entarnce when the college opens in September. The new building at Bethlehem is neat, commodious and attractive. By the loving and loyal support of our brethren in the two Southern Conferences it will not be long till Bethlehem will be largely patronized and will be a stronghold for righteousness in our Zion.

As was stated in THE SUN recently, Miss Madge Moffitt, a genius in entertaining children, is making a distinctive hit with her "Kiddies' Korner." On all sides, readers are speaking favorably of it. Today's mail brings this to the editors of THE SUN: "I am writing to express my appreciation for the 'Kiddies' Korner' in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. As teacher of a primary class in the Sunday School, I am finding Miss Moffitt's stories exceedingly interesting and helpful." Many others besides the children who read THE SUN are enjoying the "Korner." One correspondent says this "Korner" should largely increase the subscription list of THE SUN, for the pity is that the paper with these fine, bright stories does not go into more homes. It was a fortunate day, indeed, when the editors secured the consent of Miss Moffitt to conduct this department.

The mission secretary recently visited Roanoke, Ala., where we should have had a Christian Church twenty-five years ago. Bro. V. E. Kitchens, one of our fine men of Roanoke, said that the Christians had a wheel around about Roanoke, and now it was necessary to put the hub in, and by the help of God the membership, though small now, in Roanoke propose to dedicate their energies and activities to the building of this hub. Some of the leading business men of that city were former members of the Christian Church, but are now lost to us because we have never built there. Unless the Christians build at Roanoke, it will be another source of drainage upon our denomination, and a very large source at that. Rev. G. D. Hunt, as pastor, has organized with fifteen or more members, and is preaching once a month in the City Hall, and a live Sunday School and Woman's Missionary Society have been organized. A fine lot at the very heart of the city has been purchased, and the faithful ones say that some day it will be paid for and a suitable Christian Church will be erected on it. To this end we should give thought and deep concern. Our heartiest congratulations to Bro. Hunt and the faithful membership in Roanoke.

Rev. McD. Howsare, of Dayton, Ohio, who seems to have struck a new and important note in evangelism, has very kindly consented to answer, through the columns of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, some questions that the editors would like to lay before him. We believe that SUN readers should get Dr. Howsare's program. Many of our pastors may reject the program, but some will likely adopt it, and all will certainly find it interesting.

The first questions that we are asking Dr. Howsare to answer are the following, which would indicate the nature of the questions to be laid before him and whose answers we feel sure Dr. Howsare will be pleased to give in a straightforward and practical manner:

(1) What is evangelism?
(2) What is personal evangelism?
(3) What is educational evangelism?
(4) What part does the Holy Spirit play in winning souls?

If Dr. Howsare will kindly answer these questions at an early date through THE SUN, we will be ready then to propound others.

A Second Response.

A good friend asked, the other day: "Is there a fund with which to send THE SUN to aged people who want it but have no way of securing money with which to pay for it?" On being advised that there was not, he said: "Well, I know a mighty good old lady who wants her Church paper, THE CHRISTIAN SUN, but is too poor in this world's goods to subscribe for it. Here is $1.00 for half a year's subscription." The editor wonders if some reader of these lines would like to send the other dollar and make out the subscription for a year?

In reply to the above, a former editor sends his check for $1.00. He is now doing editorial work on a large city daily. He adds, "May the good woman continue to enjoy her paper for many more years."

PROGRESS IN INVENTION.

Germany may or may not be in a "hard place" financially. Reports, apparently equally trustworthy, differ on this point. But whatever her condition, the progress of invention, or the application of it, seems to go forward. We read that in the autumn, passengers on the principal German express trains will be able to telephone any number in Germany or to be telephoned from any point in the country. This is to be made possible by the installation of wireless outfits on the trains. The procedure is for the passenger to call up a German city and ask to be connected with the desired number. Persons wishing to call a passenger must call up the central exchange, ask for the train, then ask for the passenger, who will be paged.

Isolation is rapidly becoming obsolete—and yet who can actually see or touch the innermost being of a human being? And who can see the secret of life?

MOSES THE DELIVERER.

By Rev. Francis E. Clark, D. D.

"By faith he forsook Egypt, not fearing the wrath of the king; for he endured, as seeing Him who is invisible."—Heb. 11:27.

The constant cry of mankind is for leaders. Moses is perhaps the most perfect example of human leadership that either biblical or secular literature records. He had seemingly insuperable obstacles to overcome; he had the slenderest of human resources; he had the mightiest of ancient empires to contend with. He had a fickle, complaining, unstable people at his back; a howling wilderness in front of him; hostile, treacherous tribes on every side of him. Yes, but God was above him and around him and in him, and he accomplished his mighty, forty-year-long task.

Consider in a little more detail Moses' position as the leader and deliverer of Israel. Washington, as a leader of his people, had difficulties few and easy of solution compared with those of Moses. Washington had personal wealth, prestige and a comparatively intelligent, united people to lead. Moses was a poor herdsman of another man's sheep, and had a nation of ignorant slaves to deliver. Washington's enemies were, for the most part, far away, across three thousand miles of salt seas. Moses' enemies were in every street where his people lived. His people were unarmed, abject slaves, even more helpless under the dominion of their military masters than are any subject nations today.

The recent wonderful discoveries in Tut-Ankh-Amen's tomb reveal something of the enormous wealth, the unbounded resources of imperial Egypt. No nation for a thousand years has ever towered above all other nations as did Egypt in the dynasty in which Moses lived. None was ever so completely the master of the world as was Egypt at that time. Moreover, Moses was a man with a bad record, from the Egyptian standpoint. Doubtless, as a murderer of an Egyptian, he had a price set upon his head. Moses, too, had to conquer himself before he could defy Egypt and deliver his fellow-countrymen. In spite of his humility before God, he was hot-headed, rash, impetuous. His whole history declares his natural disposition before it was tamed by grace. He not only killed the Egyptian, but he smote the rock in anger, and smashed the precious tablets of stone on which the Ten Commandments were written, in his wrath at the idolatrous foolishness of Aaron and the people. His impetuous nature even kept him out of the promised land.

And yet, by a strange twist in the meaning of words, we call him meek. "Who was the meekest man?" we ask the children of the Sunday School, and they unanimously shout, "Moses!" And they mean by it, tame, gentle, low-spirited—the very opposite of Moses' real character. He was "meek" before God, submissive, humble, obedient; but in the presence of men, and even Pharaoh himself, and as a leader of men, he was a very lion.

Doubtless he had many a struggle with his own fiery nature before he was fit to face Pharaoh or to begin to lead his own people out of Egypt. Even then he did not always succeed in conquering himself. Every real leader of men must, like Moses, first subdue himself.

Again, the true leader must be utterly unselfish. Did this ever shine out more gloriously than in our hero? It would be futile to rehearse the story of Moses' leadership. If every school-boy does not know it, his teacher and his parents are blameworthy. No novel ever revealed a better plot than this bit of Egyptian history. The baby in the bulrushes, the astute little sister, the resourceful mother, the growing boy's magnificent surroundings, and future prospects in Pharaoh's court, his austere rejection of human glory when he "refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter," the years of obscurity as a herder of sheep, his sudden emergence as leader and champion who dared to beard the world's mightiest monarch on his throne—this is a plot which no novel-writer has ever equaled. For once, indeed, truth is stranger than fiction.

And the pivotal hour in this story is when its hero made the great refusal, when he weighed the glories of the world's greatest monarch in one scale, and in the other, affliction and poverty, the leadership of a perverse and ever-murmuring people. Even then the first scale hit the beam, in Moses' estimate. Every modern discovery of tomb or pyramid or Egyptian scroll tells how much was involved in Moses' great refusal, and emphasizes the worth of his unselfish soul.

Thus every modern leader whom the ages will greatly honor must exhibit this quality of unselfish devotion to the cause he champions. Washington might have been honored by the British with the highest titles and loaded with British gold; but he chose to suffer affliction with his brave foot soldiers at Valley Forge. Benedict Arnold chose the gold, and his sun went down in infamous night. Lincoln might have chosen to be Senator instead of Douglas, but he chose to cast in his lot with the then unpopular side; he chose the right as God gave him to see the right, and became the supreme leader of his people, and the deliverer of four million slaves.

Again, and though it may be needless to suggest it, no one can be a great leader without undaunted courage. Moses was as supreme in his courage before men as he was submissive and humble—"meek," if we must use the word—before God. In his repeated appearances in Phafaoh's court, with his "Thus saith the Lord," he showed undaunted and undauntable courage. A king is a fearsome object for a slave to encounter. Any ordinary man would quail before his ruler if that ruler, like the Emperor of Egypt, held the power of life and death, especially if he had a past like Moses, and also an unpalatable message to deliver.

"Thus saith the Lord, let my people go." "Let my people go," must have been a phrase particularly hateful to the Egyptian king. "Who am I," he must have said, "to be thus commanded by a bond-woman's son? Why should I obey a foreign God and rob myself of all my slaves? Who else will hew my wood and draw my water? Who will build my palaces and tombs, and take my bricks and furnish the straw for them at the same time? My empire is built on this slave labor, and yet this impudent, grizzled old Israelite shepherd presumes to tell me what I should do!"

Thus ten times did Moses address the ruler of Egypt, in all his glory. Nine times was the Pharaoh brought to his knees by the sore affliction of the plague, but the tenth time the undaunted Moses won his plea, or rather imposed his command, upon the king himself.

But courage is not enough to make a great leader for a righteous cause. Napoleon had courage enough, but he is today execrated by millions as a perfidious butcher. Boss Tweed had sufficient courage and leadership of a soht—courage to defy the law and become the leader of a horde of lawbreakers—but he could not escape prison stripes and a name and reputation that smell to heaven in American history.

No, something more than courage, or even unselfish devotion, is needed for real leadership, and that is far-sighted vision. Moses had this in supreme measure. A place next to the throne was doubtless as attractive to him as to other men. The "treasures of Egypt" glittered and sparkled in his eyes as they would in yours or mine. But he could see through them and beyond them. He could see the "invisible." The "ill treatment" that he must endure with his own people was more to him than crowns or scepters. An unknown burial plot on "Nebo's lonely mountain" was, in his eyes, better than a tomb in a pyramid or a mausoleum filled with all the treasures of even Tut-Ankh-Amen's reign.

Oh, for this far vision! this discernment of future welfare! This choice of the far-away with God, rather than the glittering near-by toys of sin, is what true leaders and deliverers of the people must always have.

So far, we have been dealing with kings and near-kings. Is there anything for us who modestly call ourselves the commonest of common people, in these lessons from the life of Moses? I think there is much. When we are "grown up," we are bound to be leaders, good or bad. Our subjects may be few, our kingdom small, our army a corporal's guard, but we cannot escape the responsibility of leadership. The father and mother are the supreme leaders of their children; the older brothers and sisters are the models for, and leaders of, the younger ones. The teacher has a large following; the pastor, perhaps, a still larger one.

How shall we lead? The story of Moses tells us. Only One other in all history could teach us better.

First, we must conquer ourselves. Our fiery temper must be held in check, our mean hearts subdued, our sour dispositions sweetened. Do not these requirements spell just one word—"conversion?" Long before Christ, Moses was converted to Christ, to Christ's humility, devotion, love to God and man.

In that conversion he learned self-sacrifice, "not to be ministered unto but to minister," to give himself to the cross, and many a cross he had to bear. He learned, too, the courage that endures, the courage that fears no man, though he be a Pharaoh, and shrinks from no hardship, though it be a wilderness journey of forty years.

In that school of Christ, founded so long before Christ came to the world, he also saw the great vision—the vision of the invisible which enabled him to choose "the reward of Christ," of which, with marvelously bold rhetoric, the author of the Hebrews writes.

Like Moses, if we would be leaders and liberators of men in our own little sphere, we, too, must make the great refusal, even though it were to be a king's son; the great choice, though it be to suffer affliction with the people of God; the great repudiation of lesser things, though they be like "the treasures of Egypt."

Then shall we, too, receive the great "recompense of reward," the reward of "seeing the invisible," of judging righteously, of leading our little Israel through the wilderness to Canaan, the final reward of dwelling with God.—Christian Herald.

THEIR NOSES KNOW.

Depending entirely on their sense of smell, Philadelphia prohibition agents last week detected $20,000 worth of beer in the Reading freight yards, which they confiscated after it proved to contain over 4 per cent of alcohol. The beer will be destroyed and an attempt made to locate the shipper and the assignee of the barrels. The consignment was addressed to a fictitious name in Philadelphia.—Exchange.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

BETHLEHEM CHAUTAUQUA.

One brief editorial can, in no measure, comprehend or portray the work done and the good accomplished at the School of Methods of Bethlehem College, Wadley, Ala., August 11th to 17th, inclusive. It was indeed good and great to be there. The hope had been indulged, and the leaders had expressed their willingness to be content, if fifty paid registrations were made. It turned out that 112 registered, and all other anticipations were likewise more than doubly realized. The class-rooms, at the teaching periods, were filled, and now and then some pupils had to stand throughout the periods. More than this, note books were in evidence every where, and all seemed bent on getting what was offered by the faculty, teachers and lecturers.

The college building recently brought to a finish was as neat and attractive as a new pen, and the constant supervision and tireless energy of Dr. and Mrs. Beougher made the entire week comfortable, home-like, happy and delightful. They spared no pains, expense, nor effort to make the occasion memorable and render it a real joy in the experience of every one who attended. Miss Lucy Eldredge and Miss Patty Coghill, working together, presented a compact and comprehensive program; one that filled the days with eager pursuits of study, learning, teaching and wholesome activity. Mr. Hermon Eldredge, who is always great in Sunday School platform work, was even more delightful and entertaining and instructive than ever, just having returned from the World's Sunday School Convention at Glasgaw, Scotland, and the shrines of liberty in Europe. In addition to his teaching, each day he gave lectures on his trip. He was refreshing and exceedingly instructive and illuminating n all his travel talks. If no one else had been present, Bro. Eldredge could and would have made the School of Methods worth while and highly profitable to all who attended. Then Rev. McD. Howsare, secretary of evangelism of our General Convention, was present with his wonderful program of evangelism and life recruits. Brother Howsare is very enthusaastic over the program he has presented to our people, and as he explains the features of his program he grips those who hear him and wins them to his method of bringing souls to Christ and enlisting them as members of the Church.

Ministers and laymen were deeply interested in the teaching of Bro. Howsare, and the methods he presented will find large place in the thought and activity of the pastors and others who heard him.

Mrs. Alice V. Morrill, of Defiance, Ohio, was in the school with her wonderfully illuminating messages on missions. Women and young people in particular who attended her courses were thrilled, and many of them feel like they are much better equipped for missionary activity in their Churches than they had been before. Mrs. Morrill did work which will prove permanent in results and will tell mightily for growth of the missionary idea in Alabama and Georgia.

Miss Patty Coghill and Miss Lucy Eldredge, besides teaching some in the School of Methods, conducted a Junior Chautauqua in the Christian Church of Wadley. The juniors gave an exhibition on the last day which delighted all who saw it, and showed what could be accomplished by real teachers in three or four days.

Dr. S. L. Beougher, president of Bethlehem College, gave a series of very timely and able addresses on Bible study, particularly on the part of the pastors. These were much enjoyed and proved helpful to others than pastors.

Rev. Jesse Dollar was in charge of the musical part of the program, and also of the games and amusements. He did very much to lighten the tasks of teachers and pupils, and added in no small measure to the worth and merit of the occasion.

Rev. E. M. Carter was elected president of the Chautauqua, and from beginning to end showed an unflagging interest in all of its work and activity.

The people of Wadley and community seemed to appreciate the Chautauqua thoroughly. The fellowship was delightful and all the associations of the event are happy and wholesome to contemplate. Bethlehem Chautauqua was, indeed, a success beyond the hopes and expectations of the most sanguine. It was regretted that even more of our ministers and interested laymen did not lay aside all other duties and obligations for a week and attend this fine school, whose object is to build up a cause of the kingdom and win souls to Jesus Christ. Many stated that the Chautauqua was a fine by-product of Bethlehem College and a blessing from that institution that had not been contemplated.

FROM SMALL BEGINNINGS.

At the fine Chautauqua which closed a week's session at Bethlehem College, Wadley, Ala., last Sunday, Rev. G. D. Hunt one day became reminiscent and gave a few historical facts of great significance.

In 1849, according to Bro. Hunt, Rev. W. M. J. Elder organized the first Christian Church either in Georgia or Alabama. This Church in a rural district began with four charter members, viz: the pastor, Bro. Elder; his wife, a Mrs Willoughby, and an old colored woman, who was at the time a slave. This was the modest beginning of our work, which, in the course of seventy-five years, has resulted in two Christian Conferences. We now have in Georgia sixteen organized active Churches composed of 1,557 living members and Church property easily worth $30,000 at a low estimate. In Alabama we have twenty-seven organized active Churches, whose total membership is 1,917 and whose Church property, at a low estimate, is $30,000. In addition to this, we have Bethlehem College under construction, whose property at present is certainly worth $30,000. When we consider the thousands who have been saved to a knowledge of our Christ during this period of seventy-five years and who have gone to their reward, and then contemplate the future of the work in these two States, none can deny that Rev. W. M. J. Elder, who years ago passed to his reward, did a monumental work when he planted the little Church, with its three white and one slave members. Large oaks from little acorns grow means that when God is in the work there are no limits to its powers, prospects and possibilities. All any one may wish to know is, if the beginning is right and if God is in it, then one may leave the rest to Him.

With the impetus to our work in Georgia and Alabama given by Bethlehem College, and with the increasing intelligence and prosperity of our people, the future there seems bright indeed and the growth of our work seems assured. Surely our God is marching on, and it behooves us to follow in His wake.

THE MOBILIZATION FOLLY.

On September 12th, General Pershing is to retire from the active service as ranking general of the army. It is proposed by the militarists, and agreed to by our government, to make this an event for the assembling of all our military strength, both regular and civilian. THE CHRISTIAN SUN regards this as an instance of supreme folly.

We honor General Pershing for the signal ability he has displayed in the service of our country and of the world. And the nation should properly note his retirement from active service. But to do so by assembling all our fighting strength is, to our way of thinking, folly and highly inappropriate. It is militarism and jingoism gone to seed. We deplore it more deeply than we can say.

To begin with, the idea was "made in Germany." The Kaiser each year, toward the latter part of his reign, indulged this foolish fantasy till the people of Germany became drunk with the thought that they could conquer the world. Mobilization can only serve to fan the flame of our national pride. And "pride goeth before a fall." We think entirely too much of ourselves as it is. There is not much humility in the national character of our people. Anything which tends to augment our sense of military importance is folly.

It is bad taste, too, to do so in the present state of the world's mind. We have refused to join the League of Nations. We have refused to take part in the World Court. Europe is suspicious of our designs, and has a right to be! Now, to strut our military man-power in the pageantry of gorgeous display on September 12th can only serve to deepen their conviction of our ulterior aspirations.

This national military cake-walk will be especially offensive to Japan, and the occasion of growing alienation on her part. We affronted her by our Japanese exclusion act. We will now parade around on September 12th with a chip on our shoulders to let her know she had better be acquiescent or we will enforce our exclusion act with the sword. If this thing were to take place in Japan, we would readily interpret it as a suggestion at least to us that Japan is not afraid. From the standpoint of our relations with her, this turkey-strutting is highly tactless.

Such display of our military strength is un-Christian. When the Jews numbered themselves, it offended Jehovah. This was centuries before Jesus came and taught love as the basic principle of all life. How much more must this braggart display of military strength grieve the heart of our God centuries after His Son taught the larger principle! The Church can but look with deep regret upon this un-Christian act.

Of course, our government asserts that none of these motives actuated it in thus signalizing General Pershing's retirement. All it had in mind to do was to honor him. It is a poor thing to do a great American honor in a manner that places our nation in so unenviable a light in the estimation of other nations and of the plain teaching of God's Word.

We repeat, this Mobilization Day is sheer folly. We hope Christians will disregard it, and that our ministers will admonish our people against it.

SAFETY FIRST.

"Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."—Matt. 6:33.

"Safety First" is the common slogan of our day. The slogan is extremely significant as regards physical welfare. Placed before the workman at his wheel or bench in the factory, the slogan is written in large letters, SAFETY FIRST. It is posted at the intersections of busy streets in the city, at the railway stations, on conveyances of transportation—street cars, railway trains, ocean steamers, and all the rest. It is placed in front of the engineer as he sits in the cab of his locomotive. It is placed in front of the pilot as he directs the course of his ship over the heaving breast of the ocean. Ten years ago it was not so. Ten years ago the slogan was practically unknown. Why its use today? It is all an expression of our deeper concern for human life.

But as significant as the slogan "Safety First" may be regarding physical safety, it is most significant regarding spiritual safety. Jesus, the Master of the souls of men, pronounced the idea of "safety first" in His summing up of life's values—"Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness." He insisted that men should put "first things" first. Man's immortal soul is of more concern than is his mortal body. The one lives forever, the other it may be for eighty years, it may be for forty, it may be for less. The welfare of the body should receive sincere concern, but the welfare of the soul is greater. Neither should be neglected. To neglect one is to sin against the other. In these days, when death is so persistently stalking our streets, entering our homes and claiming its victims by the hundreds, it should be an added warning to us all to "play safe" with our immortal soul, our eternal destiny.

If parents would be as much concerned about the spiritual well-being of their children as they are about the physical, the kingdom of God would speedily be set up in society. The least indication of physical disorder prompts the parent at once to summon a physician. But the same parent is often little concerned about indications of moral disorder in the child's life. Many parents often act on the theory that the child will outgrow any such moral defects. Parents are greatly alarmed about arrested development, either mentally or physically, in their children; but how many parents fail to have presence of mind or spiritual sensitiveness enough to concern themselves in considering the arrested development of the child's moral and spiritual life? The parent who has the larger vision of parental responsibility, seeks first of all the interests of the kingdom of God for his child.

The man who seeks the kingdom of God as the primary object of his quest in life is the thoughtful man. It does not take very much of a man to look for the dollar. Looking everlastingly for the dollar and looking for it in the wrong place, has plunged thousands of men and women into trouble. The robber, the thief, the unscrupulous dealer, the cheater, the commercial liar are such because of their abnormal tendency to look for the dollar. Credit is due the man who has the talent to make money by hard work and honest methods, but the man who seeks the kingdom of God first, and then uses his talent in seeking money honestly is the man really worth while.

The admonition of Jesus, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness," if heeded, will prove to be the touchstone of success and happiness in every noble pursuit of life.

The young man who aspires to make good in the business world should realize the need of seeking first the kingdom of God. He should play safe with his character. Did you ever know a person to get much benefit from money received dishonestly? The man in business who will say, "My soul first—profit second," if he have the business ability, will succeed, ten to one, as against the man of the same business ability who crucifies his soul for the sake of profit. All the world loves an honest person, a person you can trust, a person who trusts his God, and whom God trusts.

A man may steal off the first base of honesty and right living, and keep his wife and fellowmen from "touching him out," but God knows the thought and intent of the heart. A person never knows when he may be "touched out" in the game of life. It is a great thing for one to get right with God at the very outset of his career. You may turn God down in this life, but remember you turn yourself down at the same time. You may refuse to face God and settle the question of yielding your life to Him as a Christian, but you cannot evade Him in judgment.

No man or woman is so foolish as to think they are playing safe with their soul when turning a cold shoulder to God, the Church and the call of Christ.

The young man or young woman in quest of an education should "seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness." Many of the questions that await you will be solved in Christ's philosophy of life. Let your mind be in tune with the Master's mind if you would find your way along the path of learning. The mind kept bright with the righteousness of God can plow through the unfallowed ground of truth and turn up treasures for the soul to feed upon that a mind which is a stranger to God and His righteousness could never do.

The parents who would do all they can for their children should seek first the kingdom of God for the home. Better to leave the memory of a Christian home to the child, than to leave money, or land, without such a memory. Such a memory has enabled many a boy and girl to make the kingdom of God theirs in after life. Many a boy and girl have gone straight to ruin on father's money. If parents would think more of their children's moral welfare, there would not be so many domestic tragedies. The father should be a chum to his boy, and the mother a Christian chum to her girl.

To seek first the kingdom of God means to accept Jesus Christ as our Example, Saviour, and Lord, to repent of our sins and turn to Him for pardon and for strength. Then it will follow just as sure as the night the day that the kingdom of God will come into our lives. Peace, joy, and life eternal will be ours. Without Christ in our lives,, His spirit to inspire us, to hold us, to redeem us—our life is like a ship without a pilot, like an arch without a keystone, like a building without a foundation. "Seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness," and all the things that make life rich, beautiful and worth while will be added.

WHY THE LAPSE?

A compilation of statistics by Collier's Weekly shows that—

In 1896, 80 per cent of voters cast ballots.
In 1900, 73 per cent.
In 1908, 66 per cent.
In 1912, 62 per cent.
In 1920, less than 50 per cent.
What will be the showing in 1924?

Reasons for the steadily decreasing interest of the electorate in their right and duty to vote are as varied as their sources. The increase of the vote through woman suffrage, the dissatisfaction of voters with the alleged decadence of parties and the supposed fact that one party is much like another, too great an increase in foreign-born population, are all suggested.

A fourth, which has some appeal to logic to recommend it is the failure of the electorate to understand "what it is all about." In other words, the complexity of the problems involved makes a choice of candidate or party so difficult that the mental laziness which is apparently an inherent part of the majority of minds, takes charge and prevents any vote, rather than endure the discomfort of thinking out which candidate to vote for.

If this last-suggested reason is correct, November should show a surprising increase over previous years in percentage of votes cast. It is true that there is no such issue before the public this year as, for instance, in 1896; there is no such sharp differentiation between the platforms of the two major parties as might cause such an increase in votes. But there is the radio; millions listened with absorbing interest to the proceedings at Cleveland and New York to whom, hitherto, a convention was merely an incident in the day's news. Those millions have been educated at first hand. They know "what it is all about." They heard the statesmen, the politicians and the "wheel horses" of the great parties talk. And then, following a universal human curiosity, they turned to the newspapers the next day to read again what they had listened to the night before!

If, as is believed, a record vote is polled this November, the reason may be found in that which is fundamental to all citizenship—education!

OHIO'S NEXT GOVERNOR WILL BE DRY.

There is n oreason for Ohio to become excited over this year's contest for Governor. Both Donahey, the Democratic candidate, and Davis, the Republican candidate, have served as chief executive of the State. Both have made records and they should be judged by their records, and that is exactly what Ohio Democrats and Republicans intend to do. So far as dry enforcement is concerned, both have excellent public records, and unless one changes his views on this question it will not be an issue in this campaign. Judged by their official acts on dry enforcement, both are satisfactory.

MEDITATIONS FROM A PARSON'S DIARY.

"It has often occurred to me that it is absolutely wrong for people who only have at best a few years to live, to stand in the way of the younger generation, who want to follow their vision for progress."

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Railroads develop cities; highways for individual vehicles develop the country. It takes both to develop the cities and the rural sections for the benefit of both. Railroads do not attract residences and improve farms beside them. Good country roads attract residences and improve the farms beside them. Good roads, whether rail or concrete, are great educators of society as well as promoters of industry in field and factory. Roads of all descriptions are partners in the cultivation of society, the increase of wealth, the happiness of the people. It is difficult to say which has done more to increase the intelligence of society, roads or schools; but roads are primary in the education of the people. What people know, they learn from others—left to self, one would live in ignorance and die in poverty. "No man lives to himself, and no man dies to himself," is universal in its application.

Railroads and county roads are the channels of human intercourse, as well as the means of transportation for material and intellectual products. Rapid transit becomes a necessity with denser populations and more widely distributed industries. Schools increase with improved methods of travel. The distinctions between city and country people, between city and country Churches, between city and country schools, disappear with good roads and automobiles. There is a unifying result in these modern improvements. The city would perish without the country, and the country would live in darkness without the city. The city is nothing but the country under roof, and most of its leaders once followed the mule between the furrows. Poor folks seek the city and rich people seek the country. It takes both to satisfy human hunger. They feed upon each other. they rival each other. The city has more electric light; the country has more sunshine. The city has more entertainment; the country more rest. The city does more reading; the country does more thinking. The city sees more people; the country has more neighbors. All the good is not in either; all the bad is not in either. Human currents are like the tides flowing between city and country, as the tides between land and ocean. There are cross-currents, to be sure, caused by winds of thought and feeling; but there is deep calm in the heart of restless emotions, and out of the depth of human feelings emerges the sentiments and aspirations that develop and control the nation.

Religion finds its duplex expression in the worship and work of city and country congregations; but the organ and the trained leaders work toward the same end—the glory of God and the salvation of sinners. As the roads cross and recross and run into one another to carry on the traffic of the world, so cities and counties exchange ideas and aspirations that carry society forward and upward. Since the day of the old Roman roads, and the old Seaboard Railroad, the oldest, of a hundred miles in length, of the world, progress has been made in roadbuilding and society building. The whir of wheels, the sound of whistle and horn, the transportation of necessities and luxuries, the intercourse of people, all indicate progress.

If the money spent on war were spent on roads, it would hasten the reign of peace, the kingdoms of this world as the kingdoms of Christ, and put a new song into the heart of mankind.

ELON LETTER.

Already the professors have begun to return from their summer school and other vacation duties and the new professors have begun to arrive. To all appearances, Elon faces the best year of her history.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN has already told of four strong men who have been added to the faculty. Another has been added in the person of Rev. T. E. White, who becomes professor of the Spanish language and literature. Bro. White is to be pastor of the united Graham-New Providence Church, and will reside in Graham. He will come to Elon three days in the week for his teaching work. Bro. White is the first professor of Spanish Elon has had. We have, heretofore used students from our Porto Rico work to teach this language. He will add weight and strength to the faculty.

Mrs. Frances J. Ring, who has served Elon well in administrative capacity before, returns to the college as matron and resident nurse. Mrs. Ring has the mother-heart and loves girls.

Miss Pauline Nelson, likewise after several years' absence, as head of the violin department in Meredith College, returns to her former duties here. Her grandfather founded the New England Conservatory of Music, and her mother was its first graduate.

Miss Lila Newman becomes head of the fine arts department. After graduating from Elon, Miss Newman studied in New York, and has had several years of successful teaching experience. She knows Elon from her infancy, and that makes her all the better qualified to serve her effectually.

Miss Mary E. Scully, graduate and post-graduate of King's School of Oratory and Physical Culture, Pittsburgh, becomes head of the expression and physical culture department.

Mr. J. H. Farmer becomes manager of the college store. He will have competent student help. Bro. Farmer is one of Elon's staunchest friends and will fill this important position with credit and fidelity.

Miss Ethel Fielding, who becomes head of the voice department, is a teacher of varied and successful teaching experience. For ten years now she has been teaching in Boston, having given up her work at Peace Institute, Raleigh, N. C., to go to Boston. For the past three and a half years she has been a regular teacher in the New England Conservatory, being associated particularly with Mr. Charles A. White as his assistant also in private work. We have always had excellent voice teachers at Elon. We do not believe we have in any sense lowered our standards in securing this lady of superior ability. Mr. F. L. Trowbridge, of the New England Conservatory appointment Bureau, thinks she is the strongest teacher we have ever had. Mr. Chas. A. White says of her: "Miss Ethel Fielding is well qualified in every way for the position of director of voice and public school music of which you write. She is a good musician, and has had several years' experience as teacher of voice. Her own voice is mezzo soprano of good quality. She has been my pupil and associate teacher for some years. Though I am loath to lose her, I cannot but recommend her favorably from every standpoint. She has an agreeable personality, is faithful and reliable in every duty. You would make no mistake in engaging her."

The great Skinner organ, the finest in any college of the South, has made it seem highly desirable to the trustees to magnify this department, and so they have added a teacher, Miss Katherine Nolan, to be head of the organ department and teacher of piano and theoretical subjects. Mr. Trowbridge says of her: "Miss Nolan is an unusually competent woman. She is an experienced teacher of many years, and any school that is able to secure her services is to be congratulated. She is a very fine organist, a thoroughly competent teacher of pianoforte (also a good performer) and received special honors in theoretical subjects. She has a very attractive personality, which could not fail to impress every one with whom she comes in contact."

So does our college face the new year in high expectation of excellent results.

BETHLEHEM CHAUTAUQUA AND SCHOOL OF METHODS.

The first annual session of Bethlehem College Chautauqua and School of Methods, at Wadley, Ala., began August 11th, and continued through the 17th. This was under the direction of the Board of Religious Education of the Southern Convention, Miss Pattie Coghill, field secretary, and Dr. W. T. Walters, chairman.

The first session opened Monday night, with Hermon Eldredge speaker. Each day from 8:30 to 9 o'clock, Dr. S. L. Beougher had charge of the Bible study for pastors, and Mrs. Alice V. Morrill had charge of the young people. From 9:00-9:45 was Sunday School hour. The class for pastors and officers was taught by Hermon Eldredge, and the young people's division by Miss Lucy Eldredge. From 9:45-10:25, mission hour. Leaders, Mrs. M. T. Morrill and Dr. J. O. Atkinson. From 10:25-10:45, recess, in charge of Rev. Jesse Dollar. From 10:45-11:30, evangelism, taught by Rev. McD. Howsare, and Christian Endeavor, Miss Pattie Coghill. From 11:30 to 12:10, lectures: Tuesday, "Winning Others in the Christian Church," Dr. McD. Howsare; Wednesday, "Our Mission Program," Dr. J. O. Atkinson; Thursday, "The Church Program of Christian Education," Hermon Eldredge; Friday, "Our Own College," Dr. S. L. Beougher. Conference discussion hour from 2:30-3:00: Tuesday, J. W. Payne and Hermon Eldredge; Wednesday, Christian Endeavor, Rev. J. H. Hughes and Joe French; Thursday, Woman's Mission Work, Miss Siddie Latham and Mrs. M. T. Morrill; Friday, Work in Georgia and Alabama, Rev. Jesse Dollar, Rev. G. D. Hunt. Vesper hour with songs and story from 6:30-7:00. Recreation was under the charge of Rev. Jesse Dollar. Evening services conducted by Hermon Eldredge and Dr. J. O. Atkinson.

Every person on the program did their work well, with credit to themselves, the college, and the Church, and all were extended a hearty invitation to return next year.

The Chautauqua was a great success, far beyond our anticipations. There were 111 who registered and took some work, and 27 received certificates of attendance in not less than 15 class periods.

Hermon Eldredge delivered a lecture each afternoon on his trip to Europe to the International Sunday School Convention at Glasgow, Scotland, to the perfect delight, pleasure, and profit of all who heard him.

Arrangements were made for the school to be held at Bethlehem College next year, and every one semed very enthusiastic about it.

The Alabama Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention occupied the last two days of the program, which, though not as largely attended as we anticipated, was no doubt a grand success. Of course, it could not have been otherwise, as many of the same persons that were on the Chautauqua program occupied a place on the S. S. & C. E. Convention program, playing their part as proficiently as before.

In the reorganization of the Convention, Rev. J. H. Hughes was re-elected president, and Henry Lee Swint, secretary and treasurer.

The Sunday morning service was in charge of Dr. J. O. Atkinson, who was up to power in delivering the sermon, as usual.

The closing address was given by Hermon Eldredge, who not only entertained his audience with his delightful stories and teachings of world brotherhood and co-workers together with Christ, but impressed all of their present duty and their contribution to all mankind through the ages to come.

Thus closed the first and very successful Chautauqua and School of Methods, including the S. S. & C. E. Convention, which the Board of Christian Education put on in the Southern extremity of the work of the Christian Church, with a success beyond all of our anticipations.

Bethlehem College will open September 1, 1924. S. L. BEOUGHER.

CLOTHING INDUSTRY BENEFITS.

That the American clothing industry has been greatly benefited by prohibition, is the general opinion of the trade, according to Henry White, former head of the United Garment Workers of America, and now editor of the Clothing Trade Journal, official organ of the International Association of Garment Manufacturers. This journal is published in New York City. Mr. White asserts that the average clothing manufacturer, as well as the worker, knows that prohibition has stabilized the trade, increased sales, and brought about an unprecedented demand for goods of superior quality. Continuing, Mr. White said:

"The shutting off of the legalized liquor supply immediately diverted $2,000,000,000 from booze into useful channels. A goodly proportion of this money has gone into more and better clothing. Sober men deck their wives out decently, buy good garments for their children, and are careful of their own appearance.

"You don't have to go farther than New York City to see the change that has been wrought in this trade, and that can be attributed directly to prohibition. More than 7,000 saloons have been closed. These occupied important corners and were thrown on the market at a time when there was a pressing demand for real estate.

"To my knowledge, more than 200 of these have been taken over by retail clothing and furnishing stores. High wages have given people more money, but the closing of the saloons has shown them how to use it. Cheap materials, ill-fitting and badly cut garments are no longer tolerated. People are willing to pay for good workmanship, and they take pride in being well dressed. Any manufacturer of garments will tell the same story if he is honest about it."—Ex.

ECONOMICS AND GOOD WILL.

The effects of national ill will towards another nation bring results that are not altogether in the realm of morals and ethics. The animosity of one people for another may register serious results in the market-place. As for example, the United States has an annual trade with the Dutch East Indies of about $35,000,000; with China, of about $100,000,000; with Australia, of over $75,000,000; with the Philippines, of about $62,000,000.

But the annual trade figure of goods sold to Japan by the United States is over $328,000,000. That is, our export trade with Japan is within two or three million dollars of all Asia and Oceania combined.

But suppose we incur the ill will of Japan and she goes elsewhere for goods or commodities? Then the ill will becomes involved in the economic life of two peoples. It is not easy to say at this time what the ultimate effect of the exclusion act will be so far as Japan is concerned. There are some very wise and moderate heads in Japan who decry any attempt to boycott America either in her commercial or social relations. But in any case, the fact of ill will which exists and is felt even beneath the polite exchange of diplomatic notes between this country and Japan is a deplorable fact.

It is to be hoped that the friendship between Japan and the United States may not be lessened by any act of ours or hers. We cannot afford to make an economic enemy of her, and she cannot afford to lose our friendship, which, on the part of the people of this republic, is no doubt general.—Ex.

MEASURED BY WHAT HE SOLD.

I bought a sack of coal from that man for the grate, and he urged me to come to their men's Bible class. I found when I got home the sack of coal delivered. It was very undersized, a paltry weight for the money, and the coal in it seemed merely like the fragments cleaned up after the coal has been loaded, mere little worthless truck that slipped through the grate without burning. I had thought at first how nice it was to get an invitation to Sunday School so heartily given, but somehow after I looked at the coal the man sold me, that invitation does not weigh nearly so much. I don't feel much like going to the Bible class he is so interested in.

By such things, does the world weigh and measure us, and justly, too. If our Christianity counts for anything, it should in our business relations, and in our every-day dealing with our fellows. It may have been accidental and an oversight on the part of the dealer, this undersized and miserable sample of coal, but it certainly did not savor of the teachings of Him who bade us give good measure and overflowing. The world has never improved so much or gone so far beyond as to get away from the old standard, "By their fruits ye shall know them." Let us not think that doing a little special work for the Master is going to be acceptable to Him in place of doing our every-day work in the Master's own way.

1922 U. S. FIRE LOSS.

Fire losses in the United States in 1922, totaling $506,541,001, exceeded by millions the amount of the nation's personal income tax receipts for the year, said a report issued by the National Board of Fire Underwriters.

The careless smoker again was found to be the cause of the greater number of fires, the board holding him responsible for a toll of $25,776,951. Defective chimneys and flues caused the next greatest loss, $18,556,433. Fires originating in boilers, stoves and furnaces caused a $16,676,874 loss; spontaneous combustion, $14,594,799; electricity, $11,918,572; sparks on roofs, $11,875,719, and lightning, $11,513,725.

The recorded losses, the report explained, totaled $405,232,801, total for the year being reached with the addition of 25 per cent, as representing unreported fires and those involving uninsured property.

St. Paul was much taken with a good runner in a race, but he also advised his son in the gospel to be another kind of a runner. He exhorts him to flee from the evil which might entice him to do evil. To run away from evil is sometimes the sign of great courage.

MEMORIAL FUND.

Previously acknowledged	$12.00
Rev. J. D. Wicker, Sanford, N. C.	1.00
Mrs. M. A. Walker and Miss Edith Walker, Burlington, N. C.	3.00
Total	$16.00

Bro. Wicker, in remitting his gift, says: "As a Church, we have neglected this memorial all too long, and I very much hope that pastors will mention the matter to their people and that funds shall come in rapidly now. We should certainly put a proper marker to the memory of Rev. Jas. O'Kelly."

Mrs. Walker and Miss Edith, in transmitting their check, write: "It gives us great pleasure to send this small amount toward erecting a proper monument to the great and noble founder of our beloved Church."

The Southern Convention at Norfolk, in May, decided to erect monuments at two historic spots, long neglected by us Christians. One is to be at the site of Old Lebanon Church, Surry County, Va., where all party and sectarian names were discarded by our Church ancestors and the name Christian only was adopted.

The other is the late resting-place of Rev. Jas. O'Kelly, near O'Kelly's Chapel, Durham County, N. C. We should have $2,000 with which to erect suitable markers. What will you give?

COMMITTEE ON MONUMENT.

(Judge J. F. West, chairman, Waverly, Va.; Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, secretary, Durham, N. C.; W. E. McClenny, Suffolk, Va.; J. O. Atkinson, treasurer, Elon College, N. C.)

Send funds to the treasurer, and same will be acknowledged in THE SUN. One liberal friend says if $900.00 is contributed to the Old Lebanon Monument, he will add a gift of $100,00, so as to mark this spot, now one of the most conspicuous on a Virginia State highway, in a manner that will reflect credit and honor upon those who wear the name Christian. That is fine! The way is now open for contributors. The Christians must do this good thing right, now that we have made a beginning.

Joshua was not as great a man as Moses, but he led God's people where Moses could not lead them, and the reason is not far to seek. At Jericho, God sent a divine leader who was to take charge of Joshua and Israel. God can make up for our deficiencies by a heavenly re-enforcement. God and Joshua were equal to any task.

THE MUSIC WORLD.

BY REV. W. W. STALEY, D. D.

III. MUSIC AS AN ART.

The fine arts, architecture, sculpture, painting, poetry, and music are studies for mankind. The first three are productions out of nature of material already in existence, and for the eye; but music and poetry are creations out of the soul of man. All of these arts express beauty and appeal to the aesthetic in man. Poetry expresses beautiful, rhythmical thoughts and feelings in words; music expresses them in harmonious sounds. Music is the finest of the fine arts. Beauty in expression reaches its highest point in sweet sounds. It is the most universal art. More people can play or sing than can write poetry, paint, design houses, or cut forms out of marble. It appeals to the widest and deepest emotions in mankind. Some one has said that "the father of poetry is music, the father of music is rhythm, and the father of rhythm is God." It is the art of expressing the divine in man.

Man is a rhythmic being, born into a rhythmic world, and is at his best when singing God's praise. No doubt, the Greeks were the first to bring music up to a fine art. They were the first, so far as known, to use a musical scale similar to the scale in use at the present time. The Greeks were really the first to develop all the fine arts, and modern seekers after the beginnings of this art of arts naturally turn to the Greeks. In this search are found a few hymns to their gods, which shows that this art has always been a religious art. This seems to prove that religion is inherent in human nature and finds its natural outlet in music. It may be said, therefore, that music is the religious art. Music as an art is universal, and this accounts for the hundreds of musical instruments and songs of all nations and all generations. Sculpture undertakes to carve out of Parian marble a perfect human form. Its expression is physical. Painting seeks to reproduce beauty already in existence in landscape, sunsets, and skies. It creates nothing but the beauty it sees. Architecture creates forms out of material already existing; but poetry and music, twin sisters, go into the realm of the unseen and create new beauties out of the mental and spiritual world.

Music, like all other arts, has had its misuse and reverses; but, like truth, "when crushed to earth, it rises again." During the fourth century, the Church passed through a trying period during the short reign of Julian the apostate. By his own testimony, he was a Christian up to his twentieth year, though he did not proclaim himself a votary of the ancient gods until he was emperor, when he was known as the "Apostate." He attempted to introduce pagan ritual into the Christian Church. This retarded Church music. The philosophy of his day was not the best, even of Greek philosophy, and degraded Greek worship.

The dangers which so many feel for the Church at the present time is only a repetition of past history. Julian's reign was brief (only two years —361-363), but when Ambrose became Bishop of Milan, in 374, he set to work to sift out the irreligious music which had crept into the Church, and to defend the Church against the introduction of Arian worship, proposed by Empress Justina. It will be so again. The Church is measured by her music as well as by her faith. This is the art that reveals the heart of the Church. Heresy and schism, and the inroads of world-powers, endanger the Church, but she will recover herself again and sing the songs of Zion, with pure music and a pure heart. It was through Ambrose that Augustine was brought back from departure from orthodox faith, and largely through the power of music. While the Church has cultivated music, music has cultivated the Church. Where is the heart of music in the cities? In the Churches! Who are the most cultivated people? Those who are musical influence. Music is the art that refines society, cultivates taste, arouses the holiest emotions in the soul, and unites all creeds in praise. A common hymn book does more to unite believers than verbal arguments. All creeds unite in praise when they sing the same songs. Did not some one write: "Let me write the songs of a nation, and I care not who makes her laws?" One might say, "Let me write the songs of the Church, and I care not who writes her creeds."

The Crusades had a marked influence upon music. The Crusaders returned with new musical knowledge from the East. The surge of religious enthusiasm that stirred those movements improved the morality of the times, increased the artistic trend in secular music, improved the folk-songs, and set the world forward in the art of soul-expression for social refinement and religious joy. Saint Augustine confesses to have been converted to Christianity. How many souls have been converted where there was no music? How many souls have been converted outside of the Church? Music is an art that moves men to action. Start the national air, and see how enthusiastic the multitude becomes! Music awakens latent emotions and powers that become conscious under the spell of musical strains. Music has a language of its own.

Music as an art may be social, popular, classical, devotional, or national. It may take any form. It is as elastic as sunshine, and as divine. It may be degraded to common uses, but at its best it uplifts and refines.

Henry III of Poland gave a grand reception at Crascow to celebrate his election to the throne in 1574. The guests marched in solemn procession by the throne to the sound of solemn music. It is thought that the "Polanaise" grew out of this occasion; and it has graced many Polish festivities. The best-known examples of festival marches are Mendelssohn's "Wedding March" and Wagner's "Tannhauser." Festival occasions are not complete without music. No entertainment lives without music, and the Church would die without her hymns of praise.

A CHRISTIAN EDUCATION PILGRIMAGE.

BY HERMON ELDREDGE.

VIII. LONDON SIDE-TRIPS.

One might spend a year in London with a new thrill daily, but our trip is not merely sightseeing, and I think I should describe here a little more fully our schedule and objectives.

In connection with the World's Convention at Glasgow, about fifty delegates elected to extend our trip, through the Temple Tours' management, to the "shrines of freedom" of Europe, visiting the scenes of the great Christian leaders and reformers, and, through study on the ground and daily lectures by Dean Athearn, of Boston University (our leader), we hoped to get an insight into the rise of the Christian Church in a very intimate and helpful way. The plan has been a success beyond our dreams, for two reasons. First, the old historic Churches have been placed at our disposal; and, second, Dean Athearn has been better than we could ask, not only in his daily lectures and interpretations to us in the group, but his willingness, amounting to a passion, to help us personally and intimately, morning, noon and night, en route and at meals, and as we go about, everywhere he has been a very mine of information, for the reason that he has successively taught history, education and psychology and Church history, and has the subjects so correlated that a month with him in this way is worth a year in a university.

Personally, I have now traveled some thousands of miles with Dean Athearn, and sat at his feet hours at a time, and day after day. He and I have (designedly) stood side by side in the pulpits of John Knox, Wesley, John Bunyan, John Robinson of the Pilgrim Fathers, Calvin, Zwingli, and a number of less known great Church pioneers. Then we have heard his lectures in Christ Church, London, and King's Way, and in the old Church of the Austin Friars, in London, where the Protestant movement first began in England, also in Oxford and in Cambridge Universities and in the Church of the Pilgrim Fathers, etc., and in each case being received by the present pastors of these Churches, and talks from them supplementing Dr. Athearn's lectures. Then some pastors have marveled at Dr. Athearn's intimate and full knowledge, and told him that they had received very much indeed from his coming and learned much that they greatly desired to know about the very work in which they were engaged.

In London we took advantage of automobiles and trains to points within one hundred miles of the city and also a day at the great exhibition of the British Empire which is just outside of London, and the mecca of millions of people this year. But this is a story of itself, and must be told at another time.

It may be interesting to give a few very interesting sidelights on our trips about London, and one of them was our delightful trip to Rugby, on the Fourth of July. We really hesitated to leave London for that day, as the American ambassador was to give a reception to all Americans in London on the Fourth. But we decided that it would be a very formal affair, and that an intimate touch with Rugby, where Tom Brown and Headmaster Arnold and his famous son made a great school background for England, was irresistible. We received more—far more—than we had hoped. Dean Athearn's name and company took us out of the hands of the ordinary guide, and the headmaster of the school himself, in cap and gown, personally conducted us through the school, introduced us to the boys, and served us a delightful English tea, at which he both presided and served, and then took us to his own private apartments and to the old "sixth form" room, where Arnold won the allegiance of the boys and made the school what it was. The school was an education in itself, and its system worth another article, but we all left, stating that the headmaster was the biggest and best thing we saw there and that the old words are rue which run something like this: "The problem of education is not the building of the school-house, but the making of the schoolmaster." Arnold was Rugby, and present Headmaster Vaughn is Arnold reincarnated.

Another interesting side-trip was John Bunyan's home at Elston, and his Church at Bedford, where he also was jailed for his religious convictions and where he wrote "Pilgrim's Progress." We visited his old home and the "Moot House," where he danced and afterwards preached. We went to the old tower, where Bunyan, when a lad, mischievously rang the bell and stirred up the old elders of the village. We saw where he was converted, and the old bridge jail where he was held three terms for preaching without a license. We walked with him the mile from his village home to Bedford, where he dreamed dreams by the way, and we stood in reverence in his old pulpit and prayed God that his spirit would never die in the Church. Our Bunyan day was a benediction.

Of course, we must visit Stratford-on-Avon, the home of Shakespeare. We were quartered here at the Red Horse Inn, where Washington Irving spent many profitable and pleasant days, and the old "Irving Room" is still set apart, with all its things of interest. The fine pictures of Stratford do not exaggerate its beauty. The Avon is most beautiful, and its banks and trees and flowers and quaint old buildings and Church make it a picture fair to behold from the old bridge in the town.

The walk along the narrow, crooked streets is equally delightful, and Shakespeare's birthplace is a museum of interest; but if one must skip a hundred things, we must not at least miss a visit to the home of Ann Hathway, where he did his courting and where, afterward, Ann became his wife. The Ann Hathaway cottage is really more than a cottage, and, with its twelve rooms, is more of a stone farm-house. A beautiful garden entrance, with old-fashioned flowers all about the flag-stone walk; the quaint kitchen, with its old utensils; the sitting-room, where Will Shakespeare "sparked" Ann Hathway with a wick in grease light—so dim you did not need to turn it down; the bed-room furniture, with its original braided rush mattresses; the chairs, the mirrors, the spinning wheel, the walls, the windows, the furnishings, and the home and garden, everywhere within and without was of intense interest in its preservation and antique interest. But when your imagination added young Shakespeare and Ann Hathway to the picture, then the measure of satisfaction was full, and there is no erasing the image from the memory.

And, by the way, it is interesting to remember that William Shakespeare, the greatest literary genius the world has produced, and John Bunyan, who wrote the widest read book in the English language, both were the product of common schools and had no higher schooling. This teaches that none need despair even if we cannot have all the greater advantages.

I can only mention the trips to Oxford and Cambridge Universities. Each school have an article, and I can only say here that the study of these training schools of Milton and Newton, and Bacon and Wesley, and hundreds of other great English leaders, and the interpretation of the history and motives and methods of the universities by Dr. Athearn, was a thing never to be forgotten. Out of Oxford came Cambridge, and out of Cambridge, Harvard and Yale, and from them Columbia, and much which influences American religion and education today. We stood in the room and in the lecture rooms of John Harvard, the poor (in purse) preacher who left England's shores and established Harvard College in America to train ministers for the Church. His story of sacrifice and devotion is still an inspiration to his alma mater, and his memory is treasured and his name revered in this old university town.

But time and space will not permit me to tell of Erasmus, at Cambridge, or of the martyrdom of Cramer and Ridley and Latimer, in Oxford, which still caters more to the Tory and Royalist than does Cambridge, although, of course, the distinction is not so great as in the days when they said, with some truth at least, that great souls were "born at Cambridge and burned at Oxford." But it must be said before leaving these great universities with so few words, that while America has much to learn from them yet, our touch with the universities of Glasgow and Edinborough, and Oxford, and Cambridge, makes us think more of American ideals and practices along the lines of discipline and morals at least. Perhaps being Americans, and with our limited contact, we should not say more, but some things we were in touch with were disgraceful, to say the least.

But if we ever get on to Holland, we must close with only a word of mention of our trip to the old Church-yard at Stoke Poges, where the scene of "Gray's Elegy" is laid, and where Dean Athearn read it to us "under the old yew tree's shade." It is a place of beauty and inspiration. It is a shame to pass up our trip to Kenilworth and to Warwick's Castles and to Windsor, the home of the King and Queen of England. But this is a Christian education pilgrimage, and while these places are related to our work, yet they must be sacrificed to more important and direct contributions.

But before we cross from London and follow the Pilgrim Fathers into Holland, we must say at least that we visited Eton School—the training-school of England's nobility—and a memorable trip to Gloucester, where Robert Raikes started the first Sunday School. The pastor of Raikes' old Church personally conducted us to the old historic spots and we sat in the little room where Raikes brought his "ragged regiment" and started his great work. Our pilgrim band decided then and there to begin a world movement for a fitting memorial to this great soldier of the cross, whose work has not been sufficiently honored.

But back to London, and "On to Holland," for time flies.

London, England.

OUR PLEDGES
Men and Millions Sacred, Solemn and Binding.

These obligations were made through the Church to the Kingdom of God and to all that pertains to building up that Kingdom in the world, so far as our Christian Church is concerned. As Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., has so pertinently pointed out: "A Christian can no more drop his pledges than he can drop his prayers or his Church membership. Misfortune may make it impossible to meet financial obligations--'When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both' (Luke 7:42)--but not till 'they had nothing to pay.' Obligations to God are as binding as obligations to men, and God will help those who try to keep their pledges."

Many are making great sacrifices to meet these obligations and pay these pledges. Is your Church on this list? If not, let's do our best to get it there. If there, let's get it in first place.

OUR SPIRITUAL OUTLOOK.

"What lack I yet?"—Matt. 19:20-35.

In the answer to these words, Jesus said to the rich young man, "One thing thou yet lackest." It was apparent to the young man that he did lack something, and Jesus admits it and tells him what it is. It is not his riches, but it is his possessions which were simply barriers to eternal life. He was looking at what he possessed and could not see spiritual things. His trouble was that he had no spiritual outlook—perspective. His vision was blurred and his perspective crowded. Material things were so close to him that spiritual things seemed unreal. Jesus told him that he must get a new point of view, which was, to put God first and other things secondary, and the only safe way to do this was to get rid of them. In order for any one to have eternal life, he must see first the things that are most important.

Prayer.—O Lord, help us not to squander our time or our possessions, or our spiritual perceptions. May we see with eyes of light and devote ourselves to Thee, and make sure of the straight and narrow way that leads to eternal life. Amen.

TUESDAY.

DON'T DROP OLD FRIENDS.

You may be more successful and possibly have advanced far beyond most of your friends of former years. Because these old associates cannot go your pace, owing to lack of money, have you dropped them?

Not unlikely you have made them understand you do not care to continue the same social relations as of old.

You are pretty small, are you not? Those who were your friends when you had nothing, either financially or socially, were real friends.

Now the circle in which you move may be composed of men who have been drawn to you because of your money or your position, not drawn by true loyalty. Don't patronize your old-time friends—don't forget nor neglect them.

If you are true to yourself, you know that your old associates would get a lot of pleasure out of just the thought that you still care. Maintain a friendly spirit toward all. Why shouldn't you have such a spirit and show it? (Copyright, 1924, International Feature Service, Inc.)

WEDNESDAY.

FIGHTING THE BEAUTIFUL FIGHT.

"I have fought a good fight, I have finished the course, I have kept the faith."—2 Tim. 4:2-8.

A modern version of the New Testament suggests the translation of this phrase of Paul as above—"I have fought the beautiful fight." At the battle of Gettysburg, when John Burns asked an officer where he might be of use to the army, the officer replied, "Fall in anywhere; there is beautiful fighting all along the line."

The late Dr. John Clifford, of London, was a militant preacher. One who often fought by the side of Dr. Clifford testifies: "It was always a great comfort to be on the same side with Dr. Clifford, for in a fight you could depend upon it he could both deliver and receive blows; he was never looking around to see how he could get out in case the fight went against him."

It was no easy thing for men like Clifford and Lloyd George to oppose Great Britain's endurance into the Boar War, but they both did it. It was no easy task for Clifford to become a "passive resister," but as a protest against what he believed to be the sectarian use of public funds for education, he suffered many things. Let it not be believed that Clifford was a political preacher. That he was not. But as a minister of the Gospel of Christ, he took it to be his duty to play a man's part in the realm of civil government. Liberally inclined as he was, with a passion to express old truth in modern forms, no one who knew him ever doubted his loyalty to Jesus Christ. The great message of his ministry was the faithful saying of Paul—"that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners."—Rev. C. C. Albertson.

Prayer.—Our Father, on this day give us new confidence for all our duty. Make us brave to face the world for Thee, give us victory over temptation, and make us bold before every foe of our Christian faith. We ask it, with the pardon of all our sin, for Thy name's sake. Amen.

THURSDAY.

FRUITS OF REPENTANCE.

"Repentance (is) unto the knowledge of the truth, and they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil."—2 Tim. 2:14-26.

Let us not spend our lives acquiring knowledge, achieving accomplishments, gaining questionable ideals and standards, and then pigeon-hole it all like an encyclopaedia to refer to for our personal convenience. But let us turn all that we know and have achieved into moral and religious significance, spiritual power and strong worth. The supreme worth of conversion is found in the output of our daily worth, and Paul says it is "love, joy, peace, faithfulness, meekness, self-control." How about the following:

I recall the case of one who was sixty-eight when he joined the congregation which met in a mud-chinked log building on Crooked Fork. For many years he had been seemingly impervious to the call of God. He came forward unexpectedly one Sunday morning after the sermon. Following his profession, there was much handshaking, and many could not, or perhaps did not try, to restrain the tears. In good sooth, why should one try to conceal his pleasure at such a time, for the very angels of God rejoice when the sinner comes home.

But the usual became very unusual as soon as the handshaking had abated. The convert started for the door. "I'm going over the hill and make it right with Henry!" Church folks stood agape. The "Henry" mentioned had been a former neighbor. Years before, the two had quarreled over a line of fence that separated their mountain farms. The man was back to preaching service that afternoon, and Henry, his avowed enemy, but now his friend, was with him.

"I read in the Book, somewhere, that we must bring fruits fitten for repentance," said the man, "so I had to make peace with Henry."

Prayer.—Our Father, Thou art our Rock, and in Thee do we trust; so shall our lives yield their increase and Thy will be done. Amen.

FRIDAY.

TRIUMPHING OVER SELF.

"In honor preferring one another."—Rom. 12:9-11.

In our religious life we sometimes come upon a path that seems narrow and uninviting. But God waits at the end. Listen to a word of experience from a fellow-minister, one who is most truly a man of God.

"Some years ago," said the minister, "my board of officers decided to send for a certain evangelist. Although I did not show it, the proposal threw me into an inward fury. Was not my preaching good enough? But the evangelist came. On every hand I heard his praises. How it hurt, too! What a tyrant jealousy is!

"One whole night I was on my knees battling that spirit of evil. Next day I brought the evangelist to my house for dinner. Still it rankled. In my study I confessed to him and told him how I was striving by God's help to overcome that spirit of envy. We two went to our knees together. Then came the Holy Spirit. That occasion can never be forgotten. It was a joy and peace inexpressible. After that there was happy cooperation on my part. What a revival we had! It was truly Pentecostal!

"But," concluded the minister, "the best is what followed. Within a short time I was called to a larger work. For the first time in my preaching experience I could spare money for books. My happy change came as a direct result of that revival."

Many a successful Church worker could relate some battle with and victory over the baser self. Many who are chronic misfits would find success at the end of the path of self-renunciation, where God waits to bless.—Rev. John Harrison Allen.

Prayer.—O Thou that hearest prayer, grant us acceptance through Jesus Christ. Forgive our transgressions; heal our backslidings and continue to us Thy mercy. Still the tumult of the nations, and send a heavenly peace. Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE COMING OF THE KINGDOM.

"Give diligence to present thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not be ashamed."—2 Tim. 2:1-26.

A drill in the machine shop is intended to do a certain kind of work. Unless the machinist knows how to use it, it is of no service. Unless its mechanism fits and is in perfect order, it will not work. Cog and cog-wheels must fit together in order to turn. Man must know how to apply the power.

If the kingdom of God is righteousness, and that kingdom is within us, then we are the means of the prayers and the coming of the kingdom, and it behooves us to keep ourselves in order and work at the job. Our lives and all that we are must fit with the ideals of the kingdom. When this is the case, the kingdom will come.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, reveal to us Thy way, persuade us by Thy gentleness into life. Increase our faith in Thee, and trust in the teachings of Jesus, who brings all light of the kingdom to our souls. Amen.

SUNDAY.

Mark 2:27.

As is the spirit in man, as is the Lord's Day. You cannot make any day the Lord's Day for a man who has no Lord. You cannot make any day a Sabbath for a man who has no Sabbath in him. While it is true that the Sabbath was made for man, it is also true that the Sabbath must be made in man and by him.

As a day of rest, mere outer rest does not bring inner peace. It takes the spirit within, such as John had when he "was in the spirit on the Lord's Day," to bring the true observance of the Sabbath and to realize the true results. Just in proportion as we are in the Sabbath, the day will be to us rich with a message from heaven, and great with the grace of God.

Prayer.—Our Father, breathe into our souls Thy spirit for the Sabbath today, and reveal to us as Thy Spirit shall what this holy day means. Amen.

STOP, LOOK AND LISTEN!

Wherever a roadway crosses a track,
Where trains roar by and engines back,
Up on a sign-post, high in the air,
Three little elves cry out, "Beware!"
Three little elves who call and call:
"Stop, look, listen, you people all!"

First little elf—his name is Stop—
All dressed up like a traffic cop,
Holds out a big white glove all day—
"Stop, stop, people!" he seems to say;
"Stop! Don't cross till it's safe to try;
Stop, stop, stop, till the train goes by!"

Second small elf—his name is Look—
Squints like a gnome in a picture-book,
Carries a spy-glass, stares all day,
Stares down the track and seems to say:
"Look! Don't cross till it's safe to try;
Look, look, look, till the train goes by!"

Third small elf named Listen—he Wears big ears—one, two and three!
Ears like fans that he listens through,
Listens and listens and calls to you:
"Listen! Don't cross till it's safe to try!
Listen, folks, please, till the train goes by!"

So when you come to a railroad track,
Where trains roar by and engines back,
Just you remember that high in the air
Three little elves cry out, "Beware!"
Three little elves who call and call:
"Stop, look, listen, you people all!
Don't cross the track till it's safe to try;
Stop, look, listen, till the train goes by!"

TWO KINDS OF COURAGE.

John's tooth was aching "something fierce," as he expressed it. He had been suffering all night long, and mother had been up the greater part of the night trying to do something to ease the pain. Nothing had helped, however, and morning found John so tired out and fretful that nothing any one could do or suggest was met with favor.

"It's no use, I tell you," he objected, as mother came to his side with a hot application. "Nothing helps it. I wish you wouldn't bother me with those old things! Nobody knows how it hurts," he moaned. "I just can't stand it much longer, and that's all there is to it!"

Of course, a visit to the dentist was inevitable, and when John was informed that the tooth must be extracted at once he strenuously objected. "I have suffered enough as it is, without having to stand something worse," he declared determinedly, "and I just can't do it."

"Oh, yes you can," said the dentist, confidently. "Why, I hear you are the most courageous boy on the football team. Where is all that courage now, boy?"

It was true John was considered an unusually brave boy; nothing was too hazardous for him to attempt; he was never known to fear, even in very real danger. Where, indeed, was that courage now?

"I don't know," he answered the dentist; "but—but I guess it must take another kind of courage to have a tooth pulled—or bear any kind of hard pain. I must have it about me somewhere, though," he added, "if I can only find it."

John found the other kind of courage all right, and maintained his reputation for bravery. "I only wish," he said to the dentist, when the tooth was out, "I had found this kind of courage last night when I was making mother so much trouble!"

John was right in declaring there are two kinds of courage, or rather, two ways of demonstrating courage. This quality, so dear to the heart of every boy, is never more admirable and respect-compelling than when exercised in real suffering. The bravery that inspired one to refrain from useless complaints and demands upon others, to bear pain patiently and manfully, is courage of the very highest order.—J. P. H., in Presbyterian of the South.

A SNAPPY FROG HUNT.

Walter Greenough.

Johnny an' Lije an' Harrison Tate
Was a-flyin' 'round at an awful rate,
A-fixin' themselves for th' annual stunt,
O' goin' with me on a big frog-hunt.
You see, us boys, for th' last few years,
Has known a place where there's frogs in smears,
In some old, black ponds that a feller dug
When he got th' goldfish-raisin' bug!
So we took a sack an' a long frog spear—
Th' place ain't more'n a mile from here;
An' we wait till dark, on a moonless night,
An' we stick them frogs by an old flashlight.
But last night Johnny an' Lije jest planned
To catch them frogs sort o' underhand;
So they took a net on a big, long pole,
Along with us to th' old frog hole;
An' I throwed th' light on th' fish pond's bank,
An' there was a frog, all green an' dank,
A-sittin' there, with his eyes a-pop,
A-gittin' all fixed for his water-hop!
Well, Harrison Tate jest grabbed that net
An' slammed it over th' frog, you bet!
An' pushed him down in th' pond's mud rim—
An' then all four of us grabbed for him!
Well, we missed th' frog—but we all got gnawed
By a snappin'-turtle some two-foot broad!

Remarkable Hens.

"Talking of hens," remarked the American visitor, "reminds me of an old hen my dad once had. She would hatch out anything from a tennis-ball to a lemon. Why, one day she sat on a piece of ice and hatched out two quarts of hot water."

"That doesn't come up to a club-footed hen my mother once had," remarked the Irishman. "They had been feeding her by mistake on sawdust instead of oatmeal. Well, sor, she laid twelve eggs and sat on them, and when they hatched, eleven of the chickens had wooden legs and the twelfth was a woodpecker!"—Selected.

Her Idea of Drudgery.

A little girl in a poor family has to wash a great many dishes. Some one began sympathizing with her one day, remarking what "drudgery" it must be.

"No," she replied. "It's great fun. I have given every dish a name, and they are all my children—my dolls. I talk to them while I am washing them and drying them. I pretend that I am dressing them. I like to have them all nice and clean. And I'm sure they like me for looking after them so well. It's lots of fun."—B. C. Forbes.

August 31, 1924.

Subject: "Jesus Talks with a Samaritan Woman."

Golden Text: "God is a Spirit: and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and truth."—John 4:24.

Lesson: John 4:3-42.

Devotional Reading: Psa. 25:1-7.

Both were carriers of water. The one was a comparatively young man, wearied by his journey, resting on the curb of a well that had been dug by one of his illustrious ancestors long ago. He had no vessel that would indicate that he was a carrier of water, but in his mind and his heart he had the truth that was the water of eternal life. It was the water which, if a man drank thereof, would spring up as it were a well of water unto eternal life. He was tired, very tired. But even though his outward man was tired, his inner man was constantly being renewed by those unseen but very real spiritual forces that came from immediate contact with God.

The other carrier of water was a woman, perhaps of middle age. She, too, was tired; perhaps not so much in the physical sense as in the sense that she was wearied of the endless task of carrying water from the well to the village, a task that was nothing short of drudgery, because her heart was not in it. She was a machine, without many of the finer human qualities of life, and without that sense of the real values of life that make a difference between existence and living. She was immoral, bigoted, crafty, and ready to welcome anything that would release her from the drudgery of her task. And she had come out to the well, as was her usual custom, to draw water—a regular incident in a colorless life.

But this day was different. What heretofore had been an act of routine and even of drudgery suddenly became the turning point in her life and the inspiration of a service that has come down even to the present day. For on that sultry day at noon, she met that other carrier of water, Jesus Christ, and life took on a new meaning, existence was transformed into abundant living. It is ever thus—he who meets Jesus Christ on the highway of life can never be the same afterward. And to him who does the bidding of the carrier of the water of life, all things become new. Even the old tasks take on new significance, and one becomes conscious of new values in life.

There is not the space here to go into detail in regard to the lesson. But he who reads with an open mind and a prayerful heart will find here truths that will capture his imagination and fire his heart. The religious worker will find here valuable information in regard to personal work. See how Jesus makes a point of contact, how His sympathy and desire to help overleaped all racial barriers and social customs, how he began at things material and led up to things spiritual, how he refused to become engaged in a "theological discussion," ho whe did not hesitate to put his finger on the "sore spot in the woman's life," how he awakened a sense of need on the part of the woman, and how he inspired the woman to go out to do personal work. He who reads this lesson will see at least one of the reasons why Jesus was called the "Master."

Some Suggestive Teaching Points.

1. God's love recognizes no racial boundaries, social customs, nor creedal divisions.
2. Common-place experiences may be turning points in our lives.
3. Man cannot live by bread alone, nor by bread and water, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.
4. An honest desire to help usually finds a way to help.
5. Spiritual things are spiritually discerned.
6. Back of spiritual blindness, there is usually secret sin.
7. Confession and penitence are prerequisites for receiving "the living water."
8. God is a Spirit.
9. Underneath even the crudest and even hardest life, there is a hunger for the things of God.
10. The essential thing is not where God is to be worshiped, but how He is to be worshiped.
11. God wants men to engage in worship and to have fellowship with Him.
12. Jesus Christ satisfies the deepest needs of men.
13. He who has been saved himself ought to become interested in having others saved.
14. It is a good thing to believe what others say about Jesus; it is a better thing to believe in Jesus Himself.
15. Man looketh on the outward appearance, but God looketh at the heart.
16. The time of the harvest is now.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

By William T. Scott.

September 7, 1924.

Topic: "In His Steps. How Jesus Helped Sinners."

Lesson: Luke 15:1-7, 19:1-10.
Consecration Meeting.)

Daily Readings: M., Sept. 1, Forgiving Sinners.—Matt. 9:1-8. T., Sept. 2, Loving Sinners.—Matt. 23:37-39. W., Sept. 3, Saving sinners.—Acts 4:1-12. T., Sept. 4, Dying for sinners.—Gal. 2:20-21. F., Sept. 5, Living for sinners.—Heb. 7:19-28. S., Sept. 6, Patience with sinners.—Mark 5:1-17.

Jesus was accused by His enemies of being a friend to sinners. What a wonderful accusation! Jesus didn't deny it, but rather proved it by associating with them, and, in the end, dying, that they might be saved. Jesus is our model, our guide, and while we cannot go to the limit perhaps as He did we can do what our opportunity avails.

What did the sinners think of Jesus? Why they came to Him, both rich and learned, ignorant and poor, even by night, or whenever opportunity afforded itself. He never disappointed them, either. He removed a suffering. He gave them peace.

"In His steps" should be the resolve of every Christian, and if we follow Him, we too will become the friend of sinners. Not a friend of their sins, but a friend of the divinity, the soul within them. In following Jesus, let us see how He helped sinners and how we may do so.

Jesus helped sinners by knowing their needs. He helped them by believing in them, and by encouraging them. When He told the adulterous woman, "Neither do I condemn thee; go, and sin no more," He gave her the ray of hope that made her want to regain that which she had lost. Jesus helped sinners by showing them their sins, and then by presenting to them the better way of life. As friends and followers of Him, let us know His life among sinners, and then help to show sinners the better way. The greatest way perhaps that we may help sinners today is by living in the right way ourselves, thus proving that that way makes life more joyful.

THE RIGHT KIND OF EDUCATION.

By President Coolidge.

Ignorance is the most fruitful source of poverty, vice and crime, and it is easy to realize the necessity for removing what is a menace, not only to our social wellbeing, but to the very existence of the republic.

It is necessary that education should be the handmaid of citizenship. Our institutions are constantly, very properly, the subject of critical inquiry. Unless their nature is comprehended, unless their value be properly assessed, the citizen falls ready prey to those selfish agitators who would exploit his prejudices to promote their own advantage.

Another element must be secured in the training of citizenship, or all else will be in vain. All of our learning and science, our culture and our arts, will be of little avail, unless they are supported by high character, unless there be honor, truth and justice; unless our material resources are supported by moral and spiritual resources, there is no foundation for progress. A trained intelligence can do much, but thee is no substitute for morality, character and religious convictions.

DOUBLE ROLL DOESN'T GO.

George Kilbert, New York, is wondering if it pays to be a hero one minute and a criminal the next.

Kilbert climbed down from a truck he was driving and swiped four automobile bandits who attempted to hold him up. Without a pistol, and in fact without any weapons, Kilbert climbed down from behind the wheel of his van and simply mopped up the earth with the four bandits. They finally escaped in their touring car. The police came up after the battle was over and congratulated Kilbert on the great work he had performed. Kilbert was modest, and simply said: "It was easy." He seemed impatient to be off, but one of the policemen asked him what he was hauling, and he said that it was a lot of silk and that it was worth $100,000.

And then some one looked into the truck to catch a glimpse of anything worth $100,000, only to discover that the silk was real beer, and the day was hot, too.

So Kilbert again descended from his van, but no longer a hero. He became a prisoner, charged with transporting a truckload of high-powered beer from a Connecticut brewery.—Ex.

Robert Raikes, a Gloucester (England) printer and publisher, in 1780 noticed some urchins playing in the street on a Sunday morning, gathered a number of them together and formed them into a class for private religious instruction. This was the beginning of Sunday Schools.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

The Durham Sunday School pulled off a great picnic on Thursday, August 14th. They came in a special car, two hundred strong, with lunch in abundance, ice cream and ice cold lemonade. The day was ideal in every way, the weather clear, cool and pleasant, the children as happy as mocking birds in the trees.

It seemed that our children at the Orphanage took it for granted that they were all brothers and sisters, and all mingled together and had a big time all day without a single thing to mar the pleasure of the day. The Orphanage management, knowing something of the abundance of the good things the Durham Sunday School brings to eat had prepared a long substantial table in advance to care for the situation, and about 1 o'clock, when the good ladies had filled it to the limit, with good things to eat, it was a thing of beauty as well as a thing to satisfy the appetites of the many little children who gathered around it to satisfy their hunger.

The Orphanage family had a cordial invitation to partake, which was gladly accepted and highly enjoyed. It was really amusing to see how the children enjoyed the ice-cold lemonade. It made the writer think back about forty-eight years ago when he would go with his father to Danville, Va., to sell his tobacco, and the old darkies would come around with a bucket of ice-cold lemonade, crying "Ice-cold lemonade, made in the shade, stirred with a spade—the best lemonade ever made."

I tell you it did look good to a little country boy who had never had a glass in his life, and not a nickel to buy one with. It was awful, wasn't it? When I looked at the little fellows enjoying the lemonade made in the shade of a big oak tree, stirred with the hands of Mr. Cannady, it carried me back to my boyhood days. Then the ice cream too; how they enjoyed it, and how tempting it is to a little fellow to eat his first cone and get back in line for another one. But you could not blame a little fellow, could you?

Then a 6 o'clock lunch again for everybody—good as it was at noon, with plenty and to spare. After we had satisfied their hunger, the swimming pool, with nice fresh water, was turned over to the visitors, and many enjoyed it.

Mr. W. K. Holt, chairman of the board of trustees of the Orphanage, and his good wife, came up to enjoy the day with the visitors. We were happy to have these good people, and hope they will make this an annual affair.

TACKING OR SAILING.

The Almighty was lavish when He scooped out the ten thousand lakes that lie in Minnesota. They are fair emerald brooches that glitter on the bosom of nature up here.

They smile from a thousand little valleys, and laugh the weariness from tired hearts.

Last week I saw an unforgettable sight out on the water. Two sailboats were maneuvering up and down the lake. They were going in opposite directions, but were driven by the same wind.

Life flared up in my brain, and I said: "This is what is occurring everywhere on the earth." Some human boats make headway only under a favoring breeze, and others compel hostile breezes to bear them on their way.

I thought of two lads that grew up in the same community. Both were bright, and each had a good chance. When young manhood came to them, one took the principle of going where the winds of chance took him. The other set his sails to the winds and learned to be a mariner on life's seas. When the years of 35 had come, one of these lads lay in the port of nothingness, blown there by the gale of misfortune. The other was a leading man in the city not far away, and had mastered the uncertainties of life by adjusting his sails.

I know of two farmers who had inherited their land. They both had a good chance—an even chance. Today one is fairly independent, having learned to change his course when hard times and difficulties came. The other is working for his fortunate neighbor, because he could not travel in the teeth of a wind.

There are inner difficulties and storms, personal to teach of us, that not even our husbands or wives know all about. Divine living is learning how to advance the soul and character, no matter what happens.

Many people are able to manage their lives so long as winds and weather favor, but collapse immediately the wind veers to the opposite quarter.

The ability to tack, to turn aside, to make headway in the face of temptations, disappointments, loss of health, failure of fortune, coldness of friends, and sail on contentedly and smiling—that is the divine way of life that humanity must learn.

To me, the constant marvel of Jesus is His ability to make even death an incident in the process of life. Out of the bitterest cup ever put to mortal lips, He drank from it the divine waters of contentment. So may we.

"One ship sails east, another west,
While the self-same breezes blow;
'Tis the set of the sails, and not the gales,
Determines the way they go.
"Like the wars of the waves are the winds of fate
As we travel along through life;
'Tis the set of the soul determines the goal,
And not the winds or the strife."

—Dr. J. W. Holland, in Progressive Farmer.

IS IT NOT THE LAW?

"For no reason that is apparent to me, the question has been asked, as perhaps it will continue to be asked until it has been definitely answered, what views I hold concerning the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment and the statutes passed to put it into effect. Why the question? Is it not the law?

"I would hold in contempt any public official who took, with uplifted hand, an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, making at the same time a mental reservation whereby a single word of that great document is excluded from his vow. An administrative officer is no more entitled to choose what statutes he will or will not enforce than is a citizen to choose what laws he will or will not obey.

"As well might he ask to strike from the Ten Commandments those he was not inclined to keep. Obedience to the law is the first duty of every good citizen, whether he be rich or whether he be poor; enforcement of the law against every violator, rich or poor, is the solemn obligation of every official."—(From speech of acceptance of John W. Davis, Democratic presidential candidate.)

A MAP ON THE WALL.

"Mother, our State is the biggest State in all the world, isn't it? And there is a boy from Alabama visiting Fred Taylor and he says his State is bigger."

"And what did you say to that?" asked Mrs. Phillips.

"I told him he was crazy, for our State is bigger'n all the rest of the world put together.' "

"Son, I see that we must have three good maps in this house, one of our State, one of the United States, and one of the world. And when we do we'll have a good time consulting them on all occasions."

"But why, Ma?"

"Because ignorance does not increase any State, but education within it does increase the world's respect for it."

"What do you mean, Ma?"

"You'll understand some day, dear," she laughed gently.

"I just mean that a map should be in every home and should be often consulted."

BEFORE IT IS TOO LATE.

If you have a gray-haired Mother
In the old home far away,
Sit down and write the letter
You put off day by day.

If you have a tender message,
Or a loving word to say,
Don't wait until you forget it,
But whisper it today.

Who knows what bitter memories
May haunt you if you wait?
So make your loved ones happy
Before it is too late.
The tender words unspoken,
The letter never sent,
The long-forgotten message,
The wealth of love unspent.

For these some hearts are breaking,
For these some loved ones wait;
So show them you care for them
Before it is too late.

NEW UNITED STATES STAMPS.

The government has issued a series of three stamps—1, 2, and 5-cent—in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the settling in New Netherland, now New York State, by the Walloons (the French Huguenots) in 1624.

The 1-cent, which is green, has a picture of the ship New Netherland, which brought the Walloons over. The 2-cent stamp is red and shows the Walloons landing at Albany. The 5-cent stamp, which is blue, has a picture of a market in Mayport, Fla., where another colony landed.

On each of these stamps are the words Huguenot-Walloon Tercentenary, and the dates 1624-1924.

Every native American Indian in this country becomes a citizen of the United States, under the new Indian citizenship act recently signed by the President. The granting of citizenship does not remove the restrictions on Indian lands under government guardianship, the Supreme Court having held that wardship is not inconsistent with citizenship.

Lafayette arrived in New York on August 19, 1824, for the purpose of making a Masonic tour of the United States. He was received with great enthusiasm by several grand bodies and was recipient of considerable attention from his fraternal brethren throughout the nation.

FROM RICO TO HAWAII.

The plantations of the Hawaiian Islands will probably be manned by American citizens from Porto Rico instead of Japanese, as a result of the new immigration bill.

With a population of 1,300,000, Porto Rico has a surplus of at least 400,000 people.

The proposal has been made that army transports carry the surplus Porto Rico labor to the Hawaiian Islands either free or at a nominal fare. There were 5,602 Porto Ricans in the Hawaiian Islands in 1920. The climate and products of Hawaii are quite similar to those of Porto Rico, the natives of Porto Rico being accustomed to raising apples, coffee, sugar cane, pineapples and other products which are common to the two territories.

The Porto Ricans in Hawaii have shown a tendency to remain in agricultural work while all other classes of imported labor, including the Filipino drift to the cities.

The Porto Ricans are unusual in that they are the only people the United States has annexed who have joyously assumed their new relationship. They make excellent soldiers under American training and standards of living. Two regiments in the regular army are made up of Porto Ricans. One is stationed in Porto Rico and the other in the Canal Zone.

The War Department asserts that inasmuch as the Hawaiian Islands were acquired as a military outpost, more attention should be given to the character of the population.

OUR COUNTRY'S POPULATION.

Although a complete government census of the United States is taken only once every ten years, regular annual estimates are made by the National Bureau of Economic Research each year. The latest figures issued by the bureau show that on January 1, 1924, the population of our country was 112,826,000, an increase of almost two million over 1923. The report further indicates that during the latter half of 1923 a net increase of 1,162,000 was recorded, the greatest growth for a six months' period in the history of the nation. This unusual increase is attributed to two factors—the lowest death rate which has ever prevailed during a similar period of time in the country, and to the heavy excess of immigration over emigration.

Large stone slabs which formed the core of the Roman roads in England were in medieval times frequently carried off for building purposes. The using of these ancient roads as quarries accounts for their disappearance in many districts.

Brick-making, the most ancient of all the industries, is today one of the basic industries of the nation, and bricks are composed of exactly the same material and manufactured according to the same principles as the ancient product.

Building a Country Sunday School

By E. L. Middleton.

Mr. Middleton possesses definite qualifications for the preparation of this work. For twelve years after leaving college, he was a day school and Sunday School teacher in a village that had "once-a-week" preaching, with half the membership of the Sunday School living in the open country; while for fourteen years more he has been a State Sunday School secretary in rural State. Mr. Middleton urges the adoption of no novel or revolutionary ideas or methods. He recognizes the place and the value of recognized Sunday School policies and methods, and has prepared a digest of the essentials in a manner plain enough to render it adaptable for use in any rural school. Methods, administration, organization and development are each and all discussed in this book in an eminently practical way.

The price of the book is $1.25. You can order it through "The Christian Sun," 1536 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By Sion M. Lynam.

The Gideons Work.—

Since their first Bible was placed in a little hotel in Montana sixteen years ago, the Gideons, an organization of Christian traveling men, has placed 570,000 copies of the Scriptures in American hotel rooms. Of this number, 40,205 were placed during the last year.

Joseph Conrad Dies.—

Joseph Conrad, the famous novelist, died on August 3d. Conrad has given to the world probably the greatest stories of the sea. He was born in a country practically without a seacoast, and inherited as his mother-tongue a foreign language. He became a sailor and writer of most perfect English. At the time of his death, the novelist was sixty-seven years old.

Fosdick to Leave Presbyterians.—

The British Weekly publishes a communication from Mr. D. Campbell Lee in which he states that Harry Emerson Fosdick is to sever his connection with the First Presbyterian Church of New York City. Mr. Fosdick, according to Mr. Lee, cannot accept the offer of the Presbyterian General Assembly to subscribe to the Westminster Confession. Mr. Fosdick has a number of pulpits open to him, but he has not yet decided which he will accept.

Honor Memory of Author.—

The Tory Hill Meeting House, officially the South Congregational Church of Buxton, Me., has received two collection plates in memory of Mrs. Kate Douglas Wiggin Riggs, the famous author. Mrs. Riggs was president of the Dorcas Society of that Church from which the memorial plates come. The plates bear the initials "K. D. W." and an inscription. This Church is the scene of one of Mrs. Riggs' best stories, "The Old Peabody Pew."

Hymn Writers' Memorial.—

Under the leadership of Mrs. Fannie Barrett Browning, the Olney parish is raising funds to erect a marker to the memory of the two great hymn writers—Newton and Cowper. John Newton served this Church as pastor, and William Cowper worshiped there as a parishioner. "Glorious Things of Thee are Spoken," "How Sweet the Name of Jesus Sounds," "Come, my Soul, Thy Suit Prepare," date from Newton's Olney pastorate. While worshiping there, Cowper wrote, "God Moves in a Mysterious Way," "Jesus, Where'er Thy People Meet," "There is a Fountain Filled With Blood." No memorial has ever been placed in the parish to mark the connection of these two men with the Church.

Boston Students Tour Europe.—

Dean Walter S. Athearn is in Europe this summer, conducting a tour of a class of students engaged in the study of European social conditions, and the history of religious education as exemplified by the leaders in religious thought. Other classes from the same institution are in Europe studying geography and religious art. Boston University gives academic credit for these courses. It is a fine thing when an institution can arrange to give its students first-hand information by travel and instructed leadership.

Relief Committee Closes Work.—

After more than nine years' activity, with a record of many thousands of lives saved, more than four million children fed and clothed, and the distribution of almost one million tons of food in Central Europe, the American Jewish Relief Committee has closed up its affairs and gone out of business. The committee raised and disbursed $63,137,562 during the period beginning shortly after the opening of the World War and continuing to the present.

This committee has a fine record for charity, and the good which it has done is inestimable; but it is encouraging to see that committee and others of its kind go out of business, since such discontinuances of work indicate better days in Europe.

Bombay to Have Prohibition.—

A system of liquor-rationing and a gradual reduction of places where liquor may be sold was adopted by the Legislative Council of Bombay. The measure looks to ultimate prohibition in twenty years. The Commissioner of Excise fought the measure, pointing out the difficulty of enforcing it while all the other provinces had unrestricted liquor traffic. With a vote of forty-five to twenty-eight, the measure was carried.

The people of the East are awakening to the need of safeguarding their youth. They are striving to grow the appetite out of them by a gradual reduction process. It will be interesting to observe the results. It has been suggested that this would have been better for our own country, but we have in entirely now, and to step backward would be a catastrophe indeed.

Merchant Clothes Veteran Preachers.—

Arthur Nash, the Cincinnati clothing manufacturer, who tries to conduct his business according to the Golden Rule, is giving a suit of clothes free to all the retired Methodist preachers of Indiana. Mr. Nash says that there is more pleasure in giving these clothes to these men, who have worn their lives out in service, than there is in selling them to anybody else at a profit.

The world needs more men like Mr. Nash, who would attempt to apply religious principles to their business. We cannot hope for much putting of religion into business until the Church has put some business into its business affairs. An adequately conducted financial system in the Church would compel the admiration and respect of business men, and they would attempt to try religion in their business just as Mr. Nash is doing.

Cause for Another Squabble.—

In Jerusalem, Bethlehem, Nazareth, and Haifa there are hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of property in Churches monasteries, parks and plots of ground which before the war belonged to the Russian Chuch. During the war most of this property was requisitioned by the Turks and Germans, and since the conquest of Palestine by the British, the British government has been occupying them. The Metropolitan Antonine has now arrived on the scene to claim the property, but he is an avowed Tsarist, and opposed to the present order in Russia. Whose the property really is, may yet have to be determined by an international tribunal.

The Church property has furnished many a cause for squabbling. This is merely one more incident added to the list. The British government, now holding the mandate of Palestine, does not wish to relinquish its hold on so much money, especially to one with the political convictions of the Metropolitan Antonine, who is now claiming the property in the name of the Russian Church, which originally owned it.

Norman Thomas Runs for Governor.—

The Socialists of New York are running Norman Thomas, a Presbyterian minister, for Governor of New York. Mr. Thomas has not been in the active pastorate since early war days when his opposition to the course of the Churches as a Socialist led him to resign his pulpit. As a leader in the Fellowship of Reconciliation, he has done much to shape Church opinion during post-war days. He was editor-in-chief of the Leader during its brief career as a Socialist daily, and is now on the staff of the Nation. It is interesting to note that Lieutenant-Governor Geo. R. Lunn, New York, is also a Presbyterian minister who drifted into politics as a Socialist during the war.

Back in the days when Mr. Thomas and Mr. Lunn were resigning their pulpits, we condemned them for opposing the course which the Churches were pursuing; but now most of us understand that they were right and we were wrong. Never again must the Church of Christ back a nation in any war. Patriotism, however dear, is not enough to cause men to turn their backs on the principles of Jesus.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Dr. Atkinson preached at our Elk Spur Church on August 24th. He writes that our mountain work is in a flourishing condition.

Rev. R. A. Whitten, of Columbus, Ga., is changing his residence to Greensboro, N. C., where his correspondents will address him.

We understand that splendid revival services are being held in various sections of our Church. Let the brethren report for THE SUN promptly.

Many friends are urging a concerted effort to found a suitable memorial for Dr. W. S. Long at Elon College. We can think of nothing more appropriate and trust the movement may largely succeed.

Elon opened for her thirty-fifth session on September 3d. Prospects were fine. THE SUN regrets that any of our young people go elsewhere to college when we have such an excellent one of our own.

Mr. Wallace Elden Miller, 38 Henrietta Street, Asheville, N. C., and president of the Asheville Law School, was a pleasant visitor to Elon last week. He is anxious that we found a Christian Church in Asheville.

Deacon Otis S. Boyd, of our Pleasant Grove (Va.) Church, was buried there on last Tuesday, August 19th. Bro. Boyd was a good, true man and faithful adherent and officer of the Church. Many will deeply mourn his loss.

Dr. W. S. Alexander will be duly installed as pastor of the college Church on Sunday evening, September 7th, at 8 o'clock. Dr. Alexander's wide experience in pastoral and in college work fit him eminently for this position of great responsibility as also of great opportunity.

The Herald of Gospel Liberty has brought out a "Christian Publishing Association Number" that certainly is impressive. The cut of the new publishing house is fine, and we rejoice at the progress of our publishing interests. Congratulations to Editor Kerr and to the C. P. A.

The great Skinner organ of the Whitley Memorial Building is to be formally presented in public concert on the evening of September 5th. Mr. Louis Potter, organist to the Presidents, is to be the artist. This is said to be the finest organ in any Southern college. Our friends are invited.

Rev. and Mrs. S. M. Lynam are now on their way to Wadley, Ala., where they are faculty members of Bethlehem College. THE SUN predicts for them a large and worthy service there. Bro. Lynam will continue to furnish each week his illuminating comments on the current events of the time.

Dr. N. G. Newman, who has served Elon Church so faithfully for the past seven years, has moved to Holland, Va., to resume his residence in the parsonage he vacated twelve years ago when he became college pastor at Defiance College. He will be pastor of our Holy Neck congregation. Happy pastor—happy people!

Rev. J. E. McCauley has just concluded a very successful revival at his home Church, Damascus, and next week is to hold the meeting for Pleasant Ridge (R). He brought in two young people for Elon today and signed them up. He will re-enter Elon this fall to pursue his M. A. degree in the department of Christian education.

The big editor is vacating in the western part of North Carolina these days. He and Dr. C. H. Rowland, with a colored cook and porter, are "Fording" and fishing, sleeping in tents, and trying to rest. The little editors are responsible for this issue, and all its defects are "theirn." We hope the big editor will greatly enjoy himself.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN is the recipient of a neatly printed program of the Webster Community Christian Church, giving the order of the cornerstone laying, dedication of bell and dedication of Church. The exercises took place August 23-24, 1924. Here is wishing much success to the pastor, Rev. Milton W. Sutcliffe. Our readers would appreciate a full account of the exercises.

Organ recital is to be given at Elon College auditorium on September 5, 1924, at 8 P. M. On this occasion the largest Skinner organ in any Southern college will be formally opened to the public of music-lovers. At the suggestion of Elon College, you, with your family and friends, are cordially invited to honor this great musical event with your presence. We promise you a concert you will never forget.

"Japan is at this moment holding actual army maneuvers, yet the world does not tremble. Last year France mobilized her whole disposable force on the Swiss frontier, yet Italy was not afraid. Today the British empire holds a million armed men. France has a standing army of 720,000 and has trained 2,000,000 men under twenty-five years of age since the armistice. Russia has a million and a half men constantly under arms. Opposed to this is the insignificant number of 125,000 men maintained by the United States. And yet there are those who say that for the citizen members of the skeleton military organization of the United States to assemble on September 12th, is to rattle a sword in the face of the world."

This is given not to paliate the doings of our government, but to suggest that wrtiers for the public press give the people the facts.

The Chapel Hill Weekly has this to say about the home-coming at our Damascus (N. C.) Church on August 17th:

"Damascus Church, a few miles west of Chapel Hill, had the biggest meeting in its history last Sunday. It was a home-coming in honor of the former pastor of the Church. Eight pastors of Christian denomination were present—Rev. W. W. Staley, former president of Elon College; Rev. W. C. Wicker, Rev. B. J. Howard, Rev. A. T. Banks, Rev. P. T. Clapp, Rev. John S. Carden, Rev. J. E. McCauley, and Rev. O. D. Poythress. All of these except Mr. McCauley and Mr. Poythress, have served as pastors at Damascus.

"Mr. Staley delivered the sermon in the morning, and in the afternoon Dr. Wicker related the history of the pastors from John Wilson, who founded Damascus, about 1793, to the present occupant of the pulpit, Mr. Carden.

"At noon a feast was spread on tables in the grove. Beef, mutton, chicken, vegetables and fruits, cakes and pies—every sort of food was there in abundance, and right heartily did the crowd attack it. Not only the people of the neighborhood flocked to the gathering, but scores of automobile parties came from Chapel Hill, Durham and other places. A group photograph of the descendants of John Wilson—three or four dozen of them—was taken after the dinner."

TUBERCULOUS PATIENTS MAKE GAIN.

"Those people at the sanatorium may have tuberculosis, but they certainly do put on flesh after they go there," is a remark which is often made by visitors at the State Sanatorium.

Recently one woman made a gain of 9 pounds in two weeks. This is exceptional, but gains of 4, 5 and 6 pounds a week are not unusual, and gains of 1, 2 and 3 pounds a week are the usual thing. After a period of six or eight months' treatment, it is not uncommon for patients to go away from the sanatorium weighing 20, 30 or even 40 pounds more than on admission. One woman gained 79 pounds while taking treatment at the sanatorium.

Of course, every patient does not make these splendid gains, but the average patient, given the rest cure with nourishing food and plenty of milk, other things being equal, soon makes an excellent gain in weight. This is not always a sure indication of recovery from tuberculosis, but it is a very good sign that the patient will recover. However, to put on a lot of surplus flesh is not necessary for a patient to get well of tuberculosis. Formerly it was thought beneficial for tuberculous patients to eat large quantities of raw eggs—very few sanatoria now give raw eggs to their patients. To gain back to normal weight and not to put on surplus flesh is the ideal method of gain.

MEMORIAL FUND.

Previously acknowledged	$16.00
Hon. I. W. Pritchard, Chapel Hill, N. C.....	2.00
Mr. & Mrs. J. D. Luke, Suffolk, Va.....	2.00
Total received to August 30th.....	$20.00

Bro. Pritchard, in remitting his gift, says: "In addition to the enclosed, I will give $50 to the O'Kelly Monument Fund if the committee will place it at Elon College."

Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Luke, in sending their gift, say: "We have been thinking of sending our donation for weeks, but have put it off from neglect. We count it a great privilege to be contributors to such a worthy cause and name as 'Christian' and 'O'Kelly.' May the people of our Christian Church not forget the founder, of whom we are very proud. We hope the day will come when the members of our Church will tell the world of the real purpose of its founding."

We are grateful for these gifts. Let others send in as rapidly as they will. The committee is preparing to act in the matter as soon as the funds are on hand.

The Southern Convention at Norfolk, in May, decided to erect monuments at two historic spots, long neglected by us Christians. One is to be at the site of Old Lebanon Church, Surry County, Va., where all party and sectarian names were discarded by our Church ancestors and the name Christian only was adopted.

The other is the late resting-place of Rev. Jas. O'Kelly, near O'Kelly's Chapel, Durham County, N. C. We should have $2,000 with which to erect suitable markers. What will you give?

COMMITTEE ON MONUMENT.

(Judge J. F. West, chairman, Waverly, Va.; Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, secretary, Durham, N. C.; W. E. McClenny, Suffolk, Va.; J. O. Atkinson, treasurer, Elon College, N. C.)

Send funds to the treasurer, and same will be acknowledged in THE SUN.

REV. J. W. ELDER.

The following brief note brought the sad news to THE SUN:

"Wadley, Ala., Aug. 25, 1924.

"Dear Brother,—My brother, Rev. J. W. Elder, Pisgah, Ala., will be buried today. Very sad. Fraternally,

"H. W. ELDER."

This was followed by the following on August 27th:

"Dear Brother,—Am writing to advise that I have just returned from North Alabama, where I conducted the funeral of Rev. J. W. Elder, which sad event occurred at Pisgah, Ala., Monday, 25th. It was indeed a very sad occasion, as I am sure you will realize. Our people up there are very sad at the loss of their pastor, but the great Church will rise in faith and help them out. Bro. Elder's wife is in a very feeble condition, and her friends are very anxious for her.

"Fraternally,

"G. D. HUNT."

This wasth e first news THE SUN has had since two weeks ago, when it was learned that Bro. Elder had been carried to a hospital in Chattanooga, Tenn., to undergo an operation for the same trouble that proved fatal to the late lamented Dr. Barrett. We do not have the particulars as to whether Bro. Elder ever rallied from the operation or went immediately after the ordeal. The very sad fact faces us that another one of our very useful, capable and faithful ministers has fallen on sleep and gone to his reward. While not as widely known among the brotherhood as his brother, Rev. H. W. Elder, of Richland, Ga., who is a member of the Mission Board of the Southern Convention, Bro. J. W. Elder was an able minister of the Word, of modest disposition, but a man of great faith, tireless energy and undaunted courage. When the brethren of our Alabama Conference wanted a man to open up our cause in Northern Alabama and build there in a solid and sound way and in a manner that would mean surea nd steady growth in the future, all eyes and hearts turned to Rev. J. W. Elder. With great sacrifice he went, and in wisdom he has wrought so securely that he has established a work at Pisgah and in the surrounding community that he has won the loyal support of all who are acquainted with the situation.

In the going of Bro. Elder, the Alabama Conference has lost a wise counselor, a safe leader, a clear thinker, and one of its best and most beloved ministers. It will be difficult to find one to take his place and fill up the gap caused by his untimely death. We knew him personally and had the profoundest respect for his judgment and his wisdom and his unassuming spirit of self-sacrifice and devotion to his Church and the Lord's cause. Surely a man of God has gone to reap the reward of faithful sowing.

RESPECT OF RIGHTS.

Quite apart from, but most pertinent to, the great array of opinionsc oncerning the profit or loss of the annual report of the Institute of Arts and Sciences of Columbia University. This is to the effect that since the war there has been an immense increase of interest in education, and especially in the education of adults in social and economic subjects of national and international importance, says an Eastern exchange. Men and women of mature years are flocking to colleges and universities in unprecedented numbers, to study history, economics, international law and other things which were suggested by the war, or knowledge of which will better fit people to deal intelligently and efficiently with the issues involved in both war and peace.

This report is based upon actual statistics, and is to be accepted as correct. That it indicates a great gain for civilization, and for national and international welfare, is obvious. We may couple with it, too, another report which was recently made upon equally good authority, of an enormous revival of interest among undergraduate college students in the classics and the humanities. This also is a result of the war; a reaction against the too great subordination of those studies to "practical" sciences which had long been characteristic of German education and which produced in great measure the state of mind in Germany which made the war possible.

It is a most lamentable confession, that so great a catastrophe as the war was necessary to effect this revival of interest in education. But there can be no question of the value of the revival, both for its own sake and for the influence which it must have toward the maintenance of peace. An ounce of sound instruction in national and international affairs is worth more than a ton of pacifist sentimentality. "Men, who know their rights, and, knowing, dare maintain," were described by the poet as "what constitutes a state," and the poet's vision was true. Men who intelligently know their rights as citizens of their own State, and who know what are the rights of the citizens of other States, will be the first and the strongest to maintain their own rights and equally to respect the rights of others. Universal respect of rights is the strongest possible bond of peace.

MUSCLE SHOALS DAM TO BE BUILT.

That Alabama iron and steel, handled from the ore beds to the finished product by local enterprises, will be used for the entire operating mechanism of the great Wilson Dam, at Muscle Shoals, should be an inspiration to every ambitious community of the South, is the view of J. C. Williams, manager of the Southern Railway system's development service, in commenting on the award of this contract to a Birmingham manufacturing concern.

Fifty-eight gates and the operating machinery, requiring over 1,500,000 pounds of cast iron and steel, are to be used, and every bit of the work will be done in Alabama plants.

"This is a splendid example," said Mr. Williams, "of what can be done in the South in the way of converting raw materials into finished products instead of sending them away in the crude state to furnish the basis of profitable industry in other sections.

"The concern which secured this contract was a pioneer manufacturer of Corliss engines and other machinery in the South, and its products have gone into export trade as well as to many parts of the United States. It also has built marine engines, mine hoists, and sugar-mill machinery, giving a varied output for which there has always been enough demand to keep its plant busy.

"Only by such enterprise and self-reliance on the part of Southern business men will the South be able to take full advantage of its wonderful natural resources. Likewise, the only sound basis for a permanent foreign trade through our Southern ports is the development within the South of industries which will import foreign raw materials and combine them with native products in the manufacture of articles for which there is a demand in foreign countries, particularly Cuba and other West Indian and South American markets, which lie at our door."

A GOOD REPORT.

On account of the absence of our corresponding secretary, our baptismal services of last Sunday (August 17th) has not been reported to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. I baptized seventeen young people that I am certain any Church might well be pleased to enroll as members.

The president of our ladies' aid told me she had heard several parties make the statement that it was the most impressive service of the character that it had even been their privilege to attend. So I trust we are going along fairly well.

Oun Sunday School record shows a steady gorwth in our school, and our Christian Endeavor is doing the best work, I am told, that it has ever done.

Now, you can just shape up this little writing according to your own liking, and perhaps it will be a stimulus to some other place to do its best.

AN APPRECIATION.

THE SUN is a weekly visitor at my home, subscribed to by my wife, Mrs. Bakwell. I have been a reader of it for quite a while, but not until recently have I been so interested from reading THE SUN's "Observatory." Recently I went with a group of the Durham's Layman's Federation to a Church of which Rev. Sion M. Lynam is pastor. After hearing this earnest, consecrated man, in which he portrayed so beautifully the gospel, having for his subject "The Universality of Jesus," and having met this man of God and his wife, I feel a new interest in reading what he pens in this paper. Your Church as a denomination should be congratulated in having such good men to help further the cause of our Christ. Respectfully,

Durham, N. C. W. B. BAGWELL.

RESPECT BROUGHT BY PROHIBITION.

Prohibition has been wonderfully successful. It has brought a new freedom to millions and a new dignity and respect to the race. It is expected that the hotel proprietors of the United States are opposed to either repeal or modification. John M. Howie, chairman of the educational committee of the American Hotel Association, recently declared:

"The prohibition law raised the hotel proprietor from the level of a saloon-keeper and placed him on a level with any other legitimate business man. His business today is better than ever before. Last year, hotels costing $250,000,000 were built in the United States. During 1924, $600,000,000 will be spent for hotel structures."

NOTICE.

To any Church or Churches who have not secured a pastor for the coming Conference year:

I will be glad to correspond or to hold a service for you if you choose. I expect to engage in full-time Church work if the Lord so opens up a field of labor for me. I will be glad to learn of any Church or Churches that have not called their pastor for next year. If you will give me an appointment, I will be glad to come to your Church and worship with you.

Yours in the Master's cause,

W. C. MARTIN.

One hundred years ago, in 1824, Lafayette made his famous visit to the United States. It was in truth a Masonic pilgrimage. He was feted by Masonic grand bodies throughout the country and was the recipient of many honors from the fraternity. His birth on September 6, 1757, will be honored. His eldest son was named George Washington Lafayette. Lafayette, according to Masonic tradition, was made a Mason in one of the lodges in the Continental Army. Upon his return to Paris after the war, he became a member of Union Lodge of that city.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

ETHICAL IDEALS OF AMERICAN YOUTH.

Dean Walter S. Athearn, of the Boston University School of Religious Education and Social Service, gave one of the most remarkable addresses ever heard at an Elon commencement at our recent commencement. One of the most impressive features of his address was his discussion of the ethical ideals of American youth based on carefully prepared tests applied to selected groups in various cities. The results reported were astounding, which we summarize as follows:

Various Biblical knowledge tests have revealed an astonishing ignorance of Biblical history and literature on the part of American children. In a recent test gven to thousands of children in various sections of a typical Midwestern State, Biblican knowledge and ethical judgment were tested. The results showed that there was practically no relationship between Biblical knowledge and moral sanctions. A surprisingly large proportion of the children tested gave assent to the following statements in preference to opposite ideas which were before them for selection.

It is not wrong to steal from one who has secured his money dishonestly.

It is more honorable to have charge of an office than it is to work at a trade.

Unnecessarily failing to keep an appointment is not immoral or un-Christian.

It is true that our duty is greater to secure justice for the people of our own race and religion than for others.

It is not the duty of a pupil to call the teacher's attention to the fact that he has given him too high marks.

It is true that if a storekeeper gives you too much money in change it is all right to keep it, because he would probably do the same if you paid him too much.

Another series of tests shows not only the ethical ideas of American children and youth, but their ethical conduct as well. Those tests sought answers to such questions as to the following:

Can the subject be trusted not to steal an object which appeals to his interest and cupidity?

Can the subject be trusted to make a sincere effort to return a lost article to its owner?

Can the subject be trusted not to cheat in a game?

Can the subject be trusted not to cheat in an examination?

Can the subject be trusted to refuse credit that is not due him?

Can the subject be trusted to stick to a point when he knows he is right?

Can the subject be trusted to refuse help in the solution of a puzzle when he has been instructed to try to solve it independently?

Can the subject be trusted to return borrowed property according to promise?

Can the subject be trusted not to accept overchange?

Can the subject be trusted not to accept a tip for trifling courtesy?

Can the subject be trusted to perform a task exactly as it was given him to do?

Can the subject be trusted to work faithfully at an assigned task when there are other interests to distract him?

Can the subject be trusted to make true statements in regard to his knowledge?

Ingenious tests were devised by which groups of boys and girls were subjected to scientific observation as they reacted to perfectly normal and, to them, usual situations which gave them opportunity to reveal by their actions whether or not they could be trusted to act morally in the various situations just enumerated. Their scores of eleven groups are as follows:

Group.	Amt. Training.	Avg. in Test.
Private school	None	59.5
Boy Scouts	Just organized	60.5
Boy Scouts	Just organized	58.1
Boy Scouts	Six months	80.4
Private school	None	75.0
Camp Fire Girls	Four months	62.2
Private school	None	78.2
Boy Scouts	Two years	82.3
Public school	None	56.8
Boy Scouts	Just organized	42.1
Boy Scouts	Just organized	53.4

(These scores in no way indicate the relative moral status of the Boy Scouts, Camp Fire Girls, public or private schools. The curricula and the methods of these organizations and institutions were not subjected to comparative evaluation.)

These scores, which are representative of the scores for similar groups in many sections of the country, show that a very large percentage of the rising generation will steal and lie and cheat under very slight temptation. It is encouraging to be able to report, however, that these same groups after a few months of systematic moral training, very greatly improved their moral conduct. The children act as they have been taught, or as society has let them teach themselves. Honesty, truthfulness, industry and the other essential virtues of the moral life can be taught until they control conduct so completely that men and women will not yield to any temptation to depart from the paths of moral rectitude. Groups under my own supervision have been able to show remarkable improvement. In one of my week-day religious schools, every child cheated in his examinations—it was the accepted practice in the public school of the locality; after one year of systematic moral and religious instruction, not a single child cheated. Sixty-four per cent of these children returned inaccurate change at the beginning of the year and all but one returned correct change at the end of a year of instruction. My tests show that improvement is much more rapid and much more permanent when moral instruction is accompanied by religious sentiments and concepts. These tests furnish conclusive evidence that virtue can be taught so that it controls conduct—but that both the Church and the State are failing lamentably as teachers of morals and religion.

Juvenile Delinquency.

The foregoing tests show clearly that a very large percentage of our American youth will commit crimes when tempted to do so. Can the American youth be trusted not to steal? Have State and Church effectually taught the sacredness of property? Has the commandment, "Thou shalt not steal," been learned by American youth? These questions have been answered by the National Security Company of New York. Based upon the crime record of the past few years, this organization estimates that there will be $3,000,000,000 worth of property stolen in the United States during the next twelve months. This enormous sum is distributed as follows:

Nature of Theft.	Amt. to be Stolen.
Stock frauds	$1,000,000,000
Miscellaneous financial crimes	1,000,000,000
Credit frauds	400,000,000
Burglary, larceny and petty theft.	250,000,000
Embezzlement	100,000,000
Forgery	100,000,000
Seaport robberies, piracies and custom frauds	100,000,000
Railroad freight thefts	25,000,000
Home building frauds	25,000,000

Who will steal this large amount of property this year? The answer is clear—the boys and girls who have not been taught honesty by the home, the State and the Church. We are spending over $600,000 a year to hire soldiers to guard our mail sacks on railroad trains. The United States Chamber of Commerce is financing a bureau which has for its specific function the stimulation of training in honesty. But dishonesty is only one of many of our social crimes. More than fifteen thousand persons will die this year in the United States by murder and homicide. It has been estimated that it would take three hours for a procession of those who are to die by murder and homicide in our country during the next twelve months to pass a given point. The sacredness of life has not been effectively taught to the American people. The command, "Thou shalt not kill," goes unheeded, because education in religion and morals has been inadequate.

A significant survey of the ages of criminals in a typical American community has recently been made by Hon. Wm. T. Romy, prosecuting attorney for Marion County, Ind. This county includes the city of Indianapolis. Mr. Romy compares the ages of persons convicted of major crimes (not juvenile offenses) punishable by death or penitentiary imprisonment in the year 1913 and in the year 1923. The following statements are taken from his report, giving the crime, the age of criminal in 1913, and the age of criminal in 1923, respectively:

Burglary—29 years, with only 16 per cent 21 years or under; 21 years, with 90 per cent under 25, and 55 per cent under 21.

Robbery (including hold-up men, bandits, etc)—28 years, only one under 21 years; 21 years, with 88 per cent under 25 years and 71 per cent under 21.

Grand larceny—29 years, with 13 per cent under 21 years; 23 years, with 94 per cent under 25, and 81 per cent under 21.

Vehicle taking—No statute covering this case in 1913; 19 years, with 96 per cent under 25, 85 per cent under 21, and 51 per cent under 18.

Embezzlement—29 years, with 12 per cent under 21 years; 29 years, with 40 per cent 21 years or under. (The average for 1923 was brought up by 2 men, aged 76 and 64, respectively.)

Bigamy and wife and child desertion—32 years, none under 21 years; 28 years, 11 per cent under 21.

It is clear from this report that our most brutal crimes are not being committed by soldiers of the World War who acquired vicious habits while in the service of their country, but by boys who were in knee trousers when the World War was in progress. The recent war probably did more harm to the morals of the boys who remained at home than it did to those who were in the service. These lads who are our criminals today were on the sidewalks when the khaki-clad soldiers marched away to war. War imagery filled their young minds; they built mental pictures of airship raids, heroic deeds, etc., and their imaginations were stimulated to like actions. In the excitement, the moral laxity, and the parental neglect of this period feverish vision motivated the conduct of adolescent youth. The moving-picture shows displayed gunplay and other types of response which gave visual stimulus to impulses for heroic and dangerous acts.

What would a boy or girl see who attended the movies during recent years? Here is the result of a survey which was made by a committee of educators who are interested in moral and religious training of children. The films exhibited in a typical city for a given period were analyzed. In the 404 films exhibited, the following qualities were noted:

Negative Elements.	No. Times.
Marriage intrigue and unfaithfulness	117
Divorce as a remedy for all the ills or inconveniences of marriage, or as a step to another marriage	38
Realistic struggle of girl or woman to defend her honor	113
Social or individual drinking, with approval	140
Girls or women smoking, with approval	82
Immodest dress	172
Undue personal familiarity between sexes	192
Interior of gambling dens, houses of ill-fame	124
Tense, nerve-racking scenes	223
Indecent dancing scenes	97

Negative items frequently observed, but not included in survey:

Suggestive bed-room scenes.
Crime portrayed in minute detail.
Human tragedies, such as suicide, presented for the solution of human problems.
Law or law enforcement held up to ridicule, or the evil hero or heroine made attractive and victorious.
The ministry or Church held up to ridicule.
Gross vulgarity or obscenity.

Positive or Desirable Elements Observed in 35 Out of 404 Films.

The portrayal of fine qualities, such as kindness, generosity, obedience, courage, etc., in a normal, wholesome, attractive manner, and in carrying out a genuine social purpose.
Fine and attractive types of home life.
Normal, wholesome relationships, viz: husband and wife working together happily for a worthwhile end; parents and children having a good time together; relation of pupil and teacher shown as a worth-while one, etc.
Good stories for children, such as fairy stories, child life, animal life, adventure, nature stories carefully selected, Bible stories, etc.
Wholesome fun and play in its different forms
Conditions of health and similar educational matters.

The surveyors report the following as typical of the reactions observed by them while the various films were being exhibited:

"A graphic murder scene was being enacted. A child of about 4 or 5 began to scream, 'Oh, mamma, let's go! Oh, mamma, let's go!' The mother, with difficulty, silenced the child and remained until the end of the picture.

"Thirty or forty boys of about 9 to 13 years of age sat together near the front of a theater. When the villain, who was also the hero of the picture, struggled with a policeman and finally struck him senseless to the ground, the boys broke into vehement and prolonged applause. On a similar occasion, in addition to the clapping of hands, the boys shouted, 'Down the cop! Down the cop!'

"A picture showed a father who was not an especially high type of manhood, it is true, yet the observer was conspicuous of shock when a shrill chorus of children's voices applauded the young son who struck his father down."

Without question, we have here a potent contributing factor to moral delinquency.

There is undoubtedly a close relationship between the ethical ideas and conduct discovered in the examination of the children and youth in the schools and the high percentage of crime revealed by the court records just cited. Crime is preventable by moral and religious education. Education for efficiency must be supplemented by education for righteousness. The efficient will must be controlled by the good will, if society is to be secure.

Tests have recently been made to show what religious ideas are really present in the minds of children and youth in our public and Church schools.

These tests attempted to get answers to the following questions:

What is the purpose of the Church?
Why should we study the Bible?
Why should we pray?
How do you think of Jesus?
How do you think of God?
How do you think of the Holy Spirit?
What does it mean to be a Christian?
How does one become a Christian?
What is sin?
What do you think happens after death?

Two facts have been revealed by the use of this test in connection with moral conduct tests: (1) The Church is not succeeding in giving the youth of the land adequate religious concepts; and (2) wherever Christian ideas are properly taught they have a direct relationship to high, moral conduct.

As evidence of the spiritual illiteracy of the children and youth of America, I present the foregoing facts, showing:

1. Millions of children and youth unreached by the educational program of any Church.
2. The low level of ethical ideas in selected samples of American youth.
3. The high susceptibility to immoral conduct of typical groups of American youth.
4. The inadequate teaching of Biblical knowledge and religious ideas as shown by tests in typical sections of the nation.

We feel sure these facts will be food for thought on the part of our readers, and we earnestly pray that they may set our people definitely planning for methods of redeeming our young people. One way we point out without hesitation is to patronize our own denominational colleges.

"NATIONAL DEFENSE DAY."

As voiced in THE SUN, editorially, two weeks ago, the so-called "National Defense Day" named for September 12th, seems, the more we think of it, to be a piece of supreme folly, to use the mildest possible term. It is to be devoutly hoped that CHRISTIAN SUN readers will pay not the first attention to it or indulge in any of its pomp or display. It is the outcome, and an expression of, the militaristic spirit, and that spirit is one that makes for war, rather than against it. To be perfectly frank, the day seems ill named and the whole affair out of date. Take the name, "National Defense Day,"—what is this nation planning to defend itself against? We can think of only one need in this direction, and that is to defend ourselves against the militaristic spirit and against all war and all signs of war. We were told again and again during the World War that our soldiers were giving their lives on the other side to end all war and to make future wars impossible. Have our sons and brothers died in vain? and so soon after their going, and while we are yet in sorrow over the whole bloody, ghastly spectacle, are we to have other sons and brothers under military command, parading before our eyes, and preparing us for another, even a worse, bloody debauch?

Let SUN readers bear in mind that it is the prepared nations that precipitate war and drench battlefields in blood—the more the nations prepare for war, the more likely they are to have war.

The reason why Germany precipitated a World War was because of its infinite preparation for war and its continued development of the spirit of militarism. It is well known that our present forces in arms is more than sufficient to defend us from the attack of any nation or nations that might be simple and silly enough to sail the seas to attack us. Put it down that somebody has made a blunder, and that the spirit of militarism for the time being has gained the ascendency and is seeking a display and outburst of its prestige and its power.

Again we counsel CHRISTIAN SUN readers, one and all, to go about their accustomed occupations on September 12th, and with no sort of observance of a day which the military powers, from our point of view, are seeking to desecrate before our faces.

BEATITUDES PARAPHRASED.

My friend, Mr. H. M. Magee, of Winston-Salem, has sent me the following paraphrase of the beatitudes. He aimed in this paraphrase to interpret the spirit of the Sermon on the Mount and to phrase it in language for the man in the back pew. His paraphrase follows:

1. To secure citizenship with God, fill your soul's need.
2. To be comforted, quit making mistakes.
3. To share God's protection, be unassuming.
4. To be satisfied, be eager for right living.
5. To secure forgiveness, be kind.
6. To understand the Creator, be genuine in character.
7. To enjoy fellowship with God, be peacemakers.
8. To hold companionship with God, or infinite power, defend Jesus' teaching.
9. To insure everlasting happiness, bear abuse for following Jesus.

These beatitudes are an analysis of well being, given us by Jesus to correct all low views of human happiness.

Whatever you want your neighbor to do to you, be the first to do it to him under every circumstance.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

REV. WM. SAMUEL LONG, D. D.

William Samuel Long was born near Graham, in Alamance County, N. C., October 22, 1839, and died in hospital in Sanford, N. C., four days after an automobile accident, August 3, 1924, at the age of 84 years, 9 months and 11 days. His father, Jacob Long, was a sturdy Piedmont farmer, an honorable citizen, honest to the core, and respected by all who knew him. His mother, Jane Stuart Stockard, was the daughter of Colonel John Stockard, who represented his county in the State Legislature seventeen consecutive terms. She was a woman of deep religious impulses, amiable in disposition, and fond of reading good books. Their home was above the average in cultivation, and the children followed their mother's example in reading. Bettie, John, William, Joseph, Daniel, Jacob, George and Ben made a family of comfort to parents and interesting to guests. The mother's interest in education inspired William with a thirst for education, which finally generated in his brothers a desire for hgher learning. William persuaded his father, who was not an educated man, to lend him money for collegiate education. William's progress was gratifying to his parents, and won so many commendations from his teachers that it inspired the other boys to seek higher education. The father was so pleased that he adopted the plan of lending money to his boys for education, allowing them to repay him or deduct it from their portion of his estate. William's youthful plan deserves credit for the higher education of his brothers. He became a successful teacher when very young, and all his younger brothers became professional men except Joseph, who fell at Chancellorsville in 1863. Only two brothers survive him—Rev. D. A. Long, D. D., L.L. D., of Franklinton, N. C., and Judge B. F. Long, of Statesville, N. C.

Dr. Long was married to Elizabeth Faucette, daughter of Superior Court clerk for Alamance County, June 25, 1861, and they lived happily together until her death, October 27, 1903. The issue of their marriage was a family of eight children, four of whom still live—Annie Joe, who married Silas Alvin Holleman; John Edgar, who married Mattie Bell; William Samuel, who married Allene Bell; Lizzie Jane, who married Albert Farmer Franklin.

Mrs. Holleman was the mother of Martha Pearl and William Long Holleman. Martha Pearl married Charles C. Robbins, and became the mother of Charles C., Jr., Annie, and Frank. William Long Holleman married Marie ———, and they have Martha Joe and Sidney.

John Edgar is father of Margaret Allene, who married William Ernest Thompson, and they have one child, Sarah Bell Thompson.

William Samuel is father of Minnie Blander, who married William Ira Ward, and they have two children—William Ira, Jr., and David Samuel. Annie Ben married William Sammy Coulter, and they have two children, Sarah Ann and William Herbert. Mattie Gaines married Fred Cotton Morris, and they have one child, Lethia Allene. David Bell and Margaret Elizabeth remain unmarried.

Lizzie Jane married Albert Farmer Franklin, and she is the mother of six children—Lucille, Catherine, Albert Farmer, Jr., Howard, Janie, and Margaret Kent. Dr. Long, therefore, leaves 4 children, 14 grandchildren, and 11 great-grandchildren—29 in all—with 10 in-laws, making a total of 39.

Dr. Long was married a second time to Mrs. Mary Virginia Ames, only daughter of Captain Thomas R. Gaskins, of Lower Parish, in Nansemond County, Va., and Mrs. Ames had two children, Thomas Rice and his sister Willie. Thomas Rice married Minnie Loftin, of Rocky Point, N. C., and they have one child, Thomas Rice, Jr. His second wife and her two children and the one grandchild also survive. These, added to number before given, make the total of his family living 43. His second marriage was a happy union that was sweet throughout the entire family on both sides for more than nineteen years, and Mr. Long and this large family have the christian sympathy of a host of friends.

Dr. Long was honored by his native county, his Church, and literary institutions. He was superintendent of public schools of Alamance County for many years; inspired the erection of graded school buildings in Graham, Burlington, and other villages of the county. He founded Graham Female Seminary at the close of the Civil War, out of which came Graham High School, Graham Normal College, and finally Elon College, now one of the leading colleges of the State. Trinity College conferred on him master of arts in 1872; Union Christian College, of Indiana, doctor of divinity, in 1889; and he was later made a member of the board of trustees of the University of North Carolina. He was the founder and first president of Elon College, and resigned after four years of sacrificial service. Many have learned wisdom at his feet, and many have been edified by his pulpit ministry. His sermons were sound, spiritual, ornate. He was for many years the leading pulpit orator in the Southern Christian Convention, and was its president for eight years. Every school bell in his native county sounds his praise, and every true heart in the Southern Convention reveres his memory. His inflexible purpose, his devotion to truth, his social gifts, and his advocacy of Christian education were outstanding features of his manly Christian life.

His funeral service in his home at Chapel Hill, N. C., and a second service at Providence Church, Graham, N. C., later on the 4th of August, were both beautiful tributes to his life. At the university it was a group of neighbors and friends, with Baptist, Methodist and Christian ministers taking part in the service. At Providence the Church, erected under his pastorate more than fifty years ago, a vast throng crowded the sanctuary, and the great yard was filled with automobiles, while a large number of ministers added to the large group of family bereaved, a volume of sympathy as beautiful as the vast floral offerings that covered and surrounded his casket. He was buried in the Graham Cemetery, though many thought his remains should rest in the cemetery at Elon College.

His memory is enriched by a life devoted to his family, his Saviour, his Church, and education. His faith was simple, but heroic; his feelings were deep, but spiritual; his friendships were strong, but well chosen; and his life was more useful than brilliant. W. W. STALEY.

ELON LETTER.

The suggestion has come to me in writing and in conversation that the life and labors of Dr. W. S. Long for higher education should be signalized by a suitable memorial erected at Elon College. I am passing the suggestion on to our people in this public way. I would be glad to hear from a large number, expressing their opinions in regard to the matter.

Dr. Long was a very able man, and was recognized as such not only by our Church, but by the public at large. Few men of his generation could rank as his equal, and none were superior to him. He had the dignified bearing of leadership. He towered among men. In any group, his was a master personality.

His espousal of the cause of higher education in our Church when the idea had few friends led to the founding of Elon, and while he remained with the college in official capacity only four years after its beginning, his interest in the institution to which his energies, prayers, and sacrifices had given its existence seemed to grow as the years came and went. He regarded Elon College as his life's work, and in this view, I take it, will future generations concur.

I have no doubt, if Dr. Long could himself be approached on the subject as to where he would prefer his friends to place a memorial of their appreciation of his life and work, he would readily say "at Elon College." Here his heart was centered. Here his chiefest affection had root. Here his memorial should stand.

What form shall this memorial take? Who shall lead our people in the enterprise? When shall the movement begin? These are vital questions, calling for thoughtful consideration on the part of our people. Let there be full and free and frank interchange of opinion. The friends are invited to write me or THE CHRISTIAN SUN, as their preference may be. We should proceed at once with this undertaking, and there should be no delay in giving expression to our opinions.

W. A. HARPER.

BETHLEHEM LETTER.

Many are considering whether a college education will pay better than the same time spent in business. That depends entirely on what it costs, and what use you are to make out of it.

The average college education costs $500 a year, including board and room, and as you pay for your living, whether you are in college or not, the actual cost of an education is very much less.

When you buy an ordinary commodity, you expect to pay more than what it cost, but when you buy an education, you pay only one-third of the cost, and the rest is made up by friends of the institution. From fifty average colleges, the figures show that 39 per cent comes from students, 31 per cent from annual gifts, and 30 per cent from endowments.

Looking ahead, the four years of college life, from 18 to 22, seem a long time; but in proportion to the active business life, which is 60, college days are little more than one-tenth of the working life, and these years are the least productive, financially.

The best test of a financial rating of a college course is the judgment of leading men in financial and business life, and we have a long list of them, such as Carnegie, Rockefeller, Pearsons, Jim Hill, Frick Severance, Stanford. Many of these men did not enjoy educational advantages, but they respected them. Scores of other leaders in the financial world have given of their time and money to colleges so that our youth might have the best that education can offer.

A college course does not guarantee that you be a leader in your chosed occupation. But college training does guarantee that your chances of becoming a leader will be multiplied many times. It gives you a chance in forty to attain distinction, whereas without college training you only have one chance in 10,000. Will you be lost among 10,000 or become one of the forty?

Out of every 1,000 pupils who enter the first grade, 600 finish the eighth grade, 300 enter high school, 111 finish high school, 38 enter college, and 14 graduate from college, and yet one-third of the men included in Appleton's Encyclopedia of American Biography are college trained, and the book, "Who's Who," which contains the latest classification by education, shows a striking preponderance of college graduates.

It is natural that the first test of the value of college training should be its helpfulness in enabling you to make a living. That is indispensable. But a far more distinctive service is its help in making you live. When Aristotle was asked how the educated man differed from the uneducated, he answered: "As the living differ from the dead," and that is still the idea of education. College life is not complete when it gives you material success of even culture. Its aim is not to make us seem greater to the world, but to make the world seem greater to us. To be at home in all lands and all ages; to count nature a familiar acquaintance, and art an intimate friend; to appreciate other men's work and the criticism of one's own; to lose oneself in generous enthusiasms and co-operate with others for the common good.

Christian colleges express their religion in the spirit of reverence, thus making it easy to do one's best and to make the most of oneself. Education at a Christian college is complete, well rounded, well proportioned, and the young are fortunate to find an institution on the threshold of his life and at his very door. Many men and women are looking forward to more than the accumulation of money or prestige. They are testing their powers and developing their capacities for the highest usefulness as citizens, in business, or the home, in whatever calling they follow. Service is the keynote which has permeated the master-spirit of college men all through life. Fewer graduates enter the ministry of the Church today, but most of them enter the ministry of life in its larger sense. S. L. BEOUGHER.

IX. ON TO THE CONTINENT.

It was on my birthday when we left Oxford for London and to cross the channel for Holland that night. As the ancient university, with its gray spires, faded away in the distance, there came to me the tribute of the poet who sang:

I saw the spires of Oxford
As I was passing by
The gray old spires of Oxford
Against the pearl-gray sky.
My heart was with the Oxford men
Who went abroad to die.
* * * *
They left the peaceful river,
The cricket field, the quod,
The shaven lawns of Oxford
To seek a bloody sod—
They gave their merry youth away
For country and for God.

God rest you, happy gentlemen,
Who laid your good lives down,
Who took the khaki and the gun
Instead of cap and gown;
God bring you to a fairer place
Than even Oxford town.

And now "Oxford town" fades from physical vision, if not from memory, and back to London again to pick and to pack for an evening train to the channel and a night boat to Hook of Holland, and so on to the Continent.

We men told all sorts of stories about the roughness of the English Channel, and the London papers that day carried the story of the rough crossing of M. Herriot, the French Prime Minister, to meet Premier MacDonald in conference. We pushed and jostled our way on to the pier, and amid the mysterious signs in all languages we managed to go every way but the right one, and finally to even find that way when, with passports and tickets and papers which we knew not the meaning of, we were finally carried with the crowd on board the great boat and found ourselves at sea again with the lights of England fading in the distance and a long dark waste of waters ahead.

It may have been as rough as we were warned it would be, but I am no judge of that, for I took myself to my stateroom and knew positively nothing whatever until daylight when we were called to land.

And now another push and crowd and shove and examination of baggage by custom officers, who ask you questions in a language you do not understand, and after staring at them blankly they put a little wiggly mark on our bags and pass us on to be scrutinized by the passport official to whom we prove that we are true Americans, with papers showing that we have a right to be away from home and with a photograph of ourselves which looks something like us and that we are not bootleggers or custom-runners, and that we are married and sometimes live at home, and that we have no evil intentions toward the country into which we are coming, and no desire, plan or purpose to carry it home as a souvenir.

All this being passed, we are booked and entrained for Amsterdam, where we are to be initiated into the life of the Dutch republic, which is a republic with a queen, if that is a fair statement.

As we pass through the Holland country, a new landscape greets us so different from England's little fields and gardens and hedges and its confusing city life that we wonder if it was only yesterday that we left her shores. On this landscape there are no hedges, and even no fences; but everywhere the canals and waterways form the dividing line of a flat country with black and white Holstein cows—cows, cows everywhere!

We leave the train and go up the canals on one of the slow lumbering boats, that we may get more intimate views of the common life of the people, and are rewarded en route; and as we land and walk about here and there, by the wonderful cleanliness and neatness of the people and how they keep their houses. The Dutch housewife hates dirt, and fights every speck of it to the bitter end. I never saw and I never expected to see such a warfare on dirt or such neatness and precision in everything. I knew that the Japanese take off their shoes as they enter a house, but I did not know that these tidy Dutch leave their wooden shoes on the doorstep as they enter their spotless rooms. The rule is, in the country, that one end of the house is the home and the other end the barn, and the place of the barn is kept as scrupulously clean as the house itself. In the narrow town streets, the doorsteps are scoured and cleaned, and then folded up against the house until there is need for use. We saw one thrifty Dutch housewife come to her front door with a large cloth and polish a push-button of brass about the size of the end of your finger, and then solemnly close the door to seek within new worlds of dirt to conquer.

One of the curious things of Holland is that the little Dutch boys and girls are clothed just alike, in dresses with long hair or curls, as the case may be, until they are six years of age. It was with difficulty that we were persuaded that these fair-faced, pretty little children with long golden curls hanging on their shoulders were boys. But they were, and the only difference in dress was the rule that in the boy's dress there should be something of a check or plaid on the waist front, while in the girls there was a flowered material worn. Both boys and girls wore cute little white or colored hoods exactly alike, except that if you would go up to them and examine them closely you would find that there was a little circular spot on the back of the boy's hoods about the size of a silver dollar, which did not appear on the girls' hoods.

All along the canals these little children greeted us with the only words of English they knew, which were "hello," "good-by," "penny," and it seemed too bad that their little lives were being dwarfed by begging for that for which they evidently had no need.

Vollendam and the Isle of Marken preserve the color and quaintness of the old Dutch dress and customs, but the cities show no sign of the custumes we are so familiar with in pictures of Holland. But everywhere you go you find canals in town or countryside, and Amsterdam, the great Holland city, has hundreds of miles of canals crossed by over 300 bridges, and to our surprise it is a veritable Venice except that in most places it has drives along the canals, although many streets have no drives and no street but the water street to the shops and residences.

Aside from our country tour, we visited three of the principle cities of Holland—Amsterdam, Legden, and Haag, the last of which we know as The Hague and the home of the Peace Palace and the World Court. Amsterdam stands to us for business, and is the commercial and industrial city of Holland and the "diamond center" of the world.

Leyden, with its university and the old Church of the Pilgrim Fathers, appeals to us educationally and religiously, and the Pilgrims add a flavor of unity and patriotism to our thought. The Hague is the summer home of greatly beloved Queen Wilhelmena, and her beautiful "House in the Woods" vies in interest with the Peace Palace.

But I see that my space is filled, and I have hardly begun to tell you about Holland as we saw it; but I will let you into a secret here, which is this: I am determined to have more to say about these things in the future with you, and since I have the privilege of being managing editor of our Sunday School papers, you will find in them soon the stories of Dutch boys and girls, as well as the stories of Dutch cities and country life, and our trip to the Queen's "House in the Woods," and the Peace Palace, and the street life, and the wonderfully interesting people of Scotland, England, Holland, Belgium, Germany and France, and their more wonderful history. At least, our Sunday School Herald will carry much of this, with "snapshots" and stories which are of great interest, to me at least, and which I hope to make of interest to you in our Sunday School papers.

But now we must leave for the next installment a word about the Pilgrim Church and the Peace Palace before we pass on to Belgium, which stood the first great shock of the World War and held the German hordes until France could get to its feet to fight. It was a wonderful stand, which changed what might have been a sad world's history of one hundred years to come for you and me and all of us.

The Hague, Holland.

Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself.—Luke 10:27.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY BOARD.

The Woman's Missionary Board of the Virginia Valley Central Conference met at Antioch Church during the recent session of Conference. The Thursday night session was devoted to reports and addresses concerning the mission work undertaken by the women.

We regretted that our president, Mrs. Boyd Richards, was unable to be present. Miss Ora Scott presided in her stead. There are eight Churches with one or more missionary organizations in them. There are nineteen other Churches that have not helped in the woman's missionary work this year.

The treasurer reported $237.41 raised during the year. The superintendent of the departments made their reports. Addresses were made by Mrs. W. T. Walters and Mrs. J. W. Patton, Rev. J. F. Morgan and Dr. W. P. Minton.

An offering was taken, to be divided between home and foreign work. A dollar brigade was called for, to which seventeen women responded. The offering and dollar brigade amounted to $28.45. The financial goal for the ensuing year is $750.00.

The woman's societies are to work for Japan (foreign) and Richmond (home); the young people's societies are to work for Santa Isabel field (foreign) and Carroll County, Virginia (home); the cradle roll are to work for Sendai Orphanage at Elon College (home).

The officers for the ensuing year are: President, Miss Virdie Showalter; vice-president, Miss Ora Scott; secretary, Mrs. B. F. Frank; treasurer, Mrs. R. A. Larrick; superintendent of woman's department, Mrs. N. M. Hasler; superintendent of young people's department, Mrs. A. W. TO CHURCHES OF THE VALLEY.

At the recent session of the Virginia Valley Central Conference, I was elected Conference mission secretary in accordance with the report of the committee on foreign missions. This report further provided that each Church in our Conference elect a Church mission secretary, whose business should be to create a deeper interest in missions in the Church, and all the departments thereof.

The purpose of this letter is to call attention to this matter of Church mission secretary, and to urge that he or she, as the case may be, be elected as early as possible, and that the name of such person, and the correct address be sent immediately to me. Will each pastor of Churches in the Valley Conference look after this matter at once? Have a special business meeting for this purpose at your next appointment, and elect your mission secretary and thus hasten the work of our organization, so that there may begin at an early date an endeavor to bring about a deeper missionary interest in all our Churches.

There is a growing interest in missions in our Conference. The Woman's Mission Board is doing splendid work. The report, and program of this board at our Conference last week was encouraging and helpful, and revealed to us the great work that will be done in our Conference when missionary societies shall be organized in all our Churches, and when we shall all become thoroughly interested in sending as well as receiving the gospel.

VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL.

Some time ago, Mr. W. S. Johnson, of Bethel Church, caught the vision and came back to his community, and without much co-operation put on a daily vacation Bible school one week long. This was such a success that we put on one two weeks long this summer. Collins Grove Baptist and Bethel Christian Churches united together in a community school.

We are very proud of this school, and so far as we know, it is the only one that has been held in country Churches in this county. The children are very enthusiastic over it, some of them reaching the building half an hour before time for opening.

We had one general director and six teachers, and all of these, except two, were young ladies who taught in the Sunday Schools of the Churches, who were willing to sacrifice a part of their vacation to work for Christ.

We were indeed fortunate to have Miss Essie Mae Cotton, of Greensboro, who is a volunteer for foreign work in Japan, with us. She supervised the handwork and taught a class of junior boys.

Miss Ozelle Gardner, of Lattimore, N. C., who is a graduate of the Training School at Louisville, Ky., taught the primary class and delighted the entire sessions with her stories. Grace Stephens, of Holly Springs, N. C., was pianist, and taught the junior girls. Ruth Hare, Apex, N. C., taught the intermediate boys and had charge of the music period. Gladys Stephens, Holly Springs, N. C., taught the beginners, and Mrs. W. S. Johnson, New Hill, N. C., taught the intermediate girls. I am sure I never saw a band of more consecrated workers.

The scrapbooks, scarfs, vaces, flowers and other things that were made during the handwork period will be sent to the orphanages of the Baptist and Christian denominations. We enrolled 84 boys and girls and made an average of 57. Twenty-one received ribbons for perfect attendance and perfect memory work.

We are already planning a bigger and better one next year. We owe all the praise to Mr. Johnson, the "father of our Bible school."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR'S INFLUENCE.

BY MISS LUCILLE MULHOLLAND.

We have heard many talks and read many articles about C. E. These talks and these printed articles have touched many of the different phases of the C. E. work, but it seems to me that there are several very inspiring and vital subjects connected with C. E. which to no great extent have been discussed. One of these we shall now consider, namely: "Christian Endeavor's Influence on the Spiritual Life"—influence: Christian Endeavor's influence—Christian Endeavor's Influence on the Spiritual Life!

And by influence we mean the power of Christian Endeavor to affect the lives and actions of its members. We all know that Christian Endeavor is a group of Christian workers, banded together to work for Christ and the Church, and whose purposes is to promote a more earnest, Christian life among the boys and girls, and prepare them for the active service of Christ. Thus knowing the type of organization Christian Endeavor is, it is not at all strange that it should greatly influence the spiritual life of its members. But before Christian Endeavor can have the proper influence, the members must manifest eagerness to serve, zeal, earnestness, and patience to accomplish tasks for th Master, be they great or small.

So let us assume that we have an all-'round C. E., the primary motive of which is to train young people for Christian work. Since this society is an all-'round one, it has no members who are D. D.'s; that is, dep-drop—those who "drop in" occasionally. They have no members who are B. W.'s; that are bench warmers, who come, but take no part in the work. However, this society does have some who belong to the Ivory Soap group—they may be 99-99|100 per cent pure, but they float.

The majority of the members are A. D.'s—absolutely dependable. They live by the Christian Endeavor pledge and find it a pleasure to keep it. These members feel that they are on the right side. Daily they pray and read their Bibles to get spiritual food for their souls. These members are active for the Master, and with their competent and efficient leaders, they know that they are reaping a reward for coming to C. E.

Here they are being trained in Christian activities such as planning and conducting meetings, leading n prayer, giving testimony, and dedicating their talents to the glory of God. Never are they called in to help make things a success without giving a hearty response. Always they go to God for assistance. They are eager to do things. They may be compared to a goose of which I once heard a story. "There was in a certain town a man who had trained a goose to run in races. One day when the goose was to run she not only showed her usual eagerness to go, but even attempted to start before time. When he did run, it was declared the winner of the race." The goose had one thing to do in life—that thing he did well! Christian Endeavorers, you have one thing to do in life. Are you doing it well? Are you doing it as a Christian Endeavorer should?

But you who are not members of C. E. and never have been may say, "I read my Bible, I pray, I keep the Sabbath holy, I give a tenth, I go to every Church service, and I do sometimes take an active part in Christian work. How does C. E. help one? What difference does it make if the young people do not belong to Christian Endeavor? My friends, a lot of difference it makes if our young people especially do not belong to C. E.! Where would the young people of today receive their training if it were not for the young people's Christian societies all over our country? Who will fill the places of the old people whom will soon be "called home" but who are now engaged in active service for the Master? It will be the young boys and girls of today who are receiving Christian training in Christian societies, and those boys and girls who are being influenced by these young people's societies.

Still some may say, "Christian training in Christian Endeavor? Why can't these young people be trained at Sunday School?" To that question there is one and only one answer. The children cannot be trained in S. S., for the S. S. is a teaching place. Christian Endeavor is a training place, and there the young people are traind for Christian work. It is in C. E. that the young people get practice in praying, thinking for themselves, speaking for Christ, helping others and giving cheerfully. Now, did you ever ride a bicycle? If you have, you know that the essential thing is to keep going. Just so with C. E.

The members must keep it going by the right kind of work. Work for the Master, which is religious, and thus yields a spiritual influence.

Thus knowing what C. E. is, the kind of members it has, and the type of work done, let us revive several days of a Christian Endeavorer's life and see just how much C. E. influences his spiritual life. Let us start with Sunday, for that is usually a C. E.'s most active day. The first thing, he takes his Bible and reads while his mind is fresh. Probably he is reading this morning the story of Daniel and how he was placed in the lion's den. The C. E. says after reading of Daniel's great deliverance, "My! my! doesn't the Lord care for his children in a wonderful way? I might not have had as much faith as Daniel or trusted for deliverance as did he; but I would have had courage, trusted more than I now do, and prayed. I believe I would like to have a few experiences like Daniel. This story just shows us that God will care for His children, regardless of their situation. I'm just beginning to discover how much value this chapter is!"

We see that the C. E. is very interested in the Bible and trusts the Lord. But what caused him to do that? Christian Endeavor's influence for when he took the C. E. pledge he promised to trust the Lord. This he has since been doing. Also when taking the pledge, he promised to read the Bible daily. This he does, and he almost feels that he is the person of whom he is reading.

And now that he has finished the Bible reading, he begins to pray. He does not forget to thank God for health, protection, parents, Jesus and the Bible. He does not forget to pray for those who have not heard the story of Jesus and for the missionaries who are carrying the gospel of life to those who know it not. He prays earnestly and in faith as taught in C. E. to do.

Now that the C. Endeavorer has started the day right, he has a smile on his face which he "passes around" to others. This C. E. feels that attending S. S. and Church is a privilege, and C. E. has caused him to feel this, so he goes rejoicingly to S. S. The songs sung there have a meaning to him, and he is truly praising the Lord through singing, for C. E. has caused him to believe that the Lord desires each one to praise Him and that He accepts the song praise if from the heart.

The sermon which, to an average person, would be a bit difficult to understand, was easy for this Christian Endeavorer, because C. E. has had such a holding influence on his life that he has read his Bible and prayed much and has asked for understanding, thus he gets it and understands much.

C. E. has echoed daily a message in his ear: "You have promised to be active for Christ." Not because of duty, but because of the divine privilege of serving Christ, this C. E. goes out on Sunday afternoon and gives a ray of sunshine to those whom he visits. To those who are not Christians, he tells them of the great plan of salvation, of how simple it is, how much pleasure it gives and the joy Jesus has when a lost soul is saved. He tells them of the great love and mercy of Jesus and that he is a friend to sinners.

As the afternoon passes away and evening approaches, he attends C. E. and there has a glorious time with other boys and girls who are just as eager, zealous and earnest as is he, talking about Christ.

Sunday passes, and Monday dawns clear. As usual, he reads his Bible and prays. The Christian Endeavorer goes to school. There he talks of Christ to his schoolmates and gets some of them to become active workers for Christ. He helps everybody, and is always pleasant.

Now, let us go to the weekly prayer service, which, in the absence of the pastor, is led by this Christian Endeavorer, for he must help whenever possible. Carried out in unique style, the meeting proves to be very inspiring and touching. The people wonder at this Endeavorer's ability to lead, and when told that he received his training and that he was influenced by C. E., they say: "What a marvelous, and what excellent training C. E. gives."

Now, perhaps this is overdrawn, and possibly you do not agree with me. Yet one's standards and ideals must be placed as high as you expect to reach, for you can go no further than you aim.

If C. E.'s influence on the spiritual life could be expressed in a few words, I would say that a child trained in C. E. finds his place in the Church and in all Christian activities far more easily than a child who has never had C. E. training. In other words, C. E. influences him to be a better worker for Christ and he feels at home in religious work. C. E. benefits the child, helps the Church, it creates habits in the habit-forming years, and plants Christian ideals in the youthful mind.

We have all heard "'Tis better to have loved and lost than never to have loved at all." Just so it is in C. E. 'Tis better to have been a Christian Endeavorer for a while than never to have been an Endeavorer at all!"

LARGE-TYPE BIBLES FOR HOSPITALS.

In response to many requests, the New York Bible Society has just published a large-type edition of the Gospels of Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, bound separately, for use of patients in hospitals. The report has often come to the society that the portions of the Bible circulated in hospitals has been of such small type that those confined in sick-beds read them with difficulty, but the expense of issuing large-type Scriptures has been so great that the society has not previously attempted to publish the same. By careful management, an edition of 150,000 of these volumes has been issued, and they are now available at the remarkably low price of 3 cents per copy. This edition for the hospitals follows several other large Bible editions published by the society, totaling a million books. These have been in English, Bohemian, French, German, Greek, Italian, Norwegian, Russian, Swedish, and Yiddish.

The society is located in its own Bible House, 5 East Forty-eighth Street, where contributions for circulating the Scriptures in many languages may be sent.

POPE'S CHAPEL.

Fifteen on profession of faith were received into the Church at Pope's Chapel yesterday and were baptized; also one by letter. The present pastor was unanimously called for the Conference year of 1924 and '25.

The building committee, of which Miss Ethel Holmes is secretary, reported. The house of worship is to be enlarged and beautified at an early day. D. A. Long.

MEDITATIONS FROM A PARSON'S DIARY.

"I have come to the sincere conclusion that the person who refuses to support foreign missions, with the plea that he believes more in home missions, does not really believe in either, and will do about as little for home missions as he does for foreign missions. But, if I read the gospel aright, no person can be a true Christian and not believe in and support worthily both home and foreign missions."

OUR PLEDGES
Men and Millions Sacred, Solemn and Binding.

These obligations were made through the Church to the Kingdom of God and to all that pertains to building up that Kingdom in the world, so far as our Christian Church is concerned. As Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., has so pertinently pointed out: "A Christian can no more drop his pledges than he can drop his prayers or his Church membership. Misfortune may make it impossible to meet financial obligations--'When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both' (Luke 7:42)--but not till 'they had nothing to pay.' Obligations to God are as binding as obligations to men, and God will help those who try to keep their pledges."

Many are making great sacrifices to meet these obligations and pay these pledges. Is your Church on this list? If not, let's do our best to get it there. If there, let's get it in first place.

PUTTING GOD IN THE LIFE.

"See that none render unto any one evil for evil, but always follow after that which is good, one toward another and towards all."—1 Thess. 5:15.

The authorized version says: "Hold fast to that which is good." I was on a trolley car some time ago, and I was reading the advertisements in it. One read as follows: "Hold fast that which is good. More than an hundred years' test. ——— Liniment."

Well, there is no objection to that advertisement, but I asked myself: "Why doesn't the world make capital of Christianity as it does of the merits of a thing like that? Why doesn't the world make as much capital of putting God in the life as it does of putting other good things in life? It seems to be left to religionists to do that. The principles that put God in the life have stood the test of the ages, but the world is saying, "To hell with the Church!"

The Father's purpose is that men should cease from evil and increase in the fruitage of goodness; that they should vindicate His character in their lives, and that they should grow unto a perfect man. Do no evil and cultivate the best gifts and a more excellent way will He show unto us.

Prayer.—Our Father, each day brings unto us its own peculiar tests of our faith and our lives. Hold us steadfast, growing in grace and the knowledge of the Lord. Help us to hold fast to that which is good and put Thy spirit in our lives. In His name, we ask it. Amen.

TUESDAY.

THINKING AND DOING.

"Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honorable, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."—Phil. 4:8.

A reader who lives in Chicago says: "Sometimes I am positively alarmed by the wicked thoughts which I have. I wonder if other folks have such thoughts!"

It is to be admitted that honest folks have evil thoughts sometimes, and not merely thoughts of passing evil, but actual promptings to do evil which shed a shudder through his whole mental and physical frame. But the Christian is not bothered with these. He knows that he is not to be blamed for its happening so. He cannot prevent suggestions that come to him from the outside world, nor can he prevent inward impulses prompted by the carnal mind. But being a Christian, he has Christ inside, and he is master of his house. He lets Christ rule his mind, and in the name of Christ he stops every sin so besetting him. "Resist the devil and he will flee from you."

Let us rid ourselves of all evil by pondering only the true, the honest, the just, the pure, the lovely, the good, the virtuous and the praiseworthy.

Prayer.—Our Father, we offer ourselves to Thee today for pure living. Help us. In His name we ask it. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

HAPPINESS THROUGH PERSECUTION.

"Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven."—Matt. 5:10.

When Jesus enters the life and takes possession, the individual loves and does righteousness. He is born of God: "for whosoever doeth righteousness is born of God." The inner life is larger than the world without, and true happiness is inward, not outward. Persecution enlarges the inner life, binds us closer to Jesus, and shuts the door tighter against all wrong. It is an outward testimony that we are right within. Persecutors are filled with fear, envy, jealousy and hate. That which they seek to destroy in others, they secretly admire and would gladly possess for themselves. As they continue to persecute, they become more miserable, and the subjects of their hate happier. Persecution is an incentive to growth. Everything seems to thrive on it. The farmer harrows and plows, and the crop grows. "The blood of the martyr is the seed of the Church." Had Joseph Smith and his followers not been persecuted, there would probably have been no Mormon Church. "If any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed." But let him be sure when he suffers that it is for righteousness' sake.

Prayer.—Dear Father, purge us from all selfishness, that we may not be persecutors. Fill us with Thy spirit, so that we may rejoice in the midst of persecutions. In Jesus' name. Amen. —T. E. White.

THURSDAY.

SEEN AT A GREAT DISTANCE.

"But when he was a great way off, his father saw him."—Luke 15:20.

There are many who live so far away from God that His Word sheds no light on their pathway, and they wander farther and farther away, unmindful of the ever-growing distance. There are those who follow, like Peter, afar off, allowing doubts to overshadow their faith. There is both a comforting and a tormenting thought in the fact that we cannot get beyond the eye of God. When we go away, we turn our backs to Him and hide our faces from Him. There is no scene more pathetic in the story of the prodigal than when he turned his back to and his face from his father. It is painful to think that there are many today whose faces are turned away from God and the Church in their rush for the "far country." God sees them, to be sure, and the filthy pig-pen which awaits them. Their only hope is that their faces may be turned some day to God. The distance may be great, but not beyond His vision. Not only so, but when a face is turned to Him, His mighty heart is moved. He runs, embraces, and kisses. Herein is great vision, great love, great forgiveness, and great salvation.

Prayer.—Dear Father, help us to ever look toward Thee. Forgive us for turning away and grieving Thee, for wasting our time and talents. The wages of sin is hard, but Thy forgiveness is unspeakable joy. Amen.—T. E. White.

FRIDAY.

GROWING IN THE CHRISTLIKENESS.

"Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ."—Gal. 6:1-4.

It has long been the custom to emphasize saving faith as the prime requisite in becoming a true Christian. And, in a sense, this is rght. The initial step must be taken; before we can be eligible for the deeper experiences of the Christian religion, we must experience the first, which is justification "by faith." This step implies uniting with the fellowship of confessed Christians; it is a confession of Jesus as Lord.

The next step is a growth in character under His direction and guidance. Faith opens the door and we enter the house of God. His Church. Here we study in the school of Christ, and the sign of promotion from grade to grade should be growth in Christlike character. This growth leads to a higher plane of being and fellowship—the plane of love. We move up in the scale of spiritual things by growth in character, only to find that character is like the trunk of the tree and its branches. It exists not unto itself alone, but that flowers may be developed upon the upreaching twigs. So, out of the mature character should spring that higher virtue which we call Christlike love! Faith and character are both incomplete until they flower into love.

But even love does not fulfill the law of Christ. As the flowers must develop into fruit before the tree's life is fulfilled, so love must be expressed in humble service before the law of Christ is fulfilled. The finest, truest Christian man I know is a friend who serves in a small Massachusetts parish. His salary is a pittance, his parishioners are plain country folk. But from morning until night of every day he is about, bearing their burdens. There is nothing he will not do, and apparently nothing he cannot do. With his hands and his warm heart, he labors for them, and they love him as never I have seen a man loved before. Why? He is putting into life Paul's most brilliant suggestion: "Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ."—Rev. Vincent G. Burns.

Prayer.—Our Father, may we understand what Christlikeness is in all our doings, and give us strength and the will and the courage to grow more and more like him every day. In His name we ask it. Amen.

SATURDAY.

IF WE BELIEVE NOT.

"If we believe not, yet He abideth faithful."—2 Tim. 2:11-13.

It is a widely quoted and popular fallacy that it makes no difference what we believe, just so we are sincere. If this is true in religion, then religion is the only realm in which it is true. A well-known literary man administered poison to his wife, thinking it to be medicine. She died, and regret has never left him for a conscious moment. It seems to make a great difference what one believes in practical affairs. Is it otherwise in religion? Is there no relation between religion and conduct? Among the ancient Greeks and Romans, religion and morality were divorced. So one might disbelieve without loss. But from the beginning it has been otherwise in the religion we profess.

Of course, even in our religion there is a large sphere in which it is not material what we believe. There are innumerable elements in the Bible which, however interesting to us, are not connected with either creed or conduct. But there is a body of truth in our religion; there are principles underlying our faith, which vitally relate to conduct and character. It does make a difference whether we believe in these things. If we believe not in these, we have no clue to life's deepest problems. If we believe, we have. If we believe not in Christ, we have no assurance of the possibility of divine forgiveness. If we believe in Christ, we have. If we believe in God through Christ, we have new inspiration to courage, a new conception of nobility, a new light on life beyond the grave.—Rev. C. C. Albertson.

Kiddies' Korner

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT, Editor.

Well, hello kiddies! Are we all home again? Goody! Isn't home the bestest place for fun? Oh, it is indeed!

Wait a minute—I am not trying to answer the question, "What is home." You are to answer that. All your answers are coming out in the "Korner" soon, so watch out for your name and your answer. If you haven't sent your answer yet, just take the time to write it at once, 'cause no one wants to be left out of this sunny sun korner; and you are the sunbeams that make the "Korner" sunny—yes you are, too! I am so proud of you.

Your editor's mother said I was to tell you all about my vaction playtime—'cause even if your editor is grown-up she loves to play; but one day she didn't play at all. A big—a great big—ol' buzzy bee came flying around, and some one happened to get in his way; and then—ker-flopo—he landed on some one—oh! oh! good gracious me! Did one ever sting you? And it doesn't hurt long either—now, does it? And you can ride one off in your pretty "Kiddie Car" and laugh and play same as even—that's what your editor did any way.

Such a long letter I'm writing you. Next week I want to tell you about some of the "Kiddies' Korner" kiddies I saw, and talked to; and they told me—oh! I'm about to tell. Next week I will tell. I am so glad to talk to you again.

So long, now! YOUR EDITOR.

WINNERS OF THE "LITTLE STORY CONTEST."

"A Big Surprise" (Little Story Contest).—Hampton Brady; age, 14; Ramseur, N. C.

"Story Contest."—Alice Ruth Scholz, Macon, N. C.

These are the three best stories, and I want to say a great big THANK YOU! for these three beautiful stories from three dear Kiddies. The block story was hard! And it is an honor to have won either first, second or third place in the contest.

Congratulations—all three! As Dr. Atkinson would say, "Just keen on keeping on."

A WONDERFUL DREAM.

Once there was a little girl who wanted to play with the stars. One day she cried to play with stars. When it was dark she slipped into the park, but there was no stars in the sky.

She started to play in the sand, but there were no stars to look at. Then she went to the pond. She couldn't see any stars' reflection in the water.

Sorrowfully, she went to the big tree, and when she looked up she saw one lonely star. Behind the tree were some fairies. They told her to do some work and she could get the stars. When she came to the river, she met "No Feet," the fish. He took her to the sta stairs without steps.

He told her if she would hold tight she could climb to the sky and get the star to play with. She climbed, it seemed for miles. Bang! she was in the water. She had let go the banisters. She was about to cry when she heard her mother's voice, "Mary, Mary, come to breakfast." She slipped in bed, then she opened her eyes. "I shall never cry to play with stars any more," said she, and told her mother of her dream.

THE CITY IN THE SAND.

By Jeannette C. Shirk.

I built a city in the sand,
And formed it softly with my hand.

The castle walls were tall and fair;
The valleys deep, the gardens rare.

It was a pleasant sort of land,
This yellow city in the sand.
But oh! the waves came with the tide
And swept my castles far and wide.

PUZZLE.

Alice went to a grocery store and handed the grocer the following bill:

1 tin of rnco.
1 jar of dustmra.
1 peck of toesotap.
1 box of ddeehrs eatwh.
1 agecabb.
2 lbs. of stametoo.
3 lbs of lfruo.
4 lbs. of terbut.
5 lbs. of rugas.
2 lbs. of snonoi.

—From Alice.

"Whatever in the world is this?" exclaimed the grocer.

But it is only Alice's order. See if you can straighten out the words. Rnco is corn.

LIFE OF A PENNY.

A penny that had just been made was wondering what would happen next, when he was put into a box with other coins and taken to the bank for distribution.

"I wonder where I will go," he thought.

Just then it was all dark around him, and after asking a dime, who was older than he, he found they were in a man's pocket.

Suddenly the penny saw the light. He also heard a voice say, "Polly, here is a present for you. Daddy hopes you will put it in your bank."

Then he felt himself dropping, and when he landed it made a clinky sound as he fell on some other coins. They began to talk.

"I heard Polly say that she is going to take us out of here and spend us for her birthday tomorrow," said an old, wise nickel.

Sure enough, they were all taken out and spent. After the new penny had spent quite a time in the cash register, he was taken out to make change for a customer. The customer was Polly's mamma, and the new penny came into Polly's possession once more. Only once! For the rest of its life it was in her bank.

THE COCK AND THE CLOCK.

Once a Cock and an Alarm Clock had a quarrel.

The Cock said: "I can wake everybody up better!"

And the Clock said: "No, I can wake everybody up better!"

So they went to a Bird. They asked: "Who is better for waking people up, the Cock or the Clock?"

"I don't know," said the Bird; "ask the Dog."

So they went to the Dog. "Who is better for waking people up—do you know, Dog?"

No answer.

So they asked the Cat. "I don't know," said the Cat; "go to the wise old Horse."

So they went to the Horse. They asked: "Who is better to wake people up—the Cock or the Clock?"

The wise old Horse said: "Now, I'll go to sleep a couple minutes and she who can wake me up first."

And so he went to sleep a couple of minutes. Then the Clock rang, "Ting-a-ling, ting-a-ling, ling-ling-ling!" It woke the Horse up.

Then he said: "I'll go to sleep for the Cock to wake me up." So he went to sleep.

Then the Cock cried: "Cock-a-doodle-doo! Cock-a-doodle-doo!" He woke the Horse up.

Then the wise old Horse said: "You are both good. So hereafter it is better not to quarrel about who is better or who can make the most noise, for you are both the best!"

STORY CONTEST.

Once upon a time a little girl wanted to play with the stars, because they were so pretty, and she thought that they would look nice in her doll-house. So she went out to find them, and she soon came to a park. She looked all over the park in every little nook and corner, in hollow trees and in the sky, but she couldn't even find any in the sky, because it was daytime.

She could not find any stars, so she walked on. She crossed a large cornfield and went on into a great forest. She came to a brook in the woods and she took off her shoes and stockings and got in the water to look for the stars. She looked under some great big rocks, and under some roots and all over the brook. She found no stars there, so she went on.

She soon met some fairies all dressed in lovely dresses, and each had a pair of lovely, gauzy wings. They told her to dance with them, and she told them she would, so they all took hold of her skirt, and the first thing she knew she was twirling around from place to place with the fairies. She still did not find even one star, and she got discouraged and was about to cry.

Then the fairies told her just what to do, so she started out to do it. She soon found a lovely black horse with a white star in the middle of his forehead and great white wings, and she jumped on him and the horse arose in the air and started flying. They flew and flew until they came to the edge of the sea. She jumped off the horse and ran along the side of the sea until she came to a pretty yellow flower. The flower began talking to her. It told her that it's name was "No Feet." "No Feet" carried her to the stairs without steps.

When they got there he carried her up, then she saw the stars and grabbed hold to the end of a point of one of the stars. All of a sudden, she let go—bang! she found herself in her own bed.

She had been dreaming.

to. Pentecost arose as the power of grace from heaven to save men from the perils.

The perils of man today are boastfulness, pride, position, self-will, personal pleasure a first consideration, making a living a chief motive for living, making home life only an incident, science taking the place of religion, brilliancy the chief excellency, making power the right, etc.

These things fall like Babel. Pride tears life with conflicting passions. To be engrossed in living makes us forget that we have a life to live, brilliancy lapses into selfishness, self-will carries in it the seed of its own destruction. Grasping is vulgar and disrupting in its appeal; pleasure appeals only to the emotion, and imagination overlooks humaneness, breeds discontent and destroys the finer meanings of life. Science, with all its worth and vocation, with all its guidance emphasizes only the material and practical, and forgets the spiritual. In these the tower of civilization must fall.

Prayer.—Our Father, save us from the perils of life and to the salvation of Jesus Christ. In His name we ask it. Amen.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

By H. S. Hardcastle.

MISS PATTIE COGHILL, Field Secretary, Elon College, N. C.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

September 7, 1924.

Subject: "Jesus Heals a Nobleman's Son."

Lesson: John 4:46-54.

Golden Text: "I am the way, and the truth, and the life."—John 14:6.

The man was in great trouble. His son—it may have been the only boy—was ill, very ill. And even in his desperation he knew that mere human help was of no avail. And so he turned to Jesus. And he went in person. In the hour of his deepest need, he dared not delegate this mission to some one else. He must urge upon the Master the extremity of the case and the necessity for immediate help. The word "besought" reveals something of the spirit of the plea which the man made.

The man may have been religious. He may have been an admirer of Jesus. He may have been even a follower of Jesus. But the probability is that the facts were not thus. The nobleman probably represents the man or woman, who in ordinary life, and under favorable circumstances, have little, if any regard for religion. He had "blue blood" in his veins; he probably had wealth. Like many another "successful" man, he felt sufficient within himself. But he was human, and underneath the outward appearance there was a father's heart. His son was about to die and love asserted itself. And like many another man who has had no place for the Church or for religion in his life, the first place to which the man turned was to Him who was the embodiment of religion. Men still do it. There is many a man who never gives God a hearing, and seldom a chance, until the death angel draws near, or the undertaker is called in. And then they find the only abiding help and comfort in the very thing they had disdained or disregarded. Why is it that we so often fail to carry over our spirit of fair play into religion?

It mattered not to Jesus as to what had been the nobleman's attitude heretofore. The man was in need now, and he had come in sincerity of purpose and in agony of heart. It was not in the Master's heart to turn such an one away. And, although he did test the man's sincerity, He did not refuse his plea. The Master never does. It matters not if we have sinned against Him seventy times seven; if we turn to Him in sincerity He will receive us and forgive us. No wonder they call the gospel "good news."

The events which followed are a little difficult for the natural understanding to grasp. Jesus did not go down with the nobleman at all. He simply told him to go his way, for his son would live, and when the nobleman's servants met him and told him of his son's recovery, it developed that the change for the better took place at the very hour when Jesus had assured the man of that fact. The natural understanding would say that it was a coincidence. But spiritual things are spiritually discerned, and he who has eyes to see, knows that it was more than a coincidence. There was a casual relation between the two events. The Master was a master indeed. The laws of life were at His command. And that earnest father by his faith had released those spiritual forces which made his son well again. Why is it thought to be incredible that He who rose from the dead should also heal those who were sick?

The effect was gratifying. The nobleman had believed in Jesus before. And his faith had been sound, as was evidenced by the fact that He absolutely trusted Jesus in the hour of supreme need. But there was a new element in his faith now—a living element that had been born out of a great personal experience. It is always thus. Jesus bids men to come and see. And whenever men have faith enough to act upon His invitation, they find that He is able to do exceedingly abundantly above what they think and dare to hope. And those who have had a vital experience of the Christ are not troubled over the hundred and one petty intellectual things that trouble so many who have only a theoretical acquaintance with Christ. They know whom they have believed. And like the nobleman of old, they are instruments in making others—even those of their own households—believe.

Some Teaching Truths.

1. Wherever Jesus has manifested His power, the way is open for other mighty works.
2. Men instinctively turn to God in the hour of direst distress.
3. Much of our failure to receive is due to our failure to beseech.
4. Sincerity in present-seeking atones for sins of the past.
5. God does not tempt men, but He does test them.
6. Men in need do not want signs and wonders; they want God Himself.
7. He who believes has the promise.
8. Subsequent events always confifm an act of faith in God.
9. Health is vitally related to godliness.
10. He who vitally believes in God should become a missionary of His faith.
11. Jesus Christ is always responsive to human need.
12. And now abideth faith, hope, and love; and not the least of these is faith.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

SERVICE.

Topic: "How Can We Serve Our Sunday School?"

Lesson: John 21:15-17.

Daily Readings: Sept. 8, Service by prayer.—Matt. 9:1-8. Sept. 9, By training.—Matt. 4:-19. Sept. 10, By teaching.—Matt. 18:1-6. Sept. 11, By visitation.—Jas. 1:22-27. Sept. 12, By friendliness.—Phil. 5:5-11. Sept. 13, By support.—Heb. 10:23-25.

Suggested Songs: "Onward, Christian Soldiers," "Faith of Our Fathers," "Jesus Calls Us O'er the Tumult," "I am Happy in the Service of the King."

Points for Purposeful Prayers.

Thank God (1) for His word, the basis of all teaching in the Church and its organizations; (2) for the pioneers of the Sunday School, who saw such great possibilities in training children and adults in Bible study; (3) for the host of faithful officers and teachers who are so earnestly serving the Bible school today.

Ask God (1) to bless the multitudes of Bible school teachers and pupils the world over; (2) to bless the school in your Church as a means to teaching both young and old to be true disciples of Jesus; to help your society to serve the school more devotedly.—Standard C. E. Quarterly.

Plan your program with at least three feature speeches. Ask the superintendent of your school to speak on the purpose of the Sunday School. Ask the C. E. president to tell of the purpose of the C. E. Then have your pastor to speak on the purpose of both the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society as correlated with the Church program of religious education.

Questions for the Meeting.

1. Has the Sunday School proven to be a worthwhile agency of the Church?
2. Can the Sunday School take the place of the C. E. Society, or vice versa? How?
3. Should every society have a Sunday School committee? What are its duties?

This is a day with the keynote, or thought, "Service." "Doing something" is the cry of every religious organization. The Christian Endeavor Society and the Sunday School should not forget in this enthusiasm that "works without faith is dead," and that "being" is just as essential as "doing."

We can render our best service when we are prepared to do service. "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the work of God." Get a vision of what you can do best, and then do your best to carry your part of the work. Not every one can teach or hold an office, but it takes more than teachers and officers to have a Sunday School. A person without a pupil is not a teacher. We can all serve by enlisting persons for the school. Regular attendance should be the aim of both C. E. and Sunday School.

The C. E. Society and the Sunday School have two distinct lines of work to do. The Sunday School seeks to give information, while the C. E. Society seeks to get expression of the information. Thus we see the need of both correlated into our Church program.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

We are having a thing done at the Christian Orphanage that has been needed for a long time, but until recently we were not in a position to have it done. It is necessary to have the children in an institution like this to have a thorough physical examination to find their weak points and defects so we may have an opportunity to remedy, as far as possible, the defects found; but to give one hundred children a thorough physical examination entails quite a lot of time and much work. Dr. Parker, of the Rainey Hospital, and his assistant, Dr. Brooks, with Dr. Ellington, of Burlington, an eye specialist, have undertaken this task and have already spent two afternoons in the work here.

Out of the number already examined, some have been found with small defects which can be corrected. They have found one little boy perfect in every way. A clinical card record is kept of the findings, which can be referred to from year to year, and we can have those treated who need it.

It is very kind of these noble health professional men who are always busy to give their time and do this thing for us free of charge, for the sake of the little children. This world is full of opportunities to do something for others, but I fear we let too many of them go by unnoticed.

REV. JAS. O'KELLY'S TESTAMENT.

BY MISS LILLIE D. FOWLER.

On July 27th, the members of the Fowler family, with some of their friends, met in their third annual reunion at the old Fowler homestead, about a mile north of Mebane.

A nice program had been arranged, which was carried out in a very pleasing manner. A bountiful dinner was spread under the ancient elm trees, and with barbecue, ice cream and lemonade, the table fairly groaned with its weight of good eatables.

One number of the afternoon program was the reading of a piece from THE CHRISTIAN SUN of the description of the present resting-place of Jas. O'Kelly and the proposed removal of his body to Elon College.

The reading of this piece and the discussion that followed brought to light the fact that James O'Kelly's own testament was in the possession of Mr. A. A. Lynch, of Mebane, who is a great-great-grandson of James O'Kelly on his mother's side.

The printing of this testament is well preserved and the late John Worsley, of Hertford, England, is the translator. The date of its printing is M.DCC.LXX, which is 1770. On the front page of this testament are these words: "James O'Kelly's Book. Price, 6| unbound, and 5| for binding—11| pieces. In the year 1790."

On a yellow sheet in this Bible are the following memorials:

"James P. O'Kelly departed this life April the 6th day, 1816, being in his 9th year; was born November 1, 1807.

"William O'Kelly departed this life December the 4 day, 1820, being in his 58th year.

James B. Bilbow departed this life December 1, 1821.

"Leslie O'Kelly departed this life December 28, 1821.

"The Rev. James O'Kelly departed this life October, 1826, being in his 88th year.

"William Anderson departed this life July 24, 1828.

Elizabeth M. O'Kelly departed this life February 11, 1833, being in her 89th year.

"August 5th, 1841. Married at Mr. John Morings Seignor, Esqr., on the 29th of July, by Elder John T. Petty, Mr. Hue B. Guthry, Esqr., to Miss Margaret L. Anderson, all of Chatham, N. C."

There were other papers and relics of ancient date, though yellow with age, are still readable.

The print in this testament is somewhat shaded and is of the old style, and difficult to interpret, is as follows:

"S. John Ch 111

"For God fo loved the world, that He gave his only getotten Son, that whofoevr believeth on Him might not perifh, but have everlasting life."

This Bible is greatly prized by the family, and we regret exceedingly that the date of the day of James O'Kelly's death has been torn off this paper and only the year remains.

We are glad that the little Christian Church at Mebane has in it a memorial window to both Rev. James O'Kelly and Elder T. J. Fowler. We hope that the constant reminder of these two good men who labored so untiringly for what they believed to be right may be an inspiration to this little band of noble workers, and that they may go on from year to year in the path of right and duty until this little Church may be as a city set on a hill and in reality shed light to all who come under its influence.

A "MOBILIZATION DAY" FOR PEACE.

BY DR. S. M. CAVERT.

As a far more constructive and more needed measure than the "Mobilization Day" planned by the War Department, the Federal Council of Churches, through its commission on international justice and good will, is suggesting a "mobilization" of all the forces working for peace. The date proposed for such a demonstration is the anniversary of Armistice Day, November 11th, and the week in which it falls.

All the Churches, pastors and congregations of the country are urged to participate in this interdenominational movement for the observance of Armistice Day as a time for unitedly focussing the attention of the Churches upon the task of ridding the world of war.

Preliminary plans have already been announced in a folder entitled "A Call to 150,000 Churches to Mobilize for World Justice and World Peace." More detailed suggestions, including helpful material for pastors, are given in a large pamphlet now in press, entitled "The Churches of America Mobilizing for World Justice and World Peace."

The appeal from the Federal Council of Churches for this mobilization for peace begins as follows:

"Six years have passed since the armistice brought the fighting of the World War to an end. But permanent world peace and national security are still to be achieved.

"Great Church assemblies have recently issued stirring calls to their members to grapple with the stupendous task of overthrowing the war system of the world and to outlaw and banish war.

"The Federal Council of the Churches now suggests that all Churches, pastors and congregations in the United States observe the anniversary of the armistice as an appropriate time to mobilize their forces for this imperative task. This would be a fitting tribute to those who gave their lives in the World War."

The following suggestions are made of concrete ways in which the Churches can make a strong impact upon the whole community:

1. Let the Churches of each city, in September, approach chambers of commerce, labor organizations, American Legion posts, women's, Rotary, Kiwanis and others clubs and groups, proposing a joint committee on Armistice Day observance to set up a great public mass-meeting.

2. During the preceding week (November 3-8) let them provide, if possible, for many discussions and study groups. Let them consider—

(a) The costs, the human losses and the tragedy of war.

(b) The results of the treaty of Versailles.

(c) The alternatives ahead of the world.

(d) The signs of hope—the World Court, the League of Nations, American co-operation with the humanitarian commissions of the league, the Dawes report, the American "draft treaty of disarmament and security."

(e) The next step toward world justice and peace based on law.

3. On Sunday, November 9th, let sermons be preached in all the Churches on the call to the Churches of America to mobilize for world justice and peace.

4. Let the subject be presented in all Sunday Schools, in ten-minute talks by gifted speakers. These short addresses should be positive and constructive, rather than merely denunciatory and negative.

5. On Sunday or Monday evening, November 9th or 10th, Sunday Schools and Young People's Societies might put on an Armistice Day pageant. (Can be secured from the Federal Council of Churches.)

6. On Tuesday, November 11th, let a great mass-meeting be held under the joint auspices of religion, commerce, labor, women and young people, with one principal speaker to utter the aspirations of our people for permanent world peace and to point out constructive and practicable plans for its achievement.

BARRETT.

Mrs. Maggie G. Barrett, wife of Rev. J. W. Barrett, of Lamberts Point, Va., passed out of this life August 14, 1924, aged 60 years. She was an invalid for nearly two years before the end came, and at times she suffered greatly, but bore her affliction with patience, and her submission of spirit was beautiful. She was a loving wife and devoted mother.

Besides husband, she leaves to mourn their loss three sons and six daughters, one brother and a host of other relatives and friends. Two children preceded her in death.

The funeral service, which was largely attended, was held in the Church of God, where she worshiped and where her husband is pastor. The body was laid away in Forest Lawn Cemetery.

W. D. HARWARD.

BARKLEY.

William A. Barkley was born in Alexander County September 20, 1857; was married to Victoria Connally November 3, 1892. To this union was born one son, William A. Barkley, Jr.

Bro. Barkley joined the Methodist Church at Pisgah, Iredell County, N. C., at the age of 25. Later he moved his membership to Center Methodist Church, of which he died a member, being faithful until death, which occurred August 17, 1924, at age 66 years 10 months and 27 days. Interment was made at Pleasant Ridge Christian Church, near his home. The Lord comfort the widow and son and relatives and friends.

T. J. GREEN.

MOFFITT.

Dr. R. Moffitt was born June 12, 1868, and died July 31, 1924, being 56 years, 1 month and 19 days old. He was married to Mary I. Cole, February 28, 1888. To this union, six children were born, five of whom survive. He is survived by seven grandchildren and a host of other relatives and friends. He was a kind and loving father, husband and neighbor. He was a member of Pleasant Grove, at which place he was buried by the writer in the presence of a large congregation. The Lord comfort his loved ones.

T. J. GREEN.

WILKERSON.

Charles J. Wilkerson departed this life August 29, 1924, at the age of 69 years, at his home at Gilmerton, Va. He leaves to mourn their loss his companion of many years, Augusta Glasscock Wilkerson; one sister and one brother, grand and great-grandchildren, and many friends. His native home was Halifax County, Va.

We laid him to rest in the family plot in Riverside Cemetery, Berkley, Va., and covered the newly made mound with beautiful flowers.

The grandmother will live here, at Portlock, with her granddaughter, Mrs. Dennis. Thus her lot, though lonely, will still fall in pleasant places.

B. F. BLACK.

WILLIAMS.

Nora Williams was born April 23, 1910; died, August 25, 1924. She was converted at the revival meeting at Needhams Grove the week following the third Sunday in July, and joined the Church. She was a bright girl. She loved the Sunday School and her classmates and teacher. They will miss her. She leaves a father and mother and sister to mourn their loss. May God bless the bereaved ones. May her friends get ready to meet her in the glory world. Her burial service was conducted by her pastor. She was laid to rest in Needhams Grove Cemetery to await the coming of our Lord.

Seagrove, N. C. W. J. EDWARDS.

If I can feel sympathy—feel it within and without—then the dew falls and the desert begins to blossom. By sympathy I do not mean merely a fellowship in sorrow, but also, and no less truly, a fellowship in joy—a feeling for which we ought to have an English word. To be glad when your brother-men are prosperous and happy, to rejoice in their success, to cheer for their victories, to be compassionate and pitiful when your brother-men are distressed and miserable, to grieve over their failures, to help them in their troubles—this is the fraternal spirit which blesses him who exercises it, and those toward whom it is exercised.—Henry Van Dyke.

One-teacher schools are disappearing in Kentucky at the rate of nearly seven a week, as they become consolidated into larger schools with two, three, four or more teachers. New union and consolidated schools are established to take their places at the rate of about 90 a year. To enable the children to attend the consolidated schools, 78 schools provide free transportation, using 118 motor buses and 54 horse-drawn vehicles.

Physician Explains Who Should Take Nuxated Iron

Practical Advice on How To Help Build Up Great Strength, Energy and Endurance

"Lack of iron in the blood not only makes a man a physical and mental weakling, nervous, irritable, easily fatigued, but it utterly robs him of that virile force, that stamina and strength of will which are so necessary to success and power in every walk of life," says Dr. Emile Sauer, well known New England physician. "It may also transform a beautiful, sweet-tempered woman into one who is cross, nervous and irritable. I have strongly emphasized the great necessity of physicians making blood examinations of their weak, anaemic, run-down patients. Thousands of persons go on year after year suffering from physical weakness and a highly nervous condition due to lack of sufficient iron in their red blood corpuscles without ever realizing the real cause of their trouble. Without iron in your blood your food merely passes through the body something like corn through an old mill with rollers so wide apart that the mill can't grind.

For want of iron you may be an old man at thirty, dull of intellect, poor in memory, nervous, irritable and all 'run down,' while at 50 or 60 with plenty of iron in your blood you may still be young in feeling, full of life, your whole being brimming over with vim and energy.

"But be sure the iron you take is organic iron—Nuxated Iron—and not metallic iron which people usually take. Organic iron—Nuxated Iron—is like the iron in your blood and like the iron in spinach, lentils and apples, while metallic iron is iron just as it comes from the action of strong acids on small pieces of iron filings and is therefore an entirely different thing from Nuxated Iron. Nuxated Iron represents organic iron in such a highly concentrated form that one dose is estimated to be approximately equivalent (in organic iron content) to eating one-half quart of spinach, one quart of green vegetables or half a dozen baked apples. It is like taking extracts of beef instead of eating pounds of meat."

Over 4,000,000 people annually are using Nuxated Iron. It quickly helps make rich red blood, revitalize worn-out exhausted nerves and give increased strength and energy. Your money will be refunded by the manufacturers if it does not produce satisfactory results.

NUXATED IRON ENRICHES THE BLOOD-STRENGTHENS THE NERVES

TO PUNISH PARENTS.

A measure was introduced in the Legislature at Albany, N. Y., which holds parents legally responsible for the delinquency of children under 16. This bill is said to be the result of a warning issued by a judge when he pronounced death sentence for the Diamond boys and their confederates for the murder of two bank messengers, says the American Educational Digest. The judge declared, at that time, that if parents knew that they were to be held accountable for their children's acts, they would exercise closer protection of their offspring than they do. In more than 75 per cent of cases, authorities agree that the delinquent child is the victim of home environment and parental indifference. Under the proposed law, parents would be punished for any of the following causes:

To permit a child to become a juvenile delinquent; to associate with vicious, immoral, or criminal persons; to beg or wander about the streets late at night; to furnish entertainment for gain upon the streets or in a public place; to wander habitually around railroad yards; to be an habitual truant from school; to enter a disorderly house or any place where his morals may be in danger; and to be adjudged in court to be in need of the care and protection of the State.

This movement which proposes to hold the parent responsible to society attacks the whole situation at the very root of the evil of criminal childhood. The theory of the proposed law is that any father who is indifferent to the molding of the character of the child that he brings into the world is amenable to the law of the State. Parenthood is an assumed obligation, and that obligation should be met so far as it is possible within the power of human ability. This proposed law presents one of America's great and unsolved problems in an altogether new and commendable aspect.—Selected.

Building a Country Sunday School

By E. L. Middleton.

Mr. Middleton possesses definite qualifications for the preparation of this work. For twelve years after leaving college, he was a day school and Sunday School teacher in a village that had "once-a-week" preaching, with half the membership of the Sunday School living in the open country; while for fourteen years more he has been a State Sunday School secretary in rural State. Mr. Middleton urges the adoption of no novel or revolutionary ideas or methods. He recognizes the place and the value of recognized Sunday School policies and methods, and has prepared a digest of the essentials in a manner plain enough to render it adaptable for use in any rural school. Methods, administration, organization and development are each and all discussed in this book in an eminently practical way.

The price of the book is $1.25. You can order it through "The Christian Sun," 1536 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By Rev. S. M. Lynam.

King's Skeleton Found.—

A skeleton, believed to be that of King Richard III of England, was unearthed recently in Leicestershire, England. The skeleton has been turned over to the Leicestershire Museum. King Richard III took part in the closing stages of the Wars of the Roses, and was killed in the battle of Bosworth, in 1485. He is credited with the death of Prince Edward, son of Henry VI, and with the death of Henry himself.

England Plants Trees.—

About 18,000,000 trees have been planted in Great Britain in the last three years since the government act went into effect paying to private individuals approximately fifteen dollars for each acre planted in trees or cleared for such planting. America still has enough trees, but at the rate they are now being cut, it is not so far away when the United States will have to follow the British example in tree planting by private individuals. The government is already doing much along this line.

Some Buffalo Still.—

There are still eight hundred buffalo in the Yellowstone National Park. It is thought advisable to dispose of some of this herd, since there is not enough pasture for all of them. Many zoos and parks have asked that some of of these buffalo he sent to them. It will be a fine thing to have buffalo made available for the children to see. The buffalo has played a large role in the history of American settlements to the westward, and to know the buffalo will add to the interest in the study of history.

Du Pont Aids Negro Education.—

Pierre S. du Pont has recently given his promise to bear a large part of the cost of a new science building for Lincoln University, in Delaware, an institution for negro education supported by Presbyterians. Mr. du Pont has already manifested his interest in negro education by giving one million dollars for the construction of model day-school buildings in Delaware. It is a fine thing when the colored race can find friends like Mr. du Pont. It would mean much to the colored constituency of the Christian Church could such a benefactor be found for the Franklinton Christian College for Negroes. It would be a fine investment, which would net societly large dividends in the years to come. We must go on living among and dealing with the negro, and as a matter of personal interest, we should see that he is fitted to live among us.

Women's Hands Growing Larger.—

For a number of years the hands of women have been growing larger. The increase in the size of women's hands has been noticeably marked since the war. This fact is pointed out by the head of a big London glove manufacturing company. He says:

"There was a fair demand for size 5 1-2 gloves for women, and the average was 6 1-4 and 6 1-2. Today there is practically no demand for the smaller size, and the average is 6 1-2 and 6 3-4, and these are being cut wider." He attributes the increase in the size of women's hands to the widespread participation of women in athletics. These facts, with many others of a similar nature, mean that the day of the clinging vine variety of girl is past. It ought to be a hopeful sign in the life of the race.

Silver Dollars Circulated.—

The United States Treasury is embarking on a campaign to put silver dollars back into circulation. They took the initial step recently when one of these coins was placed in the pay envelope of five thousand Treasury employees. The other government departments are to be asked to do the same. During the past twenty years a steady stream of silver dollars has flowed into the Treasury as paper money has supplanted them in the trade of the receding frontiers. It has been estimated that the upkeep of the paper dollar costs the government about 3 per cent of the face value, while the upkeep on the silver is practically nothing.

What the government is doing in restoring the silver dollar to circulation is making for economy in governmental expenditure.

A Great Church Building.—

The first Sunday in August saw the opening of the new First Baptist Church, Knoxville, Tenn. The edifice cost more than six hundred thousand dollars, and is said to be the largest and most complete within the borders of the Southern Baptist Convention. The building designed for the Sunday School is attracting particular attention throughout the Church world. It contains one hundred and one separate rooms, providing for preaching, teaching, training, social life, recreational activities, and executive offices, with one floor of an entire wing devoted to housing the employed workers of the Church. Great Churches like this are becoming more frequent as the Christian world is coming to understand its responsibility to the world. Gradually our Church buildings are coming to be adequate for the carrying into action the teachings of Jesus.

No Bible War.—

In going on record as opposed to war, the Methodists of the Manitoba Conference stated: "We cannot longer go to the Bible to find justification for war. The glorification of war must end. We, therefore, call upon all teachers of Sunday Schools and all workers with our youth to lose no opportunity to denounce war and the war spirit."

Plans for special Sunday School lessons to promote peace were approved. This step of providing Sunday School lessons to promote peace is a great idea. National prohibition was achieved to a large extent by the temperance lessons in the Sunday Schools, and war can be destroyed by the same means.

Golden Rule in Business.—

That the teachings of the Golden Rule can be practically applied to business is demonstrated by Mr. E. C. Miller, president of a New York manufacturing company established for thirty-eight years.

Explaining his unique idea of how a business should avoid labor troubles, litigation and general business trouble, Mr. Miller says:

"The curse of this world is selfishness. It is at the bottom of all industrial and social troubles. If men can be brought to regard other men as brothers, if they can be induced to love their neighbors as themselves, if men would do unto others as they would be done by, there would be no trouble between capital and labor. Social strife and international conflicts would cease. We, therefore, individually and as a corporation, advocate the Golden Rule with all of our power as an aid to 'peace and good will among men.'"

Expressing this doctrine in four simple rules for the conduct of his business, Mr. Miller says his manufacturing, buying and selling is conducted according to these maxims:

"1. As to our employees: Recognizing the divine principle that 'we are our brother's keeper,' we regard employees as brothers and sisters, children of a common Father, and take the same interest in them as we do in ourselves.

"2. People from whom we buy: It is our determination to do unto them as we would be done by; to attempt to put ourselves at all times in their places as far as possible; and to be as generous as we consistently can.

"3. People to whom we sell: It is our desire to be just, fair and generous with customers and, so far as practicable, to put ourselves in their places in every transaction, always studying their interests as we would our own.

"4. The world at large: It is our desire to share the burdens of others as far as we are able, and to give encouragement and help."

NOTES-PERSONALS

Many pastors have had interesting and successful revivals recently. Why will they not tell SUN readers the good news? The columns of your Church paper are open to you, dearly beloved.

Rev. J. A. Ledbetter, in a recent communication, says: "I am resigning from the Reidsville Church pastorate, my resignation to take effect December 1st. I will be glad to correspond with any Church in need of a pastor."

It is learned that Rev. T. J. Green, Ramseur, N. C., has accepted the pastorate of Shallow Ford, Apple's Chapel, and Hines' Chapel, and contemplates locating at Elon College at an early date. Ramseur's loss will be Elon's gain.

Bro. Ledbetter is one of our wide-awake pastors and has done much the two years he has been at Reidsville to build up a large Sunday School and to largely increase Church attendance. Any Church interested should write him at once.

Elon College had a fine opening last Wednesday, with largely increased attendance over last year. This is the beginning of the thirty-fifth annual session of the college, and one now meets here the sons and daughters of former students and graduates of the institution.

Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D., pastor First Christian Church, Richmond, Va., has spent a strenuous vacation. During August he attended the Chautauqua at Elon College, and the Virginia Valley Central Conference. He has moved, with his family, to 3206 Grove Avenue, just two blocks west of the Church. He filled his pulpit Sunday, both morning and evening.

Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., pastor-emeritus of Suffolk Church, was a recent visitor at Elon College to the great delight of his hosts of friends here. He was on his return trip from Moore's Springs, where he had been resting and recuperating. He feels greatly benefited and returns to his many duties with renewed health, energy and vigor. Dr. Staley is one of our busiest and most interested pastors.

A meeting of all the Convention department heads is called to be held in suffolk, Va., at 10 A. M. September 16th, at the Christian Church. The purpose of the meeting is to consider the best way to put into effect the resolutions and recommendations passed by the Norfolk session of the Convention; also it is requested that if any one has any business with the committee to please get his notification in at once to President L. E. Smith, 4312 Colonial Avenue, Norfolk, Va.

Rev. James L. Foster, formerly of Waverly, Va., and Rev. J. E. McCauley, formerly of Ingram, Va., have both recently moved with their families to Elon College, N. C., where their correspondents should now address them. Both are open for engagement to become pastors of any near-by Churches, and their Fords make charges near-by which were formerly far off. Bro. Foster has moved to Elon to put his daughter and son in college here, and Bro. McCauley is taking some post-graduate work in the college.

The Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention, Lieutenant-Governor J. E. West, Suffolk, Va., chairman, is to meet in annual session at Suffolk, Va., Wednesday morning, September 17th. The other members of the board are Mr. J. M. Darden, Suffolk, Va.; Dr. W. W. Staley, Suffolk, Va.; Mr. K. B. Johnson, Cardenas, N. C.; Rev. H. W. Elder, Richland, Ga.; Dr. C. H. Rowland, Greensboro, N. C.; Mr. J. A. Williams, Franklin, Va.; Dr. G. O. Lankford, Burlington, N. C.; Mrs. W. H. Carroll, Burlington, N. C., and Mrs. W. A. Harper, Elon College, N. C.

The Windsor, Va., pastorate, consisting of our Windsor Church and the near-by Churches—Antioch, Bethlehem and Isle of Wight—has called Rev. W. D. Harward, D. D., of 1508 Elm Avenue, Portsmouth, Va., to become their pastor, and we understand that Bro. Harward has signified his acceptance. This is indeed a field of wide usefulness and one sufficient to challenge the strength, energy and unceasing efforts of a wide-awake and consecrated pastor. We congratulate Dr. Harward on the wide field of usefulness and the splendid opportunity afforded him for service in this pastorate.

Rev. J. E. McCauley having moved to Elon College to do post-graduate work the coming year, leaves Pleasant Grove and Ingram Churches, Halifax County, Va., without a resident pastor. At this writing, so far as we know, the Churches have not secured a pastor for the coming year. This is one of our very best rural fields, and affords a wonderful opportunity for service for the right man. It is hoped that these Churches will be successful in locating in their midst a worthy successor to Bro. J. E. McCauley, who is much beloved by the people and who has wrought so well there for the past two years.

The people of our First Church, Greensboro, N. C., have greatly honored themselves and their beloved pastor, Dr. C. H. Rowland, by building a very ample and beautiful parsonage. The house would do credit to any people, and is, we believe, the most costly and commodious parsonage now owned by any Church of the Southern Convention. No means nor efforts were spared to make the parsonage comfortable, inviting, attractive and sufficient for all home purposes, and we heartily congratulate our Greensboro congregation and their pastor, and his family as well. The number of the parsonage is 315 North Edgeworth Street, where Dr. Rowland may be found or addressed.

Rev. L. E. Smith, president of the Southern Convention, has called a meeting of the "heads of the departments" of the Convention, at Suffolk, Va., 10 A. M. September 16th, in the Christian Church, "for the purpose of considering plans by which we may put into effect resolutions and recommendations made by the Norfolk session of the Convention." This looks like business. It does little good to meet in our Conference and Conventions and adopt recommendations and resolutions and then not take any steps to put them into effect. We do not know what President Smith has in mind further than his announcement, but presume that he wishes all the departments of the Convention to get busy in trying to do that which the Convention at Norfolk said, by vote, should be done. The idea, at any rate, strikes us most favorably, and we hope that great good will result from the meeting.

A LADY CANDIDATE.

There is a strong probability that a woman will be the next Governor of Texas. In the recent Democratic primary held in that State, Mrs. Miriam A. Ferguson won the nomination by an overwhelming majority over her opponent, Judge Felix Robertson, a mere man. Usually the Democratic nomination in Texas is equivalent to election, and if the men are as gallant as they ought to be, and the women as loyal as they ought to be, Mrs. Ferguson will be the chief executive, or executivess, of a great State after the November election. Mrs. Ferguson claims to have sought the nomination for the purpose of vindicating her husband, who was impeached while Governor about seven years ago. A sort of vicarious vindication, it would seem. The result of the final election, when Democratic men and women, and Republican men and women, and all other kinds of men and women, will exercise the sovereign right of franchise, will be awaited with keen interest.

CHARACTER AND EDUCATION.

Another element must be secured in the training of citizenship, or all else will be in vain. All of our learning and science, our culture and our arts, will be of little avail unless they are supported by high character. Unless there be honor, truth and justice, unless our material resources are supported by moral and spiritual resources, there is no foundation for progress. A trained intelligence can do much, but there is no substitute for morality, character and religious convictions. Unless these abide, American citizenship will be found unequal to its task.—President Coolidge.

SEVEN IMPOSSIBLE THINGS.

1. To enter heaven without the new birth.—John 3:5.
2. To serve two masters.—Luke 16:13.
3. To bear fruit without Christ.—John 15:4.
4. To change his wicked heart.—Jer. 13:23.
5. To please God while pleasing the flesh.—Rom. 8:8.
6. To serve God without faith.—Heb. 11:6.
7. To escape judgment without a Saviour.—Heb. 2:2-3.—Gospel Message.

NOTICE.

To any Church or Churches who have not secured a pastor for the coming Conference year:

I will be glad to correspond or to hold a service for you if you choose. I expect to engage in full-time Church work if the Lord so opens up a field of labor for me. I will be glad to learn of any Church or Churches that have not called their pastor for next year. If you will give me an appointment, I will be glad to come to your Church and worship with you.

Yours in the Master's cause,

W. C. MARTIN.

NOTICE TO CHURCHES OF THE NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE.

At the last session of the North Carolina Christian Conference, no place was selected for the next annual session. The executive committee was authorized to receive invitations from Churches and select the place of meeting this fall. Churches that wish to invite the Conference or that are willing to entertain the next session of the North Carolina Christian Conference which meets Monday evening, November 24, 1924, will send their invitations to the chairman of the executive committee.

W. C. WICKER,
Chairman Executive Committee.

HOME-COMING SERVICE.

The home-coming service of Damascus Christian Church was a great occasion. Multitudes came from far and near to attend the service. The Church was filled to its capacity and many were unable to find seating space. At the 11 o'clock hour, Dr. W. W. Staley preached a great sermon, much to the delight of the many who heard him.

In the afternoon, W. C. Wicker called the roll of pastors and spoke briefly concerning the life and work of those who have entered into their reward. The pastors who have served the Church are as follows: John Wilson, founder and builder of the first house of worship, which was called Wilson's Meeting House, was born August 17, 1755. Bro. Wilson came from the Methodist Church with James O'Kelly, 1792, and began his work at this place during that year. His first child, Miss Annie Wilson, was born 1776, according to the old family record taken from the old family Bible, printed in Edinburgh, Scotland, MDCCXCV. Following John Wilson were Rev. George Garrison Walker, Rev. Robert G. Tennin, Rev. T. J. Fowler, Rev. J. N. Farrell, Rev. Edwin W. Beale, Rev. D. A. Long, Rev. W. S. Long, Rev. P. H. Fleming, Rev. J. W. Holt, Rev. W. T. Walker, Rev. W. G. Clements, Rev. P. T. Klapp, Rev. W. C. Wicker, Rev. Herbert Scholz, Rev. J. O. Atkinson, Rev. A. P. Barbee, Rev. A. T. Banks, Rev. B. J. Howard, Rev. R. F. Brown, and Rev. J. S. Carden, the present pastor. Rev. P. T. Klapp, Rev. W. C. Wicker, Rev. A. T. Banks, Rev. B. J. Howard, and Rev. J. S. Carden, pastors of the Church, were present at the service, and Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., Rev. C. H. Rowland, Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, Rev. O. D. Poythress, and Rev. J. E. McCauley were present at the service, the latter two having been reared in this Church.

The second building was erected by Mr. Chas. Ellis as carpenter, and the third building, which is still a good building, was erected by Mr. J. C. Blake and the membership of the Church under the direction of Rev. W. G. Clements.

Rev. Geo. Garrison Walker was born October 10, 1816, and died March 10, 1865, in the forty-ninth year of his age. He united with the North Carolina and Virginia Conference in 1830, and immediately entered into the work of the ministry with industry and perseverance. At the Conference at Union Chapel, Alamance (then Orange) County, in 1840, he was appointed one of the itinerants and assigned to the Surry Circuit in Virginia.

The Conference met in 1841 at Apple's Chapel, in Guilford County, N. C. The committee on ordination made their report, in which they recommended Geo. G. Walker for ordination. The following presbytery: Elders Daniel W. Kerr, Joseph H. Bland, and Lewis Craven, conducted the ordination at 11 o'clock on the succeeding Lord's Day (November 3d), solemnly setting apart G. G. Walker to the work of the ministry. He attended Conference at Union, Virginia, 1842; Apple's Chapel, 1845; Union, Alamance, 1846; Pope's Chapel, 1847; New Providence, 1848; was fraternal messenger to Eastern Virginia Conference, 1853; O'Kelly's Chapel, 1854, and was elected a delegate to the Southern Christian Association. He attended the Southern Christian Convention, 1856, at Union, Alamance, and was appointed to consider the organization of the Southern Christian Convention. He attended Conference at Hank's Chapel, 1856; at Bethlehem, 1857, where he was a member of a committee on Graham Institute, served on committee of ordination, and advocated an educated ministry. He was again elected a delegate to the Southern Christian Convention, which met at Cypress Chapel, 1858. At this Convention, THE CHRISTIAN SUN was transferred to the Southern Christian Association, and he was on a committee to devise a plan for the publication of the paper. He attended Conference at Pleasant Hill, Alamance, 1860; at Damascus, Orange, 1862, and was appointed on the committee on temperance. This was the last Conference he attended.

Mr. Walker was married twice. He first married Miss Anderson, of Chatham County, a great-granddaughter of Rev. James O'Kelly. She died, leaving one child, Rev. W. T. Walker. He was married a second time, to Miss Sallie Sellars, of Alamance County. He lived in Graham several years, about 1853-1854, and finally moved back to Caswell County, and died near where he was born.

It is said of him that "he was a warm advocate of every measure by which the interest of the Church was advanced. Our educational enterprises claimed much of his attention, and received his hearty support. In his domestic relations, he was decidedly happy. He governed his own household in the most pleasant manner. A kind and watchful parent, an attentive and devoted husband, he multiplied all the comforts and joys of home over and over again."

(Next week we will write of Rev. R. G. Tennin.) W. C. WICKER.

THE WORD OF GOD.

This book contains the mind of God, the state of man, the way of salvation, the doom of sinners and the happiness of believers. Its doctrines are holy, its precepts are binding, its histories are true, and its decisions are immutable. Read it to be wise, believe it to be safe, and practice it to be holy. It contains light to direct you, food to support you, and comfort to cheer you. It is the traveler's map, the pilgrim's staff, the pilot's compass, the soldier's sword, and the Christian's chart. Here paradise is restored, heaven opened, and hell disclosed. Christ is its grand object. Our good is its design, and the glory of God its end. Read it slowly, frequently and prayerfully. Let it fill the memory, rule the heart, and guide the feet. It is given you in life, will be opened in the judgment, and remembered forever. It involves the highest responsibility, will reward the highest labor, and condemn all who trifle with its sacred contents. AUTHOR UNKNOWN.

"DEFENSE DAY."

No action of any department of our government in recent years has met with as much criticism and as outspoken opposition on the part of as many people as the proposition of the War Department to make September 12th Mobilization Day. It is planned to have all the military forces of the country mobilized and brought before the public on that day. It is claimed by the War Department that it is to be done in the interest of peace, and is intended to show what this country can do in the way of defending itself against an attack upon it. As we see it, the aim of the military leaders can only be to show that, according to their ideas, this country is not able to defend itself, and so to awaken a demand for an increased military power. We know of no policy that is fraught with more danger. And this is especially true at this time, when there is so much of unrest in the world. If a crowd of people were very much excited over something that had disturbed it and worked up its passions almost to the exploding point, it would not do much toward quieting the excitement to have one of their number to go around brandishing a pistol and bragging about what he could do. On the other hand, it would probably result in making every other man who had a pistol put his hand on his, even if he did not draw it. And it would make the man who was unarmed feel that he must arm himself so as to be ready for emergencies in the future. It is a well-established fact that the arming of nations is the great cause of war. It is earnestly hoped by many Christian people that no one, who is not under military command, will encourage this movement in any way, and that all will express their disapproval of it. The future peace of the world will not be gained by a display of military force, but by the cultivation of the acts of peace and the development of Christian fellowship among individuals and among nations.—Presbyterian of the South.

PALM STREET CHURCH.

Bro. A. H. Hinshaw gave his wife a delightful surprise birthday party at their home on the High Point Road Tuesday night, September 2, 1924. There were several friends and relatives present, including Rev. H. B. Hall, pastor of Palm Street Christian Church, and his family. After Mrs. Hinshaw recovered from her surprise, several of her friends presented her with beautiful and useful gifts. Mrs. Hinshaw then made a beautiful talk, expressing both her delight and surprise.

Several games were played during the evening, after which a delightful course of ice cream and cake was served.

Palm Street Christian Endeavor Society met at the home of Miss Zonnie Hobbs, on Magnolia Street, Friday night, August 28th. Officers were elected for the ensuing three months consisting of Miss Evelyn York, president; Miss Zonnie Hobbs, corresponding secretary; Mr. R. L. Fine, recording secretary; Miss Lula Scott, treasurer.

After the business was transacted, the meeting was turned into a social and several games were played, after which Mrs. Hobbs served a delicious ice cream course. Those present were Mr. and Mrs. Shelton Brady, Misses Lula and Lettie Scott, Misses Mamie and Maud Apple, Miss Evelyn York, Miss Ophelia Morris, Miss Edna Myrick, Miss Gladys Hinshaw, Miss Beulah Stout, Mr. Theron Stout, and Mr. R. L. Stout.

OUR TOBACCO BILL.

The tobacco bill of our nation during the last five years has jumped 50 per cent. We now spend over three billion dollars per year. This money would pay for the construction of 100 Lincoln Highways every year. It would buy a good automobile for half of the families of the United States, and would pay the salaries of all the public school teachers of the country for more than four years.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

DENOMINATIONAL OR CHURCH STRENGTH.

The strength of a denomination does not consist of members, nor is it dependent upon mere numbers. There are two factors, however, which constitute the strength of a denomination, or a Church.

The first of these factors is faith. No cause or institution is any stronger than the faith of those supporting the cause or constituting the institution. "As is thy faith, so be it unto thee," is as true of a Church as it is of an individual. The Christian Church today is as strong as and no stronger than the faith of its membership in its principles, purposes and polity. Behind every strong Church is a great faith. If we of our day have lost faith in the Church of our fathers, then to that extent the Church is weak, and will become weaker with a decreasing faith. Have we, of our time, a deep and an abiding faith in the cause our Church champions, in the principles for which it stands, in its plans and purposes in the world? Have we a faith in the future of the Church, in its power to do and dare, in its ability to grow and achieve, in its strength and courage for world tasks and world conquests? If we have such a faith, then the future of the Church is assured. The fundamental factor in denominational or Church strength is faith.

A second factor, hardly less fundamental than faith, is the ability to do team-work. The Church is no stronger than is the strength of the group willing to work together in any task the Church sets itself to accomplish. The success of any movement of the Church and the strength of any institution or department of the Church is limited solely by the strength and solidarity of the group who are willing to put their efforts, their energies, and their lives into a united effort for "the movement," the department" or "the institution." Gideon's strength was not in numbers, but in the united effort and the solidarity of that group of three hundred who were willing to dare and die for Israel.

Elon College, the Orphanage, missions, and THE CHRISTIAN SUN are strong only in proportion to the strength and solidarity of the group who are willing to unite their prayers, and efforts, and their energies in behalf of these enterprises. Neither the Church nor any enterprise or institution of the Church is suffering from lack of numbers, but from lack of group strength, group activities, solidarity of purpose, and of heart, in carrying forward these enterprises and institutions.

There are sufficient resources in possession of the enlisted membership of the Christian in the Southern Convention to support and carry forward with great power and efficiency every enterprise and institution of the General Convention of the Church—North, South, East and West. It is not a matter of numbers nor of resources; it is a matter of co-operative activity, ability to do team-work, a willingness to pull together in achieving the task which the Lord seems to have allotted us. The momentum of any movement, the efficiency of any institution, the progress and power of any Church, are not dependent upon members, but upon a firm, fixed faith in God and in His cause, and in the willingness and ability to move forward together, to do team-work, to unite in group effort in accomplishing the task divinely appointed. God loves the group and multiplies the strength of each member of the group when willing to unite for activity and achievement in His name. That is why He said, through His Son, "Wherever two or three are gathered in my name, there will I be also."

The strength of the Christian Church today inheres solely in those who are willing to associate themselves together through faith in their Church and in their God to carry forward the work and build up the institutions which God has appointed. It is not the 25,000 or the 100,000 who may happen to belong that constitute our strength—nay, verily. It is the group, the brethren and sisters who, united in Christ, are willing and ready to move forward in His name and be co-workers together with Him in building up His cause in the world.

THE EVERY-MEMBER CANVASS.

Very shortly now all our Churches in the Southern Convention will be closing the present Conference year and laying plans for next year. It will be a great pity indeed if every one of our Churches does not plan and put into practice the every-member canvass. This is nothing but fair and just for all the members of every Church. It gives each member an opportunity of saying whether he or she will contribute to the support of pastor, benevolences and missions, and how much they will undertake to contribute in the name of the Lord. It is an attempt to do the Lord's business in an orderly, straight-forward, common-sense and Christian way. The Christian Church has issued a manuel on the every-member canvass that we wish every one of our pastors, Church secretaries and deacons would read. It is prepared in the office of Rev. W. H. Denison, D. D., Dayton, Ohio, and a copy can be had for the asking. We quote briefly from this manuel, that our readers may understand what the every-member canvass is, and also may know its aim:

"The annual every-member canvass is the scriptural plan officially employed by the Christian Church and increasingly approved by experience in our Church and others. It is a personal solicitation of every member of the Church's constituency for a pledge on the weekly plan to provide funds to meet its full share of the benevolences and missionary needs of the entire Church and to meet the needs of the local Church for its current expenses, adequate equipment, maintenance, and extension. The solicitation is made by canvassers going two by two. It has made good. It has come to stay. It has won its place in permanency, not alone from the money value it has contributed to the Church, but through the spiritual values it has revealed. Its increase of the financial strength of the Church has been merely the increase of the means to an end. The increase of spiritual welfare when the canvass is rightly conducted is even more noticeable than the financial gain.

"The aim is to approach as nearly as possible to the ideal of subscriptions proportionate to ability, from every man, woman, and child of the congregation, both for the current expense budget of the local Church, and for the benevolence and missionary needs of the whole Church. It is not a scheme for promoting something. It is a measure of fraternal helpfulness, an enlistment in the brotherhood of service."

"THE HAZARD OF THE MINISTRY."

DEAR EDITOR:

I have just read the editorial in THE CHRISTIAN SUN of August 21st entitled "The Hazard of the Ministry." I agree most heartily with the writer's position as to the second hazard; but I find myself unable to agree with the writer's position on the first hazard. I cannot conceive of a real Christian minister who does not feel free to think, and also to express his thoughts. And to intimate that a minister isn't free "to think God's thoughts after Him" is a suggestion that is likely to make the wrong impression. What is a minister for if not "to think God's thoughts after Him?" I do not think the discussion of this first hazard is quite fair to our ministers, for I believe there is no class of people that do more thinking, and expressing their thoughts, than our ministers. I hope, therefore, that no one will believe the sentiment that seems to me is expressed in first part of the article referred to above—that to enter the ministry means the entering of a sort of social prison, where one will not be free even to think, or to express his thoughts.

If there is a hazard along this line, it is in connection with the minister, or ministers, who think, and express their own thoughts, or the thoughts of another, which are in no way similar to the thoughts of God as expressed in God's Word, the Bible.

I believe there is no field that offers better opportunities for thinking, or for expressing one's thoughts, than that of the ministry. Hence, no one need stay out of the ministry from fear that his ability to think or to express his thoughts, will be crippled. J. F. MORGAN.

Winchester, Va.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN offers $50.00 (fifty dollars reward to the person, male or female, young or old, who will devise a plan or suggest a method by which all pastors in the Southern Christian Convention can be induced to become so interested in their own Church and its paper as to write occasionally for THE SUN and try now and then to secure a list of subscribers to THE SUN. In conversation or in Conference, all pastors will speak well of their paper, but to get them sufficiently interested to do something in a practical way for the paper—well, that is what our $50.00 reward is for!

RELIGION IN COLLEGE LIFE.

(Opening address at Elon College, N. C., September 7th, by President W. A. Harper LL. D.)

"In the beginning, God."—Gen. 1:1.
"In the beginning was the Word."—John 1:1.

Creeds are not character, but they are wonderfully influential in molding it. What a man believes may not affect his life, but in most cases it does in most telling fashion. What the children were taught in our public and Sunday Schools to believe about the alcoholic evil made this nation dry. What Germany believed about her destiny transformed a gentle and lovable people into a nation of Huns, thirsting for the blood of their fellows. What Paul believed about Jesus made him the greatest crystallizing center of Christian thought and philosophy the centuries have produced. His belief in God through Jesus Christ transformed a cursing fisherman into the Pentecostal preacher. What a selfish tax-gatherer thought of Jesus magnified him into the author of the humanitarian gospel of the Son of God. His religious creed made out of a baseball player the flaming evangelist of our day—Billy Sunday. Creeds of the Christian type have in every generation made little folks into big ones, transformed pigmies into giants, out of the scum and refuse of the social order created spiritual seers for men's lives. What you believe in your heart regarding any issue of life tremendously uplifts or handicaps your fnture.

And this is particularly true of our belief in regard to God. The kind of person men believe God to be is reflected in every sphere of their living. Home life, business ethics, governmental aims and methods, with all the other interests of living are vitally affected by the conception men entertain of God. When, as in the opening chapters of the Old Testament, men regarded God as an avenging person, vengeance was the highest ideal of personal, social and governmental life. When, later, the Hebrews conceived of Jehovah as a God of justice, the Ten Commandments glorified the record of their enlarging experience and reflected their growing views of man and God. When the prophets, with expansive vision, came to see Him as the God of mercy, the whole nature of Israel's life began to shape itself in terms of that nobler concept. When Jesus taught that God is more, that He is not only a Father, but our loving Father, and that all men everywhere are brothers, under obligations to sacrifice their lives the one for the other, Christian civilization was born. Through nearly twenty centuries it has been growing and growing. It is not full-grown yet, but one of these days the conception of God as loving Father and of men as mutually sacrificing brothers will transform this world into the paradise of God. The uplift this concept has so far brought to womanhood, to childhood, to prisoners, to the poor, to science, to scholarship, to the governments of men, to individual life—these are a wonderful presage of the ultimate victory that shall crown the banners of the Christ ideals of God and of man. The Christian conception of God satisfies the deepest longings of the heart and challenges men to ever-enlarging knowledge of God and of His purposes for His children.

We need to keep this conception of God ever before us. We need to order our life, every act, every thought, every aspiration of our life in terms of this Christian view of God. Such practice on the part of any person will make, out of the most ordinary experiences of his daily living, avenues of fellowship with God. Washtubs have become cathedrals in the happy practice of recognizing God in every experience or circumstance, and the daily routine of college-life, the preparation and recitation of lessons, has for those who possessed the key been the doorway to the Holy of Holies for the soul of aspiring youth. This is not folly, it is fact; it is no mysticism, it is the testimony of rich and uplifting experience. In the very beginning of your college career, therefore, practice the presence of God. Commune with Him. Listen for His voice. Take time to realize His presence. Learn to fellowship with Him. Whenever the sense of His presence grows faint, pause and say, "God is here, God is here," and He will hallow that place by a conscious revelation of Himself to you. When temptation comes or discouragement or doubt, strive to realize the presence of God. In that realization, there is hope for your life; without it, all is lost.

"But," you say, "isn't this strange doctrine for a college to teach? Aren't college men and women expected to be above such practices? We have been given to understand that higher education is against religion. How can we know God?" In answer, let me say that religion is the science of God's and man's relationships. The Christian religion is a special way of interpreting these relationships, and judgment and history agree in concluding that it is the best way; that it is the altogether satisfying way. During your college course you will, like all honest men and women, face all the facts bearing on this subject. You will study other religions and the sciences and philosophies of life, and you will draw your own conclusions. You will find that underlying every science there is some axiomatic principle. Chemistry assumes its atom or its electron. Physics assumes its molecule. Biology is founded on a protoplasmic cell. Religion assumes God. "In the beginning, God," begins our Christian Bible, and the idea is repeated in different form in the opening verse of the gospel, according to John. The concept runs like a golden thread throughout the Scriptures. Yet, despite this fundamental view, men have, in every age, found themselves like Job, asking, "Canst thou, by searching, find out God?" Some of you, no doubt, have already asked yourselves that question. The answer to it is "yes." Your entire college course is to be a progressive confirmation of that answer, and as the years come and go and your understanding of God becomes more personal and intimate, you are going to answer affirmatively Job's further inquiry as to man's ability "to know the Almighty unto perfection." Your conception of God will mount as experience enlarges the contacts of your life with His spirit. Our loving Heavenly Father is no static being. His personality is infinite in every direction and in each age, in each individual life, enlarging conceptions of Him may be grasped and experienced. It is your choice privilege this year to confirm this fact in personal and social living. Assured that God is, exemplify in every experience this year the evidence that you are practicing His presence and you will see this college becoming increasingly Christian in the finest concept of that word.

But there are reasons justifying the chemist in assuming the existence of his atom or electron. The physicist likewise can justify his right to take his molecule for granted. And so can the biologist rightly assume his cell. The religionist, too, has reasons for making the foundation of his science the thought that God is fundamental in the spiritual life and that without Him all is vain, and we are without hope in the world. What are his reasons for asserting, with the author of Genesis, that the very origin of all things depends upon our acceptance of the principle that we must assume "in the beginning, God," as the only possible explanation of the world, including man?

Briefly, we may say there are five such reasons, any one of them sufficient, but combined giving such power to the concept as to render it impregnable. And the first of these is nature, the world and realm of science. It was an astronomer, one of the world's greatest, who looking up into the heavens, declared that in our endeavor to understand the universe we are but thinking God's thoughts after Him. So testifies the chemist. So testifies the biologist. So testify all the men of science who have in their studies undertaken not only to investigate, but also to interpret nature. No mechanical theory can explain the natural world. Nature had a first cause, and that first cause reverent scientists have discovered to be God, a being whose infinite intelligence, as exemplified in nature, transcends the power of man in any achievements he has aspired to, and outreaches his farthest limits of hopeful competition. I recently visited the water-plant of a city of millions of inhabitants—the work of man. And I thought of Shakespeare's eulogy on man as the paragon of the ages, and also of the psalmist's praise of him as being but a little lower than God, and I was proud to claim kinship with a being of such powers. And then I thought of nature's water system, with its oceans, its springs, its rivers, with the clouds as its pumping-station, so that the life and happiness of plant and animal are amply provided for, and with no break in the machinery at any time. And I said: "How small is man? We would know that man exists by the evidence of his works. We know that God is, by the evidence of the natural world—His handiwork.

Not only the fact of the natural world, but the evidence of design in it speaks for the existence of a directing personality back of it all. That directing personality the spiritual seers of the race have ever recognized as God. No science can speak with greater authority respecting the presence of design in the world of living things than biology. Every form of life fits into a beautiful symmetry when rightly understood. The whole physical world points to the presence of a being able to utilize it in joy and for the glory of its Maker. That being, science, as well as religion, agrees in designating as man. But the forces of nature and the ideals of religion unite in the concept of a growing synthesis of forces and ideals making possible increasing joy and happiness for this being. God evidently purposed great things for man and for His world as man's material servant. With the poet, we can say that, through the ages one increasing purpose runs, and that man's opportunities enlarge with the processes of the suns, looking for "the one, far-off divine event," which is nothing more nor less than God's original purpose for His creation. And so we have in the evidence of design in nature a great and convincing reason for our belief in God.

A third approach to the discovery of God is to observe Him in history. Men who have believed in God have added to the happiness of mankind. Their spiritual achievements are a rich racial heritage. Nations that have served God have risen in the things that dispassionate judgment rates as worth-while. Whenever nations have forgotten God, they have fallen. Greece was in her glory of Athenian supremacy when her people lost their religious sense. Right at that point, the historian Grote dates the decay of Greece. Germany, in our day, furnishes a notable example of what happens to a great people when their religious faith wavers. Belief in God always has made a difference in the life of men and of nations. Observation of the effect the belief in God has over individual and national life is a strong tonic to any earnest seeker

ELON LETTER.

Elon began her thirty-fifth annual session at 9 o'clock on the morning of September 3d. It was the first time the beautiful and magnificent Whitley Auditorium, made possible by the great-hearted J. M. Darden, had been in use for an opening service. With friends and students, the spacious assembly-room was nearly filled. The occasion was fitting.

Dr. W. W. Staley was present for the first time at an opening exercise of our college. He was president here for eleven years, but had never attended an opening chapel service. Of course, he made a speech—a memorable one. He spoke on "Three Unpopulars." They were the unpopular subject, the unpopular professor, and the unpopular student. He punctuated his remarks with witticisms, which flavored them to the taste of everybody, if the sudden outbursts of laughter could be taken as indication of approval. Dr. Staley says he makes his most telling speeches when he is called on ex tempore. Well, he made a good one, all agreed, at the first chapel service. He does not advise inexperienced preachers, however, to try to ex temporize.

The work of the new year has begun auspiciously. Faculty and students seem bent on making the session a noteworthy one from the standpoint of co-operation and good fellowship. The new faculty members are taking hold of their work in dead earnest. The new era, to which such frequent reference is heard, bodes well for Elon.

The enrollment, too, is good. There were thirty-five more students here the opening day than a year ago, and there are as many here today as there were the entire year last year. This is our attendance situation, despite the opening of the M. P. College, from whose constituency we have been drawing from fifty to sixty pupils annually, many of whose students properly left us to be loyal to their own college.

But it takes more than buildings and students and skilled teachers to make a Christian college. It takes co-operation, fellowship, harmony and loyalty on the part of all these, and it especially takes the power of the Spirit as a conscious molding force present in the whole life of the institution. The spiritual forces of life are orderly forces, and Elon has been disordered since her fire. With new possibilities of orderliness, the new era here should, under the blessing of God, reflect in every department of the college life and activity the presence and leadership of the Spirit. This is the hope and aspiration of the college for the session just begun.

BETHLEHEM LETTER.

Bethlehem College opened last year with fifty students, and while the publicity work this year for students did not begin until late in the season on account of the college changing presidents, and mostly the whole faculty, no one wanted to assume the responsibility of getting out new catalogues, so we had nothing in printed form to get the college before the public at the importune time; but we redoubled our diligence and efforts and rolled up our sleeves and went to work and remained on the job and set as our goal 100 students for the coming year. When school opened, September 1st, we had about 80 matriculations, with others to follow, and we feel quite sure that by the opening of the next semester we will more than reach the 100 mark.

Everybody concerned is perfectly elated over the fine opening of the school, which has only been in operation one year.

We have a faculty consisting of the following members, who are all proficient in their work: Dr. S. L. Beougher, Prof. Herbert Scholz, Jr., Prof. S. M. Lynam, Mrs. S. M. Lynam, Mrs. T. M. Swint, Miss Victoria Adams, Prof. O. C. Fincher, Mrs. P. M. Beougher, Rev. E. M. Carter, Miss Alma Beougher.

We have a fine student body this year, and while school has just been going on for one week, they seem to be enjoying their work and appreciate every effort that the faculty are making in their behalf.

We are looking forward to a very enjoyable and profitable year, and if we can have the co-operation of the student body, parents, community and Church, we certainly will not be disappointed. S. L. BEOUGHER.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

QUESTION No. 1: What is Evangelism?—By evangelism we mean the processes by which the individual becomes acquainted with the nature, character, and will of God, and the conformation and expression of life in keeping with the nature, character, and will of God as manifested in Jesus Christ. Our initial business, whether dealing with the young child in the Christian home, or the pagan in the non-Christian land, is to make known to him God. In this proceedure we may well look to Jesus Christ, for He was the world's greatest evangelist. His message and methods are fit examples for all ages and times. It matters not whether he is laying his hands upon a baby's head or talking to a woman at the well, having a midnight talk with Nicodemus, or speaking to multitudes on the mountainside or seashore, His message and method were adapted to the temperaments and needs of each. With unabated zeal, He carried on the work of evangelism. He knew no "special seasons." Anywhere, any time, He found an individual in darkness He sought to enlighten the mind and soul of such a one. His was a strenuous, continuous program of evangelism.

QUESTION No. 2: What is Personal Evangelism?—By personal evangelism we mean the enlistment, training and active participation in soul-winning by every professed follower of Christ, especially the laity in our Churches. Each individual has a personality, plus training, plus the presence of the Holy Spirit, and plus personal effort, which surely makes such a one equal to winning others for Christ. "Kingdom Enlistment Week" seeks to capitalize the latent and dynamic powers in the individual lives of perhaps 90 per cent of our Church membership, and, by enlistment, training and service, utilize them in soul-winning. This personal work is done largely outside the Church walls, in private, and only the worker, the unsaved, and Christ present.

We will be glad to send free to any active pastor in the Southern Christian Convention our booklet, "How to Win People for Christ." It contains specific instructions as to the observance of "Kingdom Enlistment Week." Address McD. Howsare, Executive Secretary, Department of Evangelism and Life Service, Room 23, C. P. A. Building, Dayton, Ohio.

GOOD NEWS FROM REVIVALS.

DEAR BRO. EDITOR:

May I give SUN readers a report of my evangelistic activities for the past two months? I fear some of the news will already be old, but it is news just the same. My first efforts were with Rev. H. M. Gray, at Lanett, Ala. We held this meeting in June. This was a very fine meeting, continuing for two weeks. I was in the meeting most of the time. We had a fine attendance and good order. The Church was greatly established in the faith of Jesus Christ, and I think about thirty souls were added to fellowship.

We may expect great things of Lanett Christian Church in the near future. A great field of usefulness is before them, and under the leadership of their wide-awake humble pastor, they will do great things for God. My next meeting was at Langdale, Ala. I spent a week here also with Bro. Gray. The meeting continued for two weeks. Rev. E. M. Carter was the evangelist for the second week. We had good crowds, good attention to the Word, but no visible results.

Our little band at Langdale are very much handicapped on account of not having a place suitable to hold their regular meetings. However, we were very grateful to the Baptist and Methodist pastors for the use of their pulpits one Sunday each. It was a great treat to me to be at Langdale again. I met some of my old friends, but many of them have crossed over the river and are resting under the shade of the trees. God bless their memory.

My next meeting was in my own field at pleasant Grove Church. We began here the third Saturday in July and continued one week. Rev. A. H. Shepard came to help me, but he was not well and did not remain until the meeting closed. While here, he delivered some good gospel messages. We were all sorry he had to leave, and especially so on account of his sickness. We had a good meeting, received two members to fellowship, and the Church was revived.

Fourth Saturday in July our revival began at New Hope, and continued one week. Rev. H. M. Gray came Monday and assisted us through the meeting. Bro. Gray delivered strong gospel sermons, and sinners were saved, believers were made glad, and twenty converts were added to the Church roll, for which we give our Father the glory. The Church was much revived and strengthened spiritually.

Beginning Saturday before the first Sunday in August with the Church at Beulah, we held a great meeting, continuing one week. Rev. Gray came and helped us from Monday night until the meeting closed. Every one enjoyed Bro. Gray's preaching, had fine order and large congregations, and a real spiritual feast. The Holy Spirit came in convicting power. The people of God rejoiced, and thirty souls were made happy in His love, and all of them united with the Church. This was one of the best meetings I have ever held at Beulah Church, and I have held thirty-three.

Second week in August I attended Chautauqua at Bethlehem. I am indebted to Antioch Church for the privilege, which I certainly do appreciate.

Third Sunday in August Rev. McD. Howsare preached the opening sermon at Antioch Church, the meeting continuing one week. Rev. H. W. Elder came and helped us from Monday until the 11 o'clock service Friday. We had a great meeting. Large crowds and good order prevailed throughout the meeting. The Church was much revived, and twenty-two new converts joined the Church. We all enjoyed the meeting and praised God for the victory.

Fourth Sunday in August I baptized nineteen converts at New Hope, preached a funeral there at 11 A. M., baptized in the afternoon twenty-two converts at Antioch, reached home about sundown, left again at 9 P. M. on an all-night journey to North Alabama to bury Rev. J. W. Elder, who died in a hospital at Chattanooga, Tenn., Friday night before.

Our Church in Jackson County, Ala., is in deep mourning on account of the seemingly untimely going of their humble pastor. Bro. Elder was a great and good man, beloved by every one who knew him. We laid his body to rest in the silent city of the dead at Pisgah, Ala., in view of the Church he labored so hard to establish. Our work there must be provided for, and under the blessings of God will be.

We reached home Tuesday at 12 M., tired and warm, but thanking God for having been able to make the trip. This letter is already too long, so I will close, with a burdened heart, but rejoicing in His love. G. D. HUNT.

REOPENING OF SANFORD CHURCH.

Sunday, July 13th, was a day long to be remembered by our people here. After being out of our Church since January, we "moved in" for our opening services. Bro. J. U. Gunter, superintendent of the Sunday School, and Bro. J. W. Stout, secretary of the Church, had written letters to members and friends of the Church and Sunday School, urging their attendance. Perhaps there were more people in attendance at the S. S. hour than had ever attended Sunday School here. The congregation at the evening service was also large. The programs prepared for these services were well rendered and well received. Among the speakers at the morning session was President W. A. Harper, who gave a strong and helpful address. We assure Dr. Harper that our people here are always glad to have him visit us. Mr. and Mrs. Sam Davis were with us, and it is putting it mildly to say that they contributed much to the interest and success of the occasion. Altogether, it was a great day.

Our Church was rebuilt according to the plan of the former one with the exception of some interior changes, notably of pulpit and choir arrangement, which we think adds very much in appearance and efficiency. We are thankful to God for His goodness to us, and we desire to serve Him better in our new home.

R. L. WILLIAMSON.

TAX CUTS NOT MADE AT SCHOOL EXPENSE.

With the cry for tax reduction and retrenchment of expenditures heard from end to end of the nation, it was expected that as new town and county budgets were made up, schools would suffer, for it is most often in the school-house that the first cut is felt. But such has not been the case. Dr. John J. Tigert, United States commissioner of education, says:

"The worst is over and the schools have won. The move for drastic retrenchment, which included school budgets, is growing less, and the agricultural sections of the West and South are recovering slowly from financial depression. I am getting reports from all sections of the country that bond issues are being voted to improve schools and efforts are being made to increase teachers' salaries. For example, Rapides Parish, in Louisiana, which I visited recently, has voted a bond issue of $1,250,000 for its schools. This is a good record for a rural district of the South.

"The South has made comparatively greater progress in its schools than any other section of the country in the past two or three years. It is rapidly catching up to other sections. The interest of Southern States has been thoroughly aroused, and they are setting about to solve problems of administration and financing which formerly were ignored.

"The Western States have adopted, to a great extent, the desirable plan of large State appropriations; for example, $30 for each school child. This is an excellent way of reducing the differential in educational opportunity between the county and the city child. It means advantages for rural schools which the local population are unable to furnish, through lack of funds."

BACK TO SCHOOL.

The most significant event of the year takes place in September, when millions of children go back to school. When the final history of this age of democracy is written, the common school will be set down as its greatest glory.

Here they come—children of all classes, religions and races—trooping into the school-rooms where they sit side by side to study and to learn. This is not only an institution for the informing of the mind, it is the training school of democracy and its importance as the representative institution of the Commonwealth cannot be overestimated.

Class consciousness, snobbishness, intolerance, superciliousness, cannot exist in the atmosphere of the public school. Here the barriers that separate classes and creeds, races and communities are broken down. A sense of mutual sympathy and understanding is developed, the solidarity of the nation is exemplified, and the one loyalty to the flag as against all other obediences and authorities and allegiances is emphasized.

Seventy years ago, Theodore Parker declared: "The common school is the cradle of America's greatness." Twenty-five centuries ago Diogenes said: "Education is the basis of the Greek state." We may well say: the public school is the foundation of the American state.

The greatness and glory of this United States waxes and wanes with the development or decline of the public school. If by reason of the growth of some other system of schools, or by a failure on the part of the citizenship to appreciate the unique civic significance of the public school, it should fall into decay, a body-blow would be struck at the republic.

Some time this axiom of democracy will be universally recognized, and the parents of the nation frankly and patriotically acknowledging this truth, shall gladly send their children to the public schools to be instructed in secular subjects, to be trained in American citizenship, to grow up in the atmosphere of democracy, and to be imbued with the idealistic spirit of Washington and Lincoln. Herein lies the assurance of America's future.—New Age.

RELIGION IN COLLEGE LIFE.

after God. Honest judgment forces the conclusion that the difference in character between the believer and the denier warrants the assumption of a transforming power, and that power is God.

Revelation, too, speaks a cogent word for God. An intelligent being always seeks a means of expression. It is a law of the mental life that intelligence, like other mental functions, dies without expression. God had to express Himself, and must continue to do so. Jesus is described as the Word of God, and what a word He is! Jesus has told the world the kind of Father God is, and that conception has revolutionized all the life of men. The revolution is not over yet. Jesus said the Holy Spirit would lead men into all truth, and that there were things He wanted them to know which they were not able then to bear. God's progressive revelation of Himself to men is the most inspiring fact in the spiritual history of mankind. God could not reveal Himself to the patriarchs in the terms He revealed Himself to the prophets, and through Jesus, and it is a blessed reality that in every age since Jesus came He has given His children growing understanding of what Jesus thought and lived. God is a Spirit. Our bodies are the dwelling-places of spirits. God does speak to these spirits. We call that message our Christian Bible. There is also a personal Bible, known to the individual spirit and to God. God has revealed Himself again and again and again. He will never be willing to do otherwise.

And this brings me to the final evidence for believing in God—the evidence of personal experience. Nature proves that God is, and so does the evidence of a designing Spirit behind nature. Observation of the influence belief in God has had on individuals and nations also adds its weight to our belief and revelation as witnessed in the Bible and in personal conception brings still further weight of authority to our faith. It is, however, our personal experience of God that forever removes the issue from the realm or possibility of doubt. I cannot be separated from my personal experience. You cannot disprove my experience either. You may argue that it was impossible to have had such and such an experience, and that I must have been deluded. Your argument, however, will have no effect on my certainty as to what I actually experienced. A learned philosopher once undertook to prove to his dear old mother of saintly life that she had never experienced God's presence in conversion. She listened to him patiently, and then demolished the validity of all his learned argument by simply asserting, "Son, you think you are right. I know I found God in conversion. I was there." Once the soul has faced God in person, everything else in the way of evidence as to His existence is but corollary to that primal experience. It is the joyous privilege of every one of us to have this experience and to realize that God is present in His world and to each individual heart. None of us need be like Jacob, awakening from his sleep and declaring, "Surely the Lord is in this place, and I knew it not." We may rest assured that God is in every place, and we are privileged to find and fellowship with Him. He will verify His promise to Jacob in our own experience, when He said: "I am with thee and will keep thee in all places whither thou goest."

In the very beginning of the college year in our new plant, I urge you one and all to fasten your eyes and fix your hearts on God. In Him we are privileged to live and move and have our being. He is present, anxious ever to bless and sanctify every experience. We need His help to make our college days most fruitful in service to our lives. And I say it reverently, but I know it is true, He needs us in order to make this campus a wholesome place for the development of Christian character, which in the years to come will be a transforming force for righteousness in the social order. I know no higher inspiration than this thought, that we are workers together with God to redeem the world. May this be the hope and aspiration of our individual and of our associated effort this year. In the very beginning, let us recognize the primacy of God in our college life! And let us live these days that await us, as we hope, in the conscious presence of God as the directing and inspiring agency of our every act and thought and aspiration. So shall Elon students justify the confidence of the great-hearted men and women who have made this splendid plant possible for their use and enjoyment. And so, too, will religion have its proper place in our college life.

A GREAT OPPORTUNITY.

It was my pleasure to attend the Chautauqua at Elon College the first week in August. The attendance was good, the faculty efficient, and the work a real inspiration. This institution is certainly a worth-while agency of our Church, and deserves the most hearty support of every Church in the Southern Convention. I trust that all of our pastors will begin now to plan that no revival meeting shall be held during the Chautauqua week. There are other weeks in which you may hold your meeting, and this is the only week that you and your Church may attend the Chautauqua. If you do not attend the Chautauqua, it will be held just the same; but you and your Church will be the loser.

I started to say a word about Greensboro. I went with my family to Greensboro from Elon, and we stayed for the Church service, visited some friends, drove around the city, etc., and this was a great delight to me—naturally so. The Church there is dear to my heart. It was my first pastorate after I was graduated from Elon. While there I was married. The only reason that I know of for leaving was to further my preparation for my life's work. I am and always have been interested in this Church. Every forward step rejoices my heart, and every lack of progress is a source of regret. The outlook for the Church today is bright; the future promises great things. The pastor, Dr. Chas. H. Rowland, has a vision and a mind to work. The people are optimistic, and naturally follow leadership. May God bless them as they labor together.

I am wondering at this time if pastor and people have fully realized the opportunity that is theirs, and that the responsibilities before them are challenging. They are located in a thriving and progressive city. They are located in a very desirable residential section of the city, a section that is not overchurched, but really underchurched. They own a lot a few blocks from the Church that is a very desirable location for a new building, and I understand that the Church has recently provided a parsonage for the pastor.

They have a number of fine spirits in the Church. The membership is good, but not large enough. They need three times as many as they have at present, and they are there for the taking. If the membership will co-operate with their pastor in every detail, and they together shall give themselves to God fully consecrated for their task, heaven only knows what the morrow shall witness! The First Church of Greensboro has a great opportunity, and upon it rests a great responsibility. God and the Church are expecting much of you. You have the opportunity and privilege of building a great Church. You should build. Erect a building equipped to move your city.

CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY DAY.

Rev. W. P. Minton, D. D., editor of the Christian Missionary, calls to our attention the fact that Sunday, September 14th, has been designated as "Christian Missionary Day." There is a desire, and a most worthy one, that the day be observed, and that every pastor join heartily in the effort to increase the subscription list of the Christian Missionary. It is most fitting that our pastor join in this campaign this year, especially because the second Sunday, which is September 14th, happens to be the birthday anniversary of the late-lamented Rev. J. G. Bishop, D. D., who founded the Christian Missionary and was known so favorably amongst us as our good and great foreign mission secretary.

Dr. Minton will send to any pastor desiring it a printed sketch of Dr. Bishop's life, which can be read by some member, designated by the pastor, in five minutes. Then after this reading it is suggested that a copy of the Christian Missionary be shown to the congregation, and that all who are not subscribers to this paper become so. The price to the Christian Missionary, which should be in every home where The Christian Sun goes, is only 50 cents a year.

The announcement of this special day has been late in reaching us, but we could wish that all our pastors, as soon after the date named as possible, would take some steps to increase the number of subscribers to this worthy and very helpful publication. We need to put the Christian Missionary in more of our homes, for where it goes, the missionary interest will certainly be increased.

MEDITATIONS FROM A PARSON'S DIARY.

"The person who always cries, 'Charity should begin at home,' is the person who, nine times out of ten, allows his charity to begin and end with himself."

A CHRISTIAN EDUCATION PILGRIMAGE.

By Hermon Eldredge.

X. FROM HOLLAND TO BELGIUM.

I am keenly conscious of the fact that glimpses of our "Christian Education Pilgrimage" are giving the frills, and not the fundamentals, of our tour. My excuse for this is a double one. First, the lack of space to give anything but a running comment on the incidents of our journey; and, second, the impossibility of giving an adequate presentation of the educational features and the more serious aspects of our study under Dean Athearn.

But to give a glimpse of this, our chief objective, may I say that our study and Dr. Athearn's lectures in Holland were first in the oldest Protestant Church in Amsterdam, to which the Puritans fled from England and were given asylum in a Church taken from the Roman Catholics after Holland's victorious war with Spain. This old Church was the chapel of a Catholic nunnery, and the old buildings still surround the ancient chapel and are still completely occupied by Catholics and in the center of an annual pilgrimage of more than fifty thousand adherents of the Catholic orders.

It was strange indeed to meet in this (now) Protestant chapel, surrounded on every side by Catholics, to have a lecture by Dean Athearn and Pastor Thompson, of the local Church, on the subject of the rise of the Protestant Church in Holland. For over three hundred years, this Church has served Protestantism and received aid from the government, although always in the heart of Catholicism. In fact, the World's Catholic Congress meets here within a month after our visit.

Leyden, too, was holy ground, and I had the privilege here of standing in the pulpit of the old Holland Church of the Pilgrim Fathers which will seat fully two thousand people and marvel at its magnificence. This Church also was taken from the Catholics at the time of the Spanish war, which was in fact a war between Catholic and Protestant, and since which the country has been officially Protestant, in spite of the great strength of the Catholic Church.

Here also we visited the great university given to the city by the King because of the valiant defense of their city by its citizens in the same war.

Our study and lecture at The Hague centered about the Peace Palace and the rise of International law under Grotios and its relation to Protestantism in Europe. It was here that Dr. Athearn gave to us his vision of an international building and institute of Christian education to stand where the final home of the League of Nations should be. We are committed to the vision, and the day will come when world brotherhood will be a reality, buttressed by Christianity and education. It may be far in the future, but come it must and will.

One of the strongest things which confronted us in Europe was the international court, with the United States on the outside and having no part as a nation in it, while all other nations, except Germany, Russia and Mexico and some unknown nations, are represented here officially. And what makes it all the more strange is the fact that the United States is more largely responsible than any other nation for its existence.

The Peace Palace itself, and its magnificent library, is the gift of Andrew Carnegie, an American, and it was here that Theodore Roosevelt and John Hay contended for great international agreements. Further than this we find everywhere a reverence of Woodrow Wilson as the father of the League of Nations, and finally when the United States government refused to be represented on this court, the League of Nations elected John Bassett Moore, our assistant Secretary of State, who (although an American) now sits on the international court, not as representing our country, which has refused to be so recognized, but representing the League of Nations, in which we have no part.

But as I write, good news comes from London, where great nations are in conference and where Secretary Hughes has made clearer our good intentions toward Europe and world peace and brotherhood. At least, we of this pilgrimage are chagrined to stand in this Peace Palace and international court and to realize that we are acting the part of the priest and the Levite in the parable of the good Samaritan.

Should I attempt to describe the great Peace Palace, I am sure that I would find myself in the predicament of the student who learned to talk in ten languages and then married a wife that would not let him talk in any. But one great feature will always stay with me. It is the group statue of "Sorrow for the Dead," which shows where a gaunt and half-crazed mother walks over the dead bodies of her children, with outstretched arms and fingers half pleading for help and half for vengeance. And then far across the gardens, facing her with upstretched hands, is the "Christ of the Andes," the only hope of world brotherhood and peace. Nothing in all Europe impressed me more than these confronting statues.

But we must leave the Palace and the "House in the Woods," and the cows and canals, and the good people of Holland, and on to Belgium tomorrow.

Antwerp is our first step, and here we have come into the World War country. Everywhere are relics of the invasion, from the city walls to the Cathedral, which is our main objective here.

The great Antwerp Cathedral was saved during the war, as it was used by the German army as a place of worship for four full years, and so escaped desecration. In fact, Belgium owes its present well-being to the fact that Germany fully expected to own and to occupy this land after the war, and so saved it for her future profit, while it wasted the cities and country of France. The great art galleries of Antwerp and Brussels, as well as those of London, Amsterdam and The Hague, were mines of instruction and inspiration to us and the centuries' old Churches and Cathedrals carried us back in a very vivid way through the days when men fought for the faith once delivered to the saints.

We cannot but see and feel the war spirit through these countries, and there are sober men and well informed who fully expect that there will be another world war within ten years. This is an awful thing to contemplate, but the fact that Europe is getting ready for it cannot be overlooked or disputed. Every young man in Belgium and Italy and France and in Central Europe must be prepared by serving in the army, and today there are more men in Europe in arms than there were at the outbreak of the World War. One would think that the world would learn, but back of it all is hate in the hearts of men, and no man knows when or where its flame will flare up and devour.

We stood at the grave of Edith Cavell in Brussells, and our leader tried to tell us about her heroic death, but his voice was drowned by the firing of repeated volleys of musketry and guns shooting to develop marksmanship for the day when they may be called upon to take the life of their enemies. All about us were rows on rows of barracks and thousands on thousands of young men being taught the arts of war for the day of reckoning, which shall surely come if there is not somehow a change in things, and that very soon. It is not an alluring picture, but it is a true one. Somehow, hate must give place to Christ and His love, or this thing which we have called civilization is doomed and there is no other escape for America or the ends of the earth from this catastrophe.

God speed the day when the song of the angels on the plains of Bethlehem will become the creed of the nations. God grant we may do our part to carry it on.

STEWARDSHIP DEPARTMENT OBJECTIVES.

(a) Help our whole brotherhood to realize the importance of stewardship in their personal spiritual lives; to recognize that the whole matter of giving and of the use of money is a vital function of the soul, and of the spiritual life. The spiritual emphasis must be made clear to all.

(b) Study the scriptures and find what they teach about Christian stewardship. Few people realize how much the Bible has to say on this subject. It is a veritable treatise on the principles of stewardship, and gives clear instruction on both personal and Church finance. We must know what the Bible teaches about it.

(c) See that this most important matter, this neglected subject, gets its proper recognition in our thought, prayer, plans, program of life, giving it the same consideration that we do the other great basic themes, such as missions, evangelism, Christian education, service, etc.

(d) That each Church observes a stewardship-finance period every year, putting on a real stewardship program in all departments of the Church, apart from the raising of money; a real study of the whole subject. November and December are the stewardship months in our denominational Church year program.

(e) An annual every-member canvass in every Church, with the weekly offering and duplex envelopes.

(f) Organizing a stewardship-finance department in each regional Convention, each Conference and in each local Church, with an active stewardship-finance secretary in charge.

(g) A simultaneous every-member canvass by the Churches of a Conference annually.

(h) Enlisting tithers. Tithing is entirely different from generous giving. Every Christian should tithe, and every tither should bear testimony by enrolling.

(i) Induce giving in a right spirit and in right proportion so that the grace of giving may be developed.

(j) Makng financial plans in the local Churches and Conferences.

(k) Making clear the definitely accepted principles of Christian stewardship.

(l) Encouraging the Churches to feel their full responsibility for the training of their constituency in stewardship of life and possessions.

(m) See that the subject is regularly presented on Convention, Conference, and institute programs, and that special institutes are held.

These objectives need the hearty co-operation of every Convention, Conference, local Church stewardship-finance secretary, and of all our pastors. We bespeak your help and suggestions.

WARREN H. DENISON, Secretary,
Stewardship Dept. of the Christian Church.

Bro. G. F. Carden, Route 1, Watson, N. C., secretary of Mt. Zion Church, will be glad to correspond with a pastor in reach who may be available and who has no appointment for the second Sunday in each month. Mt. Zion is one of our good country Churches, and it is to be hoped that the right man will be secured as pastor. Let any pastor interested and available write Bro. Carden.

OUR PLEDGES
Men and Millions
Sacred, Solemn and Binding.

These obligations were made through the Church to the Kingdom of God and to all that pertains to building up that Kingdom in the world, so far as our Christian Church is concerned. As Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., has so pertinently pointed out: "A Christian can no more drop his pledges than he can drop his prayers or his Church membership. Misfortune may make it impossible to meet financial obligations--'When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both' (Luke 7:42)--but not till 'they had nothing to pay.' Obligations to God are as binding as obligations to men, and God will help those who try to keep their pledges."

Many are making great sacrifices to meet these obligations and pay these pledges. Is your Church on this list? If not, let's do our best to get it there. If there, let's get it in first place.

Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

PUTTING GOD IN THE LIFE.

"Follow after that which is good, one toward another and toward all."—1 Thess. 5:15.

Christ's invitation has always been "follow me." And in following Him, He has asked no one to do anything He would not do. In fact, He goes ahead and does it first. His whole life's effort was to teach us that all wrong can be made right. And just to the extent that this is done, we are putting God in the life.

For instance, putting God in the life makes right first, and not position or money. It makes duty first, and not pleasure. It makes purity first, and not profanity. It makes kindness and honesty and truth first, and not their opposites. It is power without self-assertion. It is manliness without boasting. It is heroism without bluster. It is mastering strength without violence. It is virility without pugnacity. It is criticism without venom. It is helpfulness, and not wounds. It builds up instead of tearing down. It gives happiness, and not misery. It seeks to serve rather than to be served. It grasps pure thoughts without a strain of conscience. It loves and is gentle in all things. It enables one to say, "I live in harmony with life from above." "This is life eternal, that they might know Thee, the only true God."

Prayer.—Our Father, enable us every day to covet earnestly the best gifts and to live by them forever. Amen.

TUESDAY.

LIFE'S FOUNTAIN OF PLEASURE.

All things, therefore, whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, even so do ye also unto them."—Matt. 7:12.

Why are you so grasping? You may be fortunate in having a large income each year—more than you will ever use; but still you are quarreling, making enemies, scheming to do other men out of what you know justly belongs to them.

You cannot enjoy yourself because to appease your desire for still more possessions you are thinking and planning all the time to get more and more.

It would be more sensible and more benevolent if you would take some other men in with you to relieve you of some work and to enable them to procure the necessary comforts of life and an assurance for the future.

You know some men who are worthy of your assistance. Not successful in their lines, perhaps, but under your guidance they might be made more proficient and so add to their possessions. As long as you have all you need, why not help some poor struggling ones who are unable to get any ahead.

You will find that this will give you a great deal of pleasure, and you will be much better pleased with yourself. Try it. (Copyright, 1924, International Feature Service, Inc.)

Prayer.—Our Father, we pray Thee to help us to see and understand all along the way that Thou hast intended that our possessions should render. Show us where we can help and make the world happier and better for our living in it. In His name we ask it. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

THINGS THAT ABIDE.

"And now abideth faith, hope, charity."—1 Cor. 13:13.

What a trinity of good things! How infinitely rich every believer may become! Earthly things may be taken from us, but faith, hope, love abide. These are the real, true, great things. And they are growing things. Faith increases. "Lord, increase our faith." It comes by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God. It pleases God to find it in us, and is that which enables Him to work through us. It enables us to see the unseen things, begets, inspires and strengthens hope. Hope is a comforting thing. We work by faith, and we rejoice in hope. They go together and support each other and increase together. Great as faith and hope are, love is the greatest. Love is first and last. "In the beginning, love (God) created the heaven and the earth." "By faith we understand love (God) framed the worlds. Love believes, hopes, and endures all things. And love may grow and abide in us. We cannot explain it. It surpasses knowledge. But we know when we love, and we also know that every one that loveth is born of God.

Prayer.—Dear Father, we thank Thee for the things which abide; which the world does not give, and cannot take away. Increase our faith, strengthen our hope, and deepen our love until we shall see the fruits of our faith, the realization of our hopes, and know the love that passes knowledge. In Jesus' name. Amen.—T. E. White.

THURSDAY.

MAKE YOUR RELIGION REAL.

"Let us not love in word, neither in the tongue; but in deed and in truth."—1 John 3:18-24.

These familiar and appealing words are given a new force by the vigorous translation of Moffatt, as follows: "Let us put our love not into words or into talk, but into deeds, and make it real." Everywhere in the world today men are looking for reality. President King tells us that "Religion must be real, rational, vital." Love is the key to the Christian religion. No other religion is based on love. All through the ages, Christian men and women have been trying to show what love could do for others! They have not yet sounded its depths. Jesus was the great interpreter of it. So are mothers, and teachers, and godly men and women! "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples if ye have love one toward another."

Sometimes it is harder to love our brethren than it is to love others. Sometimes they are difficult to get on with. Sometimes they do things better than we do, so that we get angry—like Cain! And one moment of passion may leave a whole life of regret and pain. The only way we can drive out the hatreds of earth, whether they be racial, industrial, national or international, is by making our love "real." Real love also impels to generous giving or in aiding of the unfortunate or in the maintenance of the institution of religion.—Ernest Bourner Allen.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

FRIDAY.

HAPPINESS THROUGH PRAISE.

"In the midst of the congregation will I praise Thee."—Psa. 22:22-25.

Praise for a good thing not only makes the one praised happy, but it reacts upon the praiser and makes him happy. We have great blessings to come to us yet through praising God for what He has done for us.

There is much praise due the Lord, but the most of the greatest debtors do not stop with a thought to praise Him for what they have, much less to praise Him in the assembly as the text enjoins. Perhaps this is not the worshiper's fault altogether, for it may be that the Church does not provide the opportunity for so compassing the altar. This should not be omitted.

How helpful are the words of a comrade telling of his perplexities and discouragements, and of his triumphs through them all. It is a witness of the care and power of God that a sermon is not.

Close the lips from such a service and the fire goes out. They that fear the Lord should speak with one another. Pray for your prayer-meetings. Attend them and never fail an opportunity to render unto the Lord the praise due unto His name.

Prayer.—Our Father, help us to declare Thy name unto our brethren, and may every member of this household learn to praise God with heart and hand, and acknowledge His goodness and mercies in the presence of the people. In His name we ask it. Amen.

SATURDAY.

CARRYING THE FACE OF GOD.

"I have seen Thy face as though I had seen the face of God."—Gen. 33:1-10.

When Jacob met Esau he saw that the storm of his brother's heart was broken, and by that he knew that the storm of God's heart was broken. Suppose he had seen an unforgiving face in his brother. Who can tell what would have been the results?

The world looks for the face of God in the face of man. Suppose the prodigal son had met the son instead of the father.

What kind of face do we carry? Do people see God in our faces, or to the contrary? What is the face of God? It is hostile and indignant in the presence of sin. It denounces crooked men who devour widows' houses, and he calls them "children of hell." It drives desecraters out of the house of prayer. "The face of the Lord is against them that do evil." A bad man is "agged" on by a look of approval from a good man. What about yours? Christ was compassionate. He helped the needy. The bereaved, the impotent, the crushed, the poor, etc., all look into our faces for pity and helpfulness and to see how God feels about it. If we let them pass they look into blank faces, and they wonder if God's face is like that too.

Pray as the Lord may direct your spirit today.

SUNDAY.

THE LORD'S DAY.

"I was in the Spirit on the Lord's Day."—Rev. 1:10.

Let us be in the Spirit today. When we are in the Spirit on the Lord's Day, the gates of a new world open to us. John saw great things because he was in the Spirit.

It matters not what we may be compelled to do on the Sabbath, he who is in the Spirit on the Lord's Day has a spirit that sets him free in which he has access to the spiritual world. While feet and hands toil with the material, his soul is suspended above in thought and devotion that is ecstatic. He bathes in the morning light of the day of Christ's rising sun. In the morning he praises God for the risen Christ, and in the evening he hears the words "Peace be unto you."

Today, let us share the life of the Church, the bride of the risen Lord, who is with us still in tribulation and in glory.

Kiddies' Korner

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT, Editor.

Goodby, Vacation Friends.

DEAR BUSY KIDDIES:

For this is what you are, pretty soon, and who is it that isn't glad to get back into your own school-room again? School means a lot of fun, as well as a lot of work, for all my dear Kiddies, and your editor will be wanting to hear about it all during the year.

I promised to tell you something about some of the "Kiddies' Korner" children I met. I know a lot of you now, and I am glad as can be. One little wee boy, just five years old, told me he liked Peter Rabbit stories best of all in the "Kiddies' Korner. And listen to this, too: he lives in Norfolk, Va., and is the youngest member of Dr. Smith's beautiful new Church there. At one Church there were so many Kiddies that I wanted to stay. We told stories and played—and, yes, we learned a bran'-new song, all by ourselves, too! Wouldn't it be wonderful to hear all the "Kiddies' Korner" Kiddies sing a song all together? My! That would be great! Be sure to have a song you like to sing, all learned real well, so if your editor comes around, you can sing it for her.

Well, if every child who reads this page would write me a letter, I would like it as well as a surprise party. My! I do like to write to you; so why couldn't you spend a few minutes of your vacation writing to me? Tell me what you've done this summer. YOUR EDITOR.

OH! LISTEN TO THIS.

You remember Peter Rabbit's birthday party? My! my! I want to tell you something else about it. After all the children went home that day, and all the dishes were washed and put away, and Peter Rabbit had looked at all his presents again, his dear little head began to nod, and his long little ears to flop.

Mother Rabbit put him to bed at once, and do you know she forgot to have him brush his little teeth. Of course, Mother Rabbit couldn't think of everything.. Away in the night, Father Rabbit heard Little Peter crying. "Daddy," said Little Peter Rabbit, "there is something the matter with my face."

"Just let it go to sleep," said Father Rabbit. "But it can't go to sleep," said Peter Rabbit. So Father Rabbit had to get up and look into Little Peter Rabbit's mouth. Then he had to put some hot, burny medicine into a little rabbit tooth, and after a while the little rabbit tooth went to sleep.

The next day, Mother Rabbit took Peter to the dentist, whose name was Dr. Wise Owl. Do you know what he told Peter Rabbit? Well, it was something about brushing his teeth every night, and it was something that Little Peter Rabbit listened to. Can you guess what it was?

OUR LITTLE BROTHER MISSIONARY.

Albert is a dear little American boy, whose father is a missionary over across the ocean—in Ponce, Porto Rico. Albert came over to the States to see his big sister graduate from Elon College—the college you are going to when you grow up.

One day Albert told your editor a lot about the little children over in Porto Rico. They grew to be good boys and girls, just like my "Kiddies' Korner" children. And, strange to say, sometimes they live so far away from a Sunday School that they can't even hear all these beautiful stories about Jesus, and Moses, and David, and the other little boys that lived long, long ago, and grew up to be good, strong men. You have heard about them in Sunday School, haven't you?

Albert, of course, goes to his missionary Sunday School every Sunday. Some of the boys in his Sunday School class have dark skin—they are living right under the hot sun all the year 'round, and the sun makes their skin dark. They love to play and sing and go in swimming—yes, and just let me tell you something else: They can go in swimming at Christmas time. Now, isn't that queer? Albert says that sometimes he talks in Spanish—the language the little Porto Rican boys use when they talk; then sometimes he talks in our own language—the kind you and I use over here in America.

Wouldn't it be great to be able to talk in two different languages? And when you are a little boy, too, or a little girl! That is really just what Albert can do. And, my! what a happy little fellow he is. He loves to sing and romp and play over there, but he likes to play over here best, for this is where Albert was born—a real American boy he is.

Albert one day, when he grows some more and goes to school some more in the Porto Rican schools, will come back over here and go to college. Until then, if you want to, you could write him little letters—and, my! how glad he would be to get letters from home, for America is Albert's real home, and he is proud of it, too, the same as you.

Would you like to write him a letter? Please do, Kiddies. His address is just as easy as can be: Master Albert Barrett, Ponce, Porto Rico.

When he answers your letter, send it to me, and and we will print it in the "Kiddies' Kirner."

What fun to get a letter from across the big, big ocean!

OLE MR. MOON AND THE FAIRIES.

Every night, Ole Mr. Moon comes creeping out to see the great big world, but the world is so very large that he gets interested in just one part of it, and sometimes it's hard to move on. One night he crept out over a beautiful mountain and saw a valley beneath him, all covered with moonlight, and lovely homes a century old, and green hills for fairy-folks to dance. And listen closely now: under these hills, for miles and miles, that Mr. Moon could not see at all, were wonderful caverns. He had heard about how cold and dark it was—and also how trevelers came from across the seas even to look at all the wonderful pictures inside these dark places underground. This made Mr. Moon unhappy—not because the caves were there, but because his moonlight rays could not pierce the green hills and see these beautiful things for himself.

As he lingered above the hill, a sudden thought came into his age-old head: why not pick up a fairy on a moonbeam and have her tell him the way it all looked—why not? He knew fairies danced into the caverns whenever they wished.

Calling a bright moonbeam, he sent it speeding towards the beautiful valley, whose real name was "The Daughter of the Stars." Now, instead of a band of dainty fairies, the moonbeam jumped—actually jumped—into a gerat tree trunk, and there, dancing and jumping and skipping, were the funniest little men you ever saw—and my! how they did try to get out of the way of the bright moonbeam; but, of course, the big moonbeam chased them and teased them, for that's the way of a moonbeam. And after a while one tiny Elfman ventured to ask the reason they were being chased. Then, what do you think? The moonbeam caught up the saucy little man and sped away as fast as he could carry him.

When the big Ole Moon saw the queer little man, he laughed and laughed. And where do you s'pose he put this tiny Elf? Right on top of his ear—yes—and the little Elfman was so scared, and he held on so tightly, that Mr. Moon said, "Well, my little wee man, I will send you back to earthland as soon as you tell me something I want to know.

"I know a lot," said the Elf, winking both his tiny eyes, and holding on to Ole Mr. Moon's ear tighter than ever; "I know quite a lot, but I can't tell it, not even to you, Mr. Moon—the fairies would never take me with them again—"

"Then here you stay for a hundred years or more," said Mr. Moon. But after thinking a minute and scratching his nose, he said: "Well, Brownie, I'll let you go back on one condition, and that is that you tell me about the Crystal Lake and the Fairy Palace, where the fairies hold their court—tell me about those two wonders of nature inside the earth, and you may go back to earthland at once."

This was too much for the dear little Brownie, so, taking a firm hold onto the big old ear of the old, old man in the moon, the wee man said, in a squeeky voice, "Down under the earth two hundred and fifty feet there grows a fairy palace—that is, the home of the fairies—and, oh! Mr. Moon, this is a wonderful place indeed. It has beautiful arched hallways and columns all sparkling with diamonds, and inside the largest column to the main palace is a sentinel standing with his gun, guarding the home of the fairies; just close 'nuff out in the courtyard, growing in the limestone wall, are the real sure-'nuff figures of a bride and groom, and if you squint your eyes and look well you can see the diamonds on the bride's fingers. You don't believe it? Well, it's all the sure-'nuff truth. I have been there to dance with the fairies scores of times. Oh! don't we have jolly good fun! All the fairies are happier there than any other place in all the earthland, for it's the most beautiful of all fairyland."

Mr. Man in hte Moon had forgotten to shine at all, he was so interested in all this, and down on the earth the Dark Night was capering around and having the time of his life, for it's a fact that Ole Mr. Moon keeps Mr. Dark Night walking a chalkline. But tonight the Man in the Moon didn't care at all. So again Little Brown Elfman had to tell something—this was about the Diamond Lake, just around the corner from the Palace of the Fairies. How he did enjoy telling about this basin of diamonds; this clear water full of stars and transparent brilliancies; how the basin was held by an edge of diamonds that grew all out of sight of man, away down two hundred and fifty feet below the green hills that Mr. Moon love dso well.

And what do you s'pose Mr. Moon did? You could never, never guess. Why, the Brownie man had told about only two wonderful pictures—just two—and when the Man in the Moon remembered the millions and millions of pictures yet that he had never heard of and never could see well, he opened his huge old mouth, and he squinted up his huge old eyes, and then—oh, my! poor Ole Man in the Moon—he just cried, and cried. The little Brownie got all wet with the big, salty tears, and he slipped right off the Moon Man's ear, and—swish-h-h-h-h—he slid right down to the earth on a long moonbeam.

And that night the beautiful valley was drenched with dew, and when the fairies drank it—why, it was so salty they had to run away to the Diamond Lake to wash the salty taste out of their wee mouthes.

Do you know why?

MISS PATTIE COGHILL, Field Secretary, Elon College, N. C.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

September 14, 1924.

Subject: "Jesus Driven from Nazareth."

Lesson: Luke 4:16-30.

Golden Text: "He anointed me to preach good tidings."—Luke 4:18.

The young man had come back home where he had been "brought up." He had spent his early life in this little town or city in the hills of Galilee. It was here that he had played as a boy. It was here that he had worked as a young man. It was here that all the experiences of his life up to the time of his departure to take up his work had centered. And now he had come back to this—his "home town." What memories must have been awakened as he moved among the familiar scenes of his boyhood and youthful days! What emotions must have surged over His soul as he thought about it all.

Of course he had not been away very long. It was only a comparatively brief time since he had left Nazareth. But things of tremendous importance had happened since he went away. He had been baptized and made conscious in a fuller way of his high mission. He had fought out the issues involved in that mission, and decided once and for all the principles which should guide and govern him. He had demonstrated his unusual power by a miracle in a near-by town. And it was in a consciousness of all these things that he had come back to his home town.

As was his custom, he went into the synagogue on the Sabbath Day. He was unlike so many young men who go away from home and come back. They seldom go to Church on the Sabbath Day. They have various and sundry excuses, which are usually excuses and nothing more. Such young people will do well to learn of him, who though he was the Son of God, felt the need of common worship and recognized the value of regular Church attendance.

There was, of course, a crowd there. His home folks had heard about his meteoric rise, and they naturally wanted to see him and to hear him. And they turned out in full force. Many a young theological student, home for the summer vacation, knows how true this is. And there is usually enough commendable pride and genuine interest on the part of those present to overrule mere curiosity.

The courage and sincerity of the Master is nowhere more clearly shown than in this incident. It would have been very easy for him to preach a sermon that "tickled the palate" of the people and to win their praise and their support. But the Master was made of sterner stuff. He realized that those people needed to be shaken out of the rut, and to be awakened from their self-complacency. They needed to be initiated into the deeper meaning of the religion they professed to believe and to follow. And the Master, with tact and with directness, selected the passage from Isaiah which, to Him, seemed to embody the spirit of the one who should be the long-looked-for Redeemer of Israel and of those who should follow in His train. And He lovingly, but bluntly, reminded them that there was no special privilege with God. Even hated foreigners and outsiders would receive His blessings before the chosen people, unless the chosen people showed the faith and the humility which were prerequisites for the blessings. With a touch of irony, He suggested that He would not be surprised if they did not accept His teaching at face value, for a prophet is rarely accepted in his own country.

The people who heard the Master were filled with wrath. They were so mad that they would have done the master to death if they could. But His time was not yet, and, "passing through the midst of them, He went His way." The species has not become extinct. Many people do not want the truth that is involved in the religion they profess. At least not all of it. It still remains true that perhaps a majority of Churchgoers want the kind of preaching that soothes them, and not that kind which they really need. The need of the hour is prophets of God who can speak the truth in love.

Some Things we Can Learn from this Lesson.

1. Regular Church-going has its sanction in the Master Himself.
2. Christianity is essentially a religion of service to others, especially the needy.
3. Jesus Christ fulfilled and filled full Scripture.
4. A great man is usually more appreciated by strangers than by those who are his intimates.
5. The blessings of God are not dependent upon racial connections or religious affiliations, but upon an attitude of mind and heart.
6. The truth often hurts.
7. It takes the highest kind of courage to speak the truth.
8. Jesus is often driven away by His professed friends.

Subject: "Jesus Makes a Missionary Tour."

Golden Text: "Thou canst make me clean." —Mark 1:40.

Lesson: Mark 1:35-40.

Devotional Reading: Psa. 65:1-7.

The Master was a very busy man. He led, according to the standards of His day, a strenuous life. But He took time to pray. And if He could not find time during the multiple duties of the day, He got up early in the morning and kept His "quiet hour." And it was in these times of quiet communion with the Father who seeth in secret that He received the vision and the inspiration which made it possible for Him to do so much, and to do so well, that which men saw openly. It has been true of all the saints. Those who have accomplished most and who have done it best, have been those who have spent much time with God in secret.

It was in a time like this that the Master made ready for one of His missionary tours. He had arisen early and gone out to pray. And from that communion with the Father, He had come with a larger vision of the implications of His mission and with a finer enthusiasm and a deeper devotion to it. There was more than a casual relation between the two; there was a causal relation. May it not be true that one reason why we are not more interested in missions is because we do not pray enough?

Simon Peter, with his characteristic vigor and enthusiasm, sought the Master and told Him that all men were seeking for Him. It was, in a sense, an extragagant statement. And yet it is eternally true. For, although there are many who would deny that they were seeking the Master, and although many seek Him in ways that we do not recognize, the fact remains that all men are consciously or unconsciously seeking Him. Jesus Christ is a supreme necessity for all men. And God has implanted in the human heart that instinctive "feeling after Him."

The Master told Peter that He must be going elsewhere. There were many others who needed the truth which He was proclaiming. There weree many others who needed His victorious spirit. And, said He, I have come forth to get ready for this great work. From henceforth He was to go forth into all Galilee, preaching in their synagogues and healing in their streets.

It is interesting to follow the Master on one of His missionary tours, for we find that His activities were as wide as they were varied. The modern way of including in the fellowship of the missionary calling all those who go forth as Christian workers—even if they are going to teach people to farm—finds its sanction in Christ.

There is something else interesting in this connection. The Master was moved with compassion. There was an inner compulsion of love that constrained Him. He was a missionary because He knew God's love and because He loved men. We need to keep this in mind and make it the supreme motive of our missionary work.

And finally, the Master made much of the personal touch. The people of Christ's day would not touch a leper, and above all, the religious leaders could have nothing to do with a leper, for he would become ceremonially unclean. But the Master put forth His hand and touched him. One of the dangers of our modern life is that we are going to lose the personal touch in religion. Church efficiency is as necessary as efficiency in business. But the personal touch is perhaps the biggest factor in efficiency. For, after all, the Christian religion is essentially a personal relation between God and the individual through Christ. And we are real missionaries when we consecrate and use the power of personal touch for bringing others into the same personal relation. We can do this in many, many ways.

Some Things we Can Learn from This Lesson.

1. The genius of missions is to be found in Christ Himself.
2. Times of solitude should precede times of service.
3. The missionary program is vitally related to prayer.
4. If we cannot find time for prayer, we must make time for it.
5. All men seek for Christ.
6. The genius of missions is its impulse to "go into the next towns."
7. Missionary activity can be as varied as life itself.
8. Compassion or love is an integral and necessary factor in real missionary work.
9. Jesus Christ is Master of life.
10. Jesus was interested in healing men's bodies, but He was more interested in healing their souls.

Topic: "Beatitudes of the Psalms."

Daily Readings: M., Sept. 15, Blessed refuge. Ps. 2:12. T., Sept. 16, Blessed nation.—Ps. 33:12. W., Sept. 17, Blessed integrity.—Ps. 49:4. T., Sept. 18, Blessed benevolence.—Ps. 41:1. F., Sept. 19, Blessed choice.—Ps. 65:4.

S., Sept. 20, Blessed tears.—Ps. 94:12.

LESSON STUDY: Ps. 1:1, 32:2, 34:8.

"Blessed is the man whose delight is in the law of the Lord."

"Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his ways? By taking heed thereto according to Thy word."

"Create in me a clean heart and renew a right spirit within me."

"Happy is the nation whose God is Jehovah."

"How beautiful are the feet of them that bring glad tidings of good things from the New Testament and from the psalms." "Blessed be he that cometh in the name of the Lord."

The whole world is seeking happiness. Every person wants to be happy. People commit suicide because they think that they cannot be happy. Homes are broken up because of the lack of happiness. They are held together by a state of happiness existing. The psalmist wanted to be happy, and we can see the personality of that desire running through the passages of psalms.

A beatitude is the statement of a condition or state of happiness or blessedness. We prize the fifth chapter of Matthew, the words of Jesus, for his statement of the eight ways of special blessedness or happiness.

"We hear much about this age being different from others, and, in many respects, it is true. The one thing that has not changed since the days of the psalmists is human nature. And the one thing in human nature which remains constant is its desire for God. In knowing and serving God, mankind finds its highest happiness."

"The Psalter may be regarded as the heart's echo to the speech of God, the manifold music of its wind-swept strings as God's breath sweeps across them."—A. McLaren.

"There's lots of music in the psalms—those dear, sweet psalms of old,
With visions bright of lands of light and shining streets of gold.
I hear them ringing, singing still, in memory soft and clear;
Such pity as a father hath unto his children dear!
They seem to sing forevermore of better, sweeter days,
When lilies of the love of God bloomed white in all the ways:
And still I hear the solemn strains in the quaint old meeting flow;
O greatly blessed the people are, the joyful sound to know.
And so I love the dear old psalms, and when my time shall come,
Before the light has left my eyes, and my singing lips are lumb,
If I can only hear them then I'll gladly soar away—
So pants my longing soul, O God, that come to Thee I may."

Questions and Suggestions.

Is it more blessed to do good or to be good?
How many psalms are there in the Psalter?
Which is your favorite one? Why?

A missionary rally was held at Pleasant Ridge Church, Randolph County, Sunday, August 31st. Rev. T. J. Green, the pastor, was present and deeply interested in the rally. This meeting was rained out last spring at Ramseur, but the Randolph district was determined not to let the year pass without the rally. Mrs. Cornelison, of Seagrove, is the president of this district, and is sparing no effort to organize missionary societies in all Churches of the district. The rally was well attended.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

Our offerings for the two months passed have been very small—less than our expense account. As long as our income meets our expense account at the end of the month, we can be cheerful, but when we have to begin to cut down our little nest egg we have in the bank it kinder makes us feel blue. Then, too, we are besieged with applications every day, many of them pitiful to erad, widows in distress, fatherless children crying for bread, begging for a home and a place to lay their head at night, and this appeal is made to the Christian Church, yet a denomination with thirty thousand members in the Southern Christian Convention, and we are taking care of only one hundred and five children. More than seventy-five children are on the waiting list. Fifteen applications in the last week. One little girl writes me a real sweet little letter, asking me to let her and her two little brothers and sister come, and if they can get a place here she said they would be willing to sleep on the floor.

Friends, if you had an opportunity to come in touch with the widows in distress and the fatherless children as I do you would certainly catch a vision of the great opportunity to do a greater work in the Master's vineyard. We need two things—we need more friends, and this need could be easily supplied if all our Churches would do their full duty and if our Sunday Schools would increase their monthly offerings it would help wonderfully. You must take into consideration that our number of children have more than doubled in the last few years, and the cost of maintenance has greatly increased, still many of our Sunday Schools have never realized this and send the same amount they did ten years ago when things were cheap.

Friends, when you read this letter let me ask you to make up your mind to be a committee of one to see to it that your Sunday School makes a monthly offering to help the fatherless children through this institution. Many of our Churches and Sunday Schools stand by us, and we are grateful, but we are appealing to those that are not helping. It takes a united effort to accomplish a great work. Let every Sunday School join in.

FAITH.

A call came over the phone, asking if I would be in the office at noon. I replied that I would, and asked no further questions. At 12:30 a well-dressed young woman called, and I invited her into the office. In response to my question as to how I could serve her, she said: "I want to be a real Christian. Can you tell me how?"

I said that I surely could. She was a woman of fine character, and I found that she knew her Bible well and could quote many passages on the way of salvation. After some questioning, I discovered that she would not believe that salvation was for just one individual, and that one herself. I told her of the Father's love in Christ Jesus, and that it was here for the asking, and that if she would give her life over to Him in surrender, He would take it and bless it, sanctify it, and even glorify it.

At this point she arose, and falling on her knees by the chair, offered as best she knew how a beautiful prayer of dedication. I noticed that full victory had not yet come, however, and after we rose from our knees I said: "Isn't it great to have one's life taken over by such a dear friend as Jesus, who will guide, protect, save, and use it to save others?"

A smile of triumphant faith lit up her face. I then knew that the battle was over.—D. L. Moody.

WHERE HOPE LIES.

"We do not need more national development; we need more spiritual development. We do not need more intellectual power; we need more moral power. We do not need more knowledge; we need more character. We do not need more government; we need more culture. We do not need more law; we need more religion. We do not need more of the things that are seen; we need more of the things that are unseen."

"The destiny, the greatness of America, lies around the hearthstone. If thrift and industry are taught there, and the example of self-sacrifice oft appears; if honor abide there, and high ideals; if there the building of fortune be subordinate to the building of character, America will live in security, rejoicing in an abundant prosperity and good government at home, and in peace, respect and confidence abroad. If these virtues be absent, there is no power that can supply those blessings. Look well, then, to the hearthstone—therein all hope in America lies."—Calvin Coolidge.

HANDLE FRUIT LIKE EGGS.

When picking fruit, it matters not what kind it is, handle like eggs. Bruises must be avoided. To bruise is to make certain that decay will start. Do not drop peaches, apples, or other fruit into a basket or bag, but place them in the container just as though eggs were being handled. If handled in this way, the skin is not broken nor the fruit bruised, and a good start has been made in the delivery of first-class fruit to the consumer.—Progressive Farmer.

NUXATED IRON

Helps make rich, red blood and revitalize weak nerves

A CAUSE OF WOMEN'S ILLS

WOMEN OFTEN THINK THEY HAVE HEART TROUBLE, INDIGESTION, NERVOUS PROSTRATION, ETC., WHEN IT'S SIMPLY IRON STARVATION OF THE BLOOD.

Many women believe they are weak and nervous as a result of age, worry and overwork; they think that their disturbed digestion, headaches, heart palpitation, shortness of breath, pains across the back, etc., are due to some serious disease instead of the real cause—iron starvation of the blood. This is proven by the fact that when many of these same women take organic iron for awhile all their alarming symptoms quickly disappear and they become strong, robust and healthy. Iron is absolutely necessary to enable your blood to change food into living cells and tissue. Without it nothing you eat does you the proper amount of good—you do not get the strength out of it.

If you are not strong and well do not wait until you go all to pieces and collapse in a state of nervous prostration, but take some organic iron—Nuxated Iron—at once. But be sure it's organic iron and not metallic iron which people usually take and which is made merely by the action of strong acids on small pieces of iron. Organic NUXATED IRON is like the iron in your blood and like the iron in spinach, lentils and apples and it often increases the bodily and mental vigor of weak, wornout women in two weeks' time.

Beware of substitutes. Look for the word "Nuxated" on every package and the letters N. I. on every tablet. Your money will be refunded by the manufacturers if you do not obtain perfectly satisfactory results. At all druggists

CROSS.

August 5, 1924, the death angel claimed Joseph Henly Cross. He was 40 years, 3 months and 25 days old and was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Cross. He leaves to mourn their loss a beloved wife, one daughter, Miss Aldora Cross, and two step-children, Miss Annie Britt and Mr. Willie Britt; also three brothers, R. W. Cross, of Windsor, Va.; L. M. Cross, Orbit, Va., and G. D. Cross, of Petersburg, Va., and a brother-in-law, John T. Clark, of Wakefield, Va.

The funeral was conducted Wednesday afternoon at 3 o'clock by Rev. Mr. Hall, Rev. Mr. Kinchelowe, and Rev. I. W. Johnson, D. D., of Suffolk, Va. The deceased was a member of Central Hill Baptist Church, and his remains were laid to rest in the cemetery at that Church. MRS. M. W. CARR.

DRIVER.

God, in His all-wise providence, saw proper to call from her earthly home, on July 19, 1924, Mrs. Barbara Driver, a loyal member of the home department of our Sunday School of Bethlehem Church, Tenth Legion, Va.

Mrs. Driver was highly respected in our community, and while we mourn her departure, we realize that our loss is her gain. Ill health and suffering were hers during her last years, but she bore all patiently and had no fear of death.

Be it resolved, therefore:

First, That we record our appreciation of her sweet Christian life, and will strive to imitate it.

Second, That we tender our sympathy to her bereaved family, and commend them in their sorrow to the great Comforter.

Third, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy be placed upon our Sunday School records, and one sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

PRESCRIPTION FOR A REVIVAL.

I can give a prescription that will bring a revival to any Church, or any community, or any city on earth. The prescription is as follows: First, let a few Christians (they do not need to be many) get thoroughly right with God themselves. This is the prime essential. If this is not done, the rest that I am to say will come to nothing. Second, let them bind themselves together to pray for a revival until God opens the heavens and comes down. Third, let them put themselves at the disposal of God for Him to use them as He sees fit in winning others to Christ. That is all.

This is sure to bring a revival to any Church or any community. I have given this prescription around the world. It has been taken by many Churches, and many communities, and in no instance has it ever failed; and it cannot fail.—Rev. R. A. Torrey, D. D.

Building a Country Sunday School

By E. L. Middleton.

Mr. Middleton possesses definite qualifications for the preparation of this work. For twelve years after leaving college, he was a day school and Sunday School teacher in a village that had "once-a-week" preaching, with half the membership of the Sunday School living in the open country; while for fourteen years more he has been a State Sunday School secretary in rural State. Mr. Middleton urges the adoption of no novel or revolutionary ideas or methods. He recognizes the place and the value of recognized Sunday School policies and methods, and has prepared a digest of the essentials in a manner plain enough to render it adaptable for use in any rural school. Methods, administration, organization and development are each and all discussed in this book in an eminently practical way.

The price of the book is $1.25. You can order it through "The Christian Sun," 1536 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By Rev. S. M. Lynam.

Cost of Education.—

The sum spent on education sounds "enormous." But when reduced to its lowest terms—the cost to each individual—it seems very small. Taking the country over, it is about 3 cents per person per day. It seems hardly fair to charge education with the excessive burden of which it is such a small part. We are able to give without "sorely taxing" our ability what is needed to provide adequate school advantages for all, if only we regard the education of our children as a primary duty of the State. It is a matter of priority of interest and not a question of ability. —N. Y. Times.

A Woman Running for Governor.—

The Democrats of Texas have nominated Mrs. Miriam A. Ferguson for Governor of Texas. For the last generation, the Democratic nomination meant certain election, so unless the unforseen occurs, Mrs. Ferguson will be the first woman Governor in this country. When she was definitely informed of her nomination, she issued a statement clearly showing who would be Governor should she be elected. In some matters, she freely admitted that the judgment of her husband would guide her, but in matters affecting the home, education, law enforcement, and the maintenance of peace and order, she declared that she would use her own judgment.

Mrs. Ferguson is a quiet, unassuming little woman, and is doing none of her campaigning. She will carry to the gubernatorial position a devotion to home, and all for which it stands, that will be good indeed for the State of Texas.

Hope Again in Europe.—

The last few weeks in Europe have been the most hopeful since the outbreak of the war in 1914. The French Parliament promptly accepted the agreements reached by Premier Herriot at the London conference on the Dawes plan. The German Reichstag has also accepted the Marx-Stressmann agreement to the plan. The necessary two-thirds vote was secured on the third reading, which fitted the railroads and other industries into the plan. The Dawes plan went into actual operation on September 1st, and Owen D. Young, the American member of the commission, was made agent-general of reparations, which is the key-place in the working out of the plan.

It will be a fine thing for Europe if they really have agreed to something at last. Some form of adjustment had to be reached regarding the reparations questions, and now that they have settled on the Dawes plan, things are looking hopeful in Europe again. Let us trust that affairs may soon be stabilized and peace secured.

The Right Kind of Foreign Relations.—

The work of the International Health Board of the Rockefeller Foundation suggests the kind of international activities on which we wish our government spend money instead of on battleships and army units and "defense test days." The foundation has been assisting in laboratories for medical diagnosis in Honduras, Nicaragua, Salvador and Guatemala; and Costa Rica is now ready to establish a laboratory and make substantial contributions to its support. In Nicaragua, the foundation has been working on the control of malaria. It found it possible to reduce the disease greatly by means of minor drainage without the use of oil or larvicides, but by introducing fish which eat larvae. Such control, when started, can be kept up at the annual cost of about thirteen cents per person. In one small area in Nicaragua, the control measures cut the hours of labor lost by cable companies through illness in 1922 to one-tenth of what it was in 1920. The board is doing similar work in the vicinity of Rio de Janeiro, and has learned that probably malaria can be controlled there also by minor and inexpensive drainage.

First American-Built Locomotives.—

The first two locomotives built in America for actual service on a railroad in the United States were the "Best Friend" of 1830, and the "West Point" of 1831, both of which were operated on what is now the Southern Railway System. These pioneer American-built locomotives were constructed by the West Point Foundry Association, at New York, for the South Carolina Canal and Railroad Company, which laid and operated the first one hundred miles of railway in the world.

Interesting information regarding the early locomotives used by this pioneer railway, which was the ancestor of the Southern's present line, extending from Charleston to Augusta, is contained in a "report of the committee on cars to the direction of the South Carolina Canal and railroad Company," dated November 19, 1833, and recently published in Bulletin No. 7 of the Railway and Locomotive Hitsorical Society, together with the pictures of the original drawings of the "Best Friend" and "West Point" locomotives.

The "Best Friend" locomotive had an upright boiler resembling a bottle. The "West Point" locomotive had a horizontal, tubular boiler, more nearly like the present-day locomotive. Its tubes were 2 1-2 inches in diameter and about 6 feet long. Both were mounted on four wheels and had cylinders that worked on the inside of the frame between the wheels.—Southern News Bulletin.

Governor Baxter's Defense.—

According to the newspapers, Major David Hayes, who represented the Federal War Department at a meeting at Rumford, Me., said of Governor Baxter's refusal to co-operate with the War Department in its plans for Defense Day: "The present Governor of Maine has failed in his duty to this State." Moreover, according to newspaper reports, Major Hayes had the audacity to ask his audience to pass resolutions against him. When Governor Baxter heard what the military gentleman had said, he spoke out straight from the shoulder: "I resent," he said, "the United States War Department's representative in Maine informing me that I have failed in my duties as Governor and inciting public gatherings to pass resolutions against me on account of my stand in opposition to Mobilization Day. Major Hayes has overstepped the bounds of propriety. He should publicly apologize and should be repudiated by the War Department.

"I, not the War Department or its representative, am the judge of my official duties. I am responsible to the people of Maine, and not to the United States military authorities. My loyalty to my country is not measured by the Prussianized standards of certain military men.

"It is unheard of for a subordinate of a United States Department within the jurisdiction of a sovereign State, to there publicly condemn its chief executive solely because of the difference of opinion on a public matter. Such action is an affront that cannot pass unnoticed.

"I was the first Governor to oppose Mobilization Day, and did so on principle. This was long before it was generally discussed. I have declined to appoint a committee as requested by General Brewster, and the State will take no official part in any exercises. In deference to the President's position, however, I have refrained from prohibiting military parades.

"This incident betrays the arrogance and discloses the far-reaching plans of certain of our military leaders. They are intolerant of differences of opinion, abuse those who have views of their own, brand them as 'pacifists,' and are bold enough to defame the chief executive of a State in his own jurisdiction because he refuses to submit to their dictation."

The position of the Governor of Maine is made very definite, and, as he declares, the action of Major Hayes does disclose the far-reaching plans of certain of our military leaders. It may be true that our army is small, that movements of soldiers in other countries have been effected with alarming the world, but such a mobilization day as the military authorities propose, not only seems a menace to others, but we must consider the effect upon the character of our youth as well.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Live in the house of kindliness and men shall come and give gifts of themselves.

Dr. W. A. Harper was in Richmond on business for the college the first of the week, and called at the office of THE CHRISTIAN SUN in passing.

One of THE SUN'S editors, J. O. Atkinson, is to preach at Liberty, Vance County, N. C., Sunday, September 21st, the pastor, Rev. J. E. Franks, being engaged in a revival that day at Mt. Gilead Church.

Rev. Elisha Bradshaw will be open for work on the second and fourth Sundays after this year. Will serve morning, afternoon or night, and be able to do some pastoral work. Write to Bro. Bradshaw at Walters, Va.

Rev. P. T. Klapp was on a visit to his daughter, Mrs. Oscar Robbins, of this city, the past week, and called at THE SUN office. Pleased to see Bro. Klapp. He and this scribe use to decline mensa in the same class.

Miss Stacey, one of our missionaries to Japan, sent out and supported by our Burlington Sunday School, was a recent visitor to Elon College and Burlington. She plans to spend some months in study at Defiance College, and then return to Japan.

Miss Pattie Coghill, secretary of the Woman's Mission Board, on her way to Boston, Mass., to take a course in religious training, called this week at THE SUN office and left copy for the "Hand-Book" of the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Conventions.

The Carlton Library Building, one of the most modern library buildings in the country, is to be formally presented to Elon on Saturday, September 27th, at 11 A. M. Dr. L. R. Wilson, of the University of North Carolina, and Dr. J. W. Wellons will be the speakers. The friends of the college are cordially invited to attend.

Miss Martha R. Stacy, one of our missionaries to Japan, who is supported by the Burlington Sunday School, has been here for a week's visit with her Burlington friends before going to Defiance College, where she will do special work in further preparation for her work in Japan. She expects to return to Japan next August.—G. O. Lankford.

Miss Pattie Cogihll, who has served so acceptably the past year as secretary of the Board of Religious Education and field worker for the Woman's Mission Board, is to spend a year, beginning this week, for further training for her life-work in the Department of Religious Education, in Boston, Mass., University. Miss Coghill won many friends and did great work the past year. Here is wishing her health and happiness as she prepares for greater efficiency in the task of her Church.

Sunday, October 5th, has been fixed by our Dover, Del., people as the day of dedication of their new and modern Bible school and religious education department of their Church—an addition to their former Church building, costing about $100,000. It was a great building and Church improvement program our Dover people undertook, and they are now happy in their wonderful achievement. There are to be three services on the day of dedication—morning, afternoon and night. Immense congregations are expected for the event.

It was a splendid message President Harper, of Elon College, delivered to citizens, students and faculty at the 11 o'clock hour Sunday, September 7th—such a message as we fancy the trustees of the college, parents and patrons of the institution would naturally wish to be delivered at the opening and keynote address of the college year. "In the beginning, God; in the beginning was the Word." If students and faculty and citizens of Elon College will put God and His Word first in their thinking, and in their various endeavors, the motto "Christian character first and always at Elon" will be more than a beautiful dream. It will become, as it should be, a very vital fact in college life.

A conference of the various department heads of the Southern Christian Convention was held Tuesday in Suffolk, Va., presided over by Dr. L. E. Smith, president of the Convention. The main thing discussed was the best method of presenting the resolutions of the Convention to the Conferences, now soon to meet. It was decided to have the president, or some representative of the body, to present these resolutions, so as to have action taken upon them. This meeting is an advance step, and presages good for the Church.

Wednesday, the Mission Board, of which Col. J. E. West is chairman, held its annual meeting at the same place. Much important business was considered by the Board. A report is expected for the next issue of this paper.

Congratulations and best wishes to our Virgilina, Va., Christian forces. For some years our good people there have felt the need of an adequate and attractive house of worship, but have, for reasons best known to themselves, held on in the old building, and in some way "made out." They have decided at last to erect a suitable building and one in which they may worship with pardonable pride. Rev. C. E. Newman is the beloved pastor who is leading his people on in this most worthy undertaking. Erecting a new Church by a congregation with some sort of Church to worship in is very much like a man in going to his dentist—he puts it off in fear and dread till he goes, when lo and behold! the going and getting the work done was not half as bad as the fear and dread beforehand. The happiest congregations we know are those who have plunged in and are pulling with strength and faith for the shore. We envy Bro. Newman and his people. They are in for a real good time.

JOHNSON'S GROVE.

I have accepted the work at Mt. Carmel and Johnson's Grove for the coming year. I preach at Mt. Carmel on the first and third Sunday mornings, and at Johnson's Grove the first and third Sunday afternoons. I will be open for work at other times. I will live at Walters. I can serve any Church or Churches that I can reach by Ford or railroad. I will also be glad to help any minister or any Church in revival service.

Our meeting at Johnson's Grove began the first Sunday night in August. We feel like we had a good meeting. We had very large crowds for that community. We had good singing. Our members co-operated with people of the other Churches, making our singing a great success. The Friends, Methodists and Baptists, as well as the Christians, helped us, and we had a good time together.

There were hundreds of people that came, expressing their desire to live nearer to God and do more for His cause. Many backsliders were reclaimed, nine true hearts joined the Church at the close of the meeting, and one has joined since, while there are others that will join soon.

They have just covered the Church at a cost of about $300. The people appear to be very much encouraged, and the work is taking on new life. All praise to God for any good accomplished, and may He continue to bless the efforts of His people. ELISHA BRADSHAW.

Walters, Va.

John J. Tigert, U. S. commissioner of education, has these words to say about true and false systems of education: "More character and less culture! That is our great educational necessity today. Honesty, justice and decency contribute more to a proper social attitude than intensive culture and modern efficiency. If we cannot teach these virtues along with modern thought, then we had better dismantle our splendidly equipped institutions of learning and return to the old log school-house."

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

The Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference will meet on Friday, October 10th, at Holy Neck Christian Church. Morning session will open at 10:30 o'clock. Mrs. C. H. Rowland, president of the Conference, will preside.

MRS. L. W. STAGG,
Secretary.

NOTICE.

Any Church or Churches wanting a pastor for the third or fourth Sunday, I would be glad to correspond with same. Would be glad to call and have a service with you. Our meeting at New Center will begin the fourth Sunday in this month. Everybody is invited to come and be one of us. We are praying for a great meeting, as we have lots of material to draw from. Dear readers of THE SUN, pray that God may wonderfully bless and save souls and prepare them for life work in the kingdom.

Seagrove, N. C. W. J. EDWARDS.

NOTICE TO CHURCHES OF THE NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE.

At the last session of the North Carolina Christian Conference, no place was selected for the next annual session. The executive committee was authorized to receive invitations from Churches and select the place of meeting this fall. Churches that wish to invite the Conference or that are willing to entertain the next session of the North Carolina Christian Conference which meets Monday evening, November 24, 1924, will send their invitations to the chairman of the executive committee.

W. C. WICKER,
Chairman Executive Committee.

MEDITATIONS FROM A PARSON'S DIARY.

"Some one has well said, 'You can give without loving, but you cannot love without giving.' It is easy to hide behind various excuses for not having a part in every enterprise of one's Church, but the fact remains that if a person is really in love with God and His Church, he will never let an opportunity go by to do something."

THE HENDERSON CHURCH.

Through the kindness and consideration of the good people of the Christian Temple, of Norfolk, I was granted the month of August as vacation on the condition that I rest. Some one has said that a change of surroundings and scenery is rest. I went from a busy city, beside the rolling sea, to the quiet of the farm, through which a mountain stream flows; the old mill is there, with its Gibralter-like rocks and towering oaks. The cows and the chickens, and the pigs and horses all brought back childhood experiences which knows not the cares of the big world. It was a real joy and delight to be with our good old friends, Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Whitaker, and to enjoy their lovely farmhome. They are to be congratulated on their home and fine family.

One Sunday, Mrs. Smith and I slipped away and went to Henderson for Church. The pastor, Rev. A. H. Hook, preached a most excellent sermon, though provoking and uplifting in spirit. It gives us greater hopes for our future when we meet with young people like Bro. Hook and his most capable wife, who have dedicated their lives to the kingdom through the Christian Church.

The Henderson Church is a Church with an opportunity. In the midst of a large residential section of the city, and the only Church to serve that section, the other Churches being across the city.

We have reached the time when thinking folks go to Church not simply because it is a Church of a particular denomination, but because it meets their needs. If the Henderson Church, together with its pastor, will put on the program which they are well able to do, they will soon be talking of enlarging their present plant.

To give an idea as to their location in the city, the Ham-Ramsey Evangelistic Tabernacle is located within a city block of the Church. There is at present under this leadership a city-wide evangelistic campaign, endorsed and supported by practically every Church in the city. This meeting in the Church's location should be a great blessing and benefit to the Henderson Church. May God bless and prosper its pastor and people in all of their efforts.

Norfolk, Va. L. E. Smith.

A BOY AND HIS STOMACH.

What's the matter with you—ain't I always been your friend?
Ain't I been a pardner to you? All my pennies don't I spend
In gettin' nice things for you? Don't I give you lots of cake?
Say, stummick: what's the matter, that you had to go an' ache?

Why, I loaded you with good things yesterday—I gave you more
Potatoes, squash an' turkey than you'd ever had before;
I gave you nuts an' candy, pumpkin pie an' chocolate cake,
An' las' night when I got to bed you had to go an' ache.

Say, what's the matter with you—ain't you satisfied at all?
I gave you all you wanted—you was jes' like a ball,
An' you couldn't hold another bit of puddin', yet las' night
You ached mos' awful, stummick; that ain't treatin' me jes' right!

I've been a friend to you, I have; why ain't you a friend o' mine?
They gave me castor oil las' night because you made me whine.
I'm awful sick this mornin' an' I'm feelin' mighty blue,
'Cause you don't appreciate the things I do for you.

THE STOMACH'S REPLY TO THE BOY.

Well, boy, I am a friend of yours, and I'll do the best I can,
If you do not abuse me, to make of you a man.
You asked me what's the matter, why I had to go and ache,
When for me you spent your pennies for candy, pies and chocolate cake?
Yes, you loaded me with good things—potatoes, squash and turkey; more
Than you had ever given me in the same time before.
Then you gave me nuts and candy, pumpkin pie and chocolate cake
Until I had to work so hard it made my poor sides ache.
Then you failed to chew your food last night, and swallowed it most whole—
That's why they gave you castor oil: your stomach to console.
You're "awful sick this morning?" Well, I guess you ought to be,
Because you do not chew the things you're stuffin' into me.
You ask: "What's the matter, stummick, ain't you satisfied at all?"
When you try to put a gallon where two pints are none too small.
'Til I was hard, just like a ball, and I just had to ache.
You say you've been a friend to me, and I've not befriended you?
You've abused and overworked me 'til I'm sore all through and through.
You gave me all I wanted before you gave me pie and cake—
Then you ask me what's the matter, that I had to go and ache!

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE ROMANCE OF MISSIONS.

Acts 10:20: "For I have sent them to you." God has always taken the lead in enlarging the horizon of man's thought. And, strange as it may seem, He has done this against man's will or desire. Peter was a Jew. It was against his will to eat with or visit or preach to the Gentiles. "I have never eaten anything that is common or unclean," said he to the Lord. "What God hath cleansed, that call thou not unclean?" replied the Lord. You and I may think the Japanese and Chinese our inferiors, but God does not think so, and we could not worship God if we thought He so regarded them. We may have prejudices against people, but we could not worship a God that we thought was prejudiced. Peter was prejudice. First, give him a vision; and, second, send the Gentiles to him. Here romance begins.

It was a hazardous and venturesome thing for Peter to go and eat with a Gentile. And yet that is what he did. He risked his reputation and his life by breaking over the conventionalities and taking into his care, love and thinking those who had not formerly been included. Here is the romance of living and especially the romance of missions. It is an undertaking to conquer the unconquered, explore the unexplored, try the untried—and increase the horizon of the world's thought and the world's sympathy, interest and love. What a life of hazard and venture Francis E. Clark has lived, to say nothing of Carey and Livingstone!

From the time Abraham, by the invitation of God, went out into the country, he knew not, until this hour, the missionary undertaking has been attended with hazard and heroism, danger and daring, courage and venture. God has been giving the challenge, leading the way even against man's will and desire.

This venture, this daring, this romance has resulted in three things:

1. In enlarging and enriching the world's thought. David Livingston never did as much for the poor benighted Africans as he did for the enlightened Englishmen and Scotchmen. He compelled the Englishmen and the Scotchmen and all the rest of us to think in bigger, bolder terms. William Carey just dumped into the world's mind the whole area of India, with its hundreds of millions of souls. When we go out and plant a Church where we did not have one, it has by that much enlarged the scope and smirk of our thinking, of our care and of our interest.

2. In increasing the Church's resources. Missionary endeavor and venture always multiply available resources for the Church. Peter was facing, though he did not know it, a world of new resources. Only when we undertake big things for God can we expect great things of God. This is clearly demonstrated in our own history. We undertook five years ago big things for us in the missionary line—the raising of $125,000 for missions. Our Church in Richmond, our Christian Temple in Norfolk, to say nothing of a dozen lesser plants, are the answer to our efforts. God has given us these because we dared to venture. And He is willing to give us more. In our foreign fields, even greater results have come. And no member of the Christian Church is poorer for this task. We are all richer because of it.

3. The trouble with Peter and the Jews was a lack of pity, sympathy, love for the Gentile world. We have the same trouble today. We are lacking in pity and compassion. Of Jesus it was said: "He was moved with compassion and pity for the multitudes." We are careful of our every comfort and luxury, but indifferent to the world's suffering. It is doubtful if we give as much today as we did twenty-five years ago. We need the daring, the romance, the thrill of missions to give us pity, sympathy, love. We are not lacking today in material resources; the world is sadly lacking in the amount of its pity, its love, its compassion. Through the romance of missions, God is seeking to enlarge our love and sympathies.

MINISTERIAL LIBERTY OF CONSCIENCE.

Rev. J. F. Morgan takes issue with THE SUN'S editorial of August 21st. Bro. Morgan is on the historic platform of the Christian Church. Our preachers in the days of O'Kelly and Stone, and Elias Smith, were progressive thinkers. They were styled, in derision, "New Lights," and when they wrote their platform one of its planks was that glorious principle of our brotherhood's organization—"the liberty of conscience is the right and privilege of all."

We who know the genius of our Church have no fears as to a minister's right to think according to God's Word as the Spirit gives him utterance. But there is not this liberty in other Churches. Our young men read of heresy charges and of threatened heresy trials. They even hear our own ministers at times criticised for their conscientious opinions. Our young men are under suspicion on the part of some after their seminary courses till they have proven their genuineness spiritually. It is less so in our Church than in others, but it should not be so at all with us.

On this very point, Dr. John R. Mott has this pertinent word: "Some men are deterred from entering the ministry because they fear they will not have liberty of expression. The prevalent scientific spirit fosters the desire for intellectual freedom. These men think that in the ministry this freedom is impossible; that they cannot speak out frankly the truth as they see it; and, therefore, that they cannot, with intellectual sincerity, conform to what they understand their Church requires. Some of the keenest among their number conscientiously believe that the Churches have dogmatic standards for membership and ordination which are untrue to the teaching, emphasis, and spirit of Christ. They are confronted by the spectacle of trials for heresy, of the exiling of men from the confidence and companionship of their fellow-ministers, of the persecution of certain ministers as a result of the misunderstanding of their position by the people whom they unselfishly serve—all this and much more, not because of any lapse in character, not because of any lack of efficiency and ability in discharging the regular functions of the ministry, not because of any failure in the spirit of service; but because of not expressing their religious convictions in terms which their own ecclesiastical bodies have formulated and regard as essential."

THE SUN is glad that Bro. Morgan has sounded the note of religious freedom and of the liberty of conscience. We must convince our young men of the verity of his view and of our practice. When we have done that we shall have not a dearth, but a plethora of candidates for the ministry of our Lord.

THE MUSIC WORLD.

By Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D.

(At Elon Chautauqua, July 29 to Aug. 2, 1924.)

IV. THE MASTERS OF MUSIC.

The first master of music was Jubal, 3875 B. C. (Gen. 4:21), "the father of all such as handle the harp and the organ."

Palistrina, 1515-1594, Italian, named after place of birth, called "The Prince of Music." Pope Julius III appointed him one of the twenty-four collegiate singers in his private chapel, though he was truly ineligible, being layman, father of family, and had voice. In two years, Julius died, and his successor lived only twenty-three days. Paul IV, desiring to adhere to the rules of his office and influenced by jealous clergy with whom he was associated because of his superior musical gifts, dismissed him, and he was left to poverty and hardship for a time. The Council of Trent, considering the abuses of Church music and tempted to discard it altogether from the service, but fearing this to be too extreme, ordered Palistrina to compose three masses that would possess the qualities of true religious music. In 1565, the masses were submitted to the council and received with great joy. The third so entranced the hearers that Pope Pius IV declared that "of such a nature must have been the new song heard by John the apostle in the heavenly Jerusalem." He taught in the first music school in Rome, and Baini says, "From it was derived all the beauty, the grandeur, the sentiment of the Roman school, mother and mistress of all." His salary was small, but his honor was great. When Pope Gregory held a jubilee in 1575, the people of Palestrina, twenty-four miles away, 1,500 strong, marched to Rome in gala attire singing the songs of their great townsman, while he led the procession. The Roman Catholic Church has done much to develop and preserve sacred music, and Palestrina stands first in that high service.

Bach, 1685-1750, German, sprang from a long line of musical ancestors, and is said to have been the direct ancestor of about sixty well-known organists and composers. Sebastian's parents died when he was ten, and he was left to the care of his brother, Christople, who was organist at Orhdruf and became his teacher. He soon absorbed his teacher's knowledge and longed for more, but his brother seemed to discourage him, perhaps jealous of his talents, keeping his manuscripts of organ music from him; but Sebastian secured the manuscripts by stealth and copied them by moonlight in six months, only to have them destroyed by his older brother. This work by moonlight caused blindness later in life, but he absorbed much of value by this writing. At fifteen, he obtained a position in the choir of St. Michael School, of Luneburg, and from this time depended on himself and worked out his own musical salvation. Bach had a fine voice and differed in this from Palestrina. During the three years in this school, he made progress not only in voice, but with instruments. While there, he made several foot-journeys to Hamburg to hear famous organists. He also visited Cella and became familiar with French music. In 1706 he accepted position as organist at Church of St. Blasias, in Muhlhausen, at a salary of £5 a year, with certain guantities of corn, wood, and fish, to be delivered at his door without charge. With that salary, he married his cousin, Maria Barbara Bach, who became the mother of seven children. A year after, he resigned and became court organist to the Grand Duke at Weimer, where he remained for nine years (from 23 to 32) and was made conductor of the court orchestra in 1874. While there, he became the greatest organist of his day, and the greatest composer of organ music the world has ever known. Many of his greatest compositions were Church cantatas which hold the same position in Germany as anthems in English Churches. He was called to Cathen by Prince Leopold of Auhatt as conductor and director of his chambers music at a salary of $300 a year. His wife died suddenly while he was off on a trip, and eighteen months after, he married a woman of 21, who became the mother of thirteen children, and these children ranged all the way from idiocy to genius. No one, unless it was Handel, has equaled Bach as an organist, and his organ compositions are unsurpassable. Palestrina and Bach were the two great composers of Church music—Palestrina of Catholic, and Bach of Protestant, faith. It has been said that "Palestrina plays, Bach preaches." Catholic and Protestant Churches have taken care of the religion of Jesus Christ and produced Christendom. John Sebastian Bach is called "the father of modern music.

Mozart, Wolfgang Amadens, 1756-1791, Salzburg, Austria, showed musical talent at three, began to learn pieces at four, dictated minuets to his father at five, and composed a concerto so difficult that no one could play it. One of the world's greatest composers. He married Constanze Weber at twenty-six. Their married life was sweet and sad, because constantly involved in financial difficulties. At thirty-one, he had a salary of $400. His greatest compositions were the "Magic Flute" and the "Requiem," which was unfinished at his death. His greatest compositions were for Church purposes. He died December 5, 1791, and was buried in a pauper's grave, the location now unknown. His fame, like that of Jesus, came after his death.

Handel, 1685-1750, Halle, Lower Saxony; ancestors possessed no musical talent. His father was a surgeon barber. He was one of the world's most gifted musicians. He never married, but his fidelity to his mother was beautiful. His music was all to him. His real life-work was his oratorios—Esther, Deborah, Athalia, Saul, Mesiah with Hallelujah Chorus. He wrote thirty-two volumes of operas, twenty-one oratorios, and many other compositions. In 1752, he was attacked with blindness, but this did not deter him from labor in the field of music. His private charities were nunificent, and generous to public institutions. The organ was his favorite instrument. His work was chiefly in the field of Church music and divine worship. His settlement in London added a musical chapter to England and a tomb to Westminster Abby.

Haydn, Franz Joseph, 1732-1809, Austria-Hungary. His father was a wheelwright and parish sexton. His mother was the daughter of a market inspector and cook in the house of Count Harrach. They had twelve children, three of whom were musicians. They were simple, hard-working people, full of religious faith and piety. This religious influence followed Haydn through his whole life. He had a sweet soprano voice, and when Matthias Frankh, a relative, visited the home, he recognized the boy's talent and offered to take him to Hamburg, where he was a schoolmaster and musician, and to educate the boy. He was only six, and his mother had already set her heart on making him a priest. When he was eight, Reutter, precentor of St. Stephen's Cathedral, Vienna, was in Hamburg searching for boy singers. Frankh induced him to hear Haydn, and he was so pleased that he offered to take him to Vienna. The school in Vienna was supported by the city, and paid all of his expenses. Reutter did not encourage him in his music, but he was determined and persisted in study. In 1749, Haydn found himself in the street, without home, money, and decent clothes. Spangler, a cathedral tenor, took the boy into his attic. He rose, step by step, to high favor among music-lovers. He was received with enthusiasm in London. He began in poverty, but became rich. "The Creation" and "The Seasons" were his masterpieces. He was the "father of modern instrumental music."

Mendelssohn, 1808-1842, Hamburg, Germany, went to Berlin at three. Next to Bach in many respects; revived Bach's music, composed some of the finest music ever written, began by reforming Church music; composed "Elijah" and "St. Paul," among the greatest oratorios. His "Midsummer Night's Dream," conducted in England, made him the idol of the British public. His contribution to worship, through his great compositions, makes him a great master in the music world.

Wagner, Richard, 1813-1883, Leipsic, Germany. Born in poverty, hard struggle in life, not appreciated, unfortunate in first marriage, always persistent and productive of operatic compositions. "Faunhauser" and "Lohengrin" his greatest productions. Wagner did for opera what Bach did for Church in the realm of music. He wrote the "Centennial March" for the Philadelphia Exposition in 1876. Endless melody has been applied to Wagner's style.

Beethoven, 1770-1827; born on the Rhine. His father was music director at court of Elector, of Cologne. Beethoven's music has become the modern art. "There is no sculptor to set beside the Greek, no painting to set beside that of Florence and Venice, no poet has equaled Shakespeare, no musician has rivaled Beethoven."

Chopin, Frederick, 1809-1849; Poland. The greatest genius of the piano who has ever lived. A brief life of forty years, but his musical career was supreme in piano composition and execution. The greatest musician on the greatest musical instrument.

Paganni, Nicholas, Genoa, 1784-1840. The greatest violin virtuoso that ever lived. His mother said she had a dream that her son was to be the greatest violinist in the world. Remarkable player at six, made his debut at a concert at nine, and played regularly at Church. Sent to Parma at 11, to Rolla, sick in bed. While in an adjoining room, he saw a violin and played it. Rolla inquired who it was, and when he saw the boy he said he could teach him nothing; but he did. Paganni went to Pisa and neighboring towns, and, no longer under parental restraint, he fell to gambling and a dissolute life. Money from his concerts was lost in a night. One time he had to sell his violin, and upon arriving at Leghorn to give a concert he was without a violin. A French merchant lent him one, but refused to take it back, saying that he would profane the instrument which Paganni's fingers had touched. Another time he was about to sell this gift, and, in desperation, staked his last money and won; but he never gambled again. His life was like a meteor, but he was the greatest violinist of the ages.

Schubert, Franz Peter, 1797-1828. German composer and greatest song-writer that ever lived, of whom Beethoven said: "Truly, Schubert has a spark of the divine five." His father was a poor schoolmaster, and his mother a cook—one of fourteen. At ten he was in the choir of the village Church. In Vienna, at times, he was so poor that he could not buy paper for his compositions, and often went hungry. Of all the great musical genius of Germany, he had the least musical training. His natural brilliancy dazed his teachers, and he was really left to himself for education. He was something of a sport, and some of his biographers say he took to drink; others say he was not a tippler, but fond of convivial gatherings with those who did.

Paderewski, Ignace; Poland, 1860. One of the greatest living pianists; brilliant, power to hold educated musicians and the ignorant alike; made repeated tours in this country, with great success.

Zeisler, Fannie Bloomfield, born in Austria in 1866; brought to Chicago under two. Musical talent began to develop very early. At twelve, she went to Vienna, where she studied for five years. She received highest praise from critics in Vienna. In 1883 she returned to America, and for ten years appeared most successfully as concert pianist. In 1893 she toured Germany and Austria, and was so successful that her concert tours continued through '94 and '95. In 1898 she went to London, where she appeared with great English orchestras. While in London she was invited as piano soloist for the Lower Rhine Music Festival at Cologne. Here she played before the most celebrated musicians of Europe, who declared that she was one of the greatest pianists of the world.

Ysaye, Eugene; Belgium, 1858. Since the death of Joachim considered the greatest living violinist. He visited this country in 1894 and 1898. In 1899 he played Bach's E major concerto as soloist of the Tenth Nikisch Philharmonic Concert in Berlin. The audience went wild with enthusiasm, and recalled him fifteen times. He is almost as noted as a conductor as a violinist.

Sousa, John Philip; born of Spanish father and German mother in Washington City, in 1856. His compositions are designated as popular music, but admitted to be good. His music in Germany held to be so typically American that it is always played on international occasions. In 1880, Sousa was appointed leader of the United States Marine Band, and that band is known all over the world. His fame is in the band world, and he is called "The March King," and has made his own band equally well known the world over.

Lind, Jenny; Sweeden, 1820-1887. Her father was a lawyer, in moderate circumstances. She was admitted to the conservatory at nine. She improved rapidly. At fourteen she lost her voice, but continued the study of music, and her voice gradually returned after four or five years. About 1845 she went to England to help save Italian opera from bankruptcy, and was received with greatest enthusiasm by all classes of London society. The Queen admired her grace and modesty, and would have showered many distinctions on her, but she accepted only a bracelet, which she always prized. Her operatic career in London was short and brilliant, but she had a prejudice against the falseness of the stage, and longed for something higher in life than the applause of the excited multitude. She made a two-year tour of the United States, 1850-'51, which resulted in a fortune for her managers and £20,000 for herself. Her life was true, beautiful, earned fortunes which she distributed in sweet charity.

The masters of music have been men. The masters of music have been foreign to this country.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

There is really no harmful friction between occupations—the friction is between men. Business in itself is as harmonious as the spheres; but ignorance, selfishness, and jealousies in men disturb the whole business world. There is no inherent, unnecessary friction between production and consumption, between transportation and marketing, between sale and purchase. The laws that control these departments of business are natural laws and under providential supervision. The old law of trade, the law of supply and demand, is built on this natural condition under divine ordination. It is upon this fundamental principle that cities are supplied with daily food. There is no unified organization in charge of the bread and meat supply of the great cities; yet the ends of the earth meet in the markets and the people supply their tables with the meats, vegetables, fruits and nuts from all continents and all islands of the seas. God is as surely in the market-place as in the field, and we know He is in the field, for "Paul may plant and Apollo may water, but God giveth the increase." And He gives the increase in the field as well as in the Church.

The friction in the field of industry, trade, and labor can never be removed by organization and statute law alone no more than the friction between nations can be destroyed by war. Collision can never improve transportation by land or sea. Right of way must be recognized for safety and success. Capital and labor will never reach their goal by competition—they will march to their goal side by side in co-operation. All the progress in the industrial and commercial world heretofore made has been made by co-operation. Railroads and steamships touch on friendly terms at wharf or pier. Coal and iron, lumber and farm products could pass from continent to continent in no other way. To destroy the co-operation of the spheres would destroy the universe that moves on through the centuries, declaring the glory of God. Threats and demands, criticisms and quits can never raise humanity and business to the heights desired. As the sun and earth are friendly, capital and labor must be friends to make the greatest progress for mankind.

What both need is a closer union with the Church. If capitalists and laborers would sit together regularly in the Church and sing God's praises together, it would change their feelings and attitude toward each other, and they would understand better what Solomon wrote: "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favor rather than silver and gold. The rich and the poor meet together; the Lord is the maker of them all."—Prov. 22:1-2. And Paul adds to this: "The body is not one member, but many." "The eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee; nor the head to the feet, I have no need of thee. Nay, those members of the body, which seem to be more feeble, are necessary: the members should have the same care one for another."—1 Cor. 12:14-21, 22, 25. The Christian Church is the solvent for all unsolved conditions that mar the feelings of men and retard the progress of mankind.

W. W. Staley.

ELON LETTER.

Everything that has happened since Dr. Staley's great opening oration (by the way, Dr. Staley has had a dumb-chill—mirabile dictu!) has pointed to a great, good year. The attendance on the daily chapel service has been large, and the spirit of worship is present. It would be hard to be irreverent in such an auditorium as the Whitley Memorial Building. The very atmosphere of the place begets reverence.

But two great events especially stand out as indicative of the session. I refer in the first intance to the opening concert on the great Skinner organ of four manuals. For this great event, the builders of the organ had issued the following invitation:

"The Skinner Organ Company presents Mr. Louis Potter, organist to the Presidents, assisted by Mr. C. Asbury Gridley, Southern representative of Skinner Organ Company, at Elon College auditorium on September 5, 1924, at 8 P. M.

"On this occasion, the largest Skinner organ in any Southern college will be formally opened to the public of music-lovers. At the suggestion of Elon College, you, with your family and friends, are cordially invited to honor this great musical event with your presence. We promise you a concert you will never forget.

"The Skinner Organ Company,
By G. O. Kingsbury,
Boston, Mass. Secy Skinner Organ Co."

These invitations had been sent out to a long list of music-lovers who came in bewildering numbers to gladden the occasion. Every available seat was placed in the building, and standing-room was at a premium. We regretted that many who came could not get in at all. They sat in their cars outside and heard what they could. The president of the North Carolina Federation of Music Clubs, and also the president of the Southern States Federation, whose home is in South Carolina, honored the event with their presence. Music professors and teachers from many of the State's colleges were present, as also were delegations from Winston-Salem, Greensboro, Durham, Raleigh, and other cities. Perhaps the ablest music teacher in the State said to me after listening to the two-hour concert that we had the best instrument in the South. Another distinguished citizen wrote, expressing his thanks that Elon had brought this great organ to the State "to raise the standard of music in North Carolina."

The second event to which I refer is the installation service for Dr. W. S. Alexander as our college pastor. Dr. J. O. Atkinson was in charge. Greetings were brought by him on behalf of the ministry of the Southern Christian Convention. For the local Church, Bro. J. C. McAdams spoke. Prof. J. A. Hornaday welcomed the new pastor on behalf of the community. Superintendent Charles D. Johnston spoke for the Christian Orphanage, and Dean A. L. Hook for the college. Each of these brethren acquitted himself excellently. Then Dr. Alexander responded in a heart-to-heart message that gripped his congregation visibly, and that at once set a high standard for his pastorate among us. His wide experience as a college president, as a college pastor, and as a pastor in the field qualifies him splendidly for his service here. Under God, we anticipate for him a long and fruitful ministry. Dr. Alexander's class-work has begun under most favorable auspices, too. His initial sermon will be delivered on Sunday morning, the 14th.

VIRGILINA LETTER.

The protracted meeting in my field began with the first Sunday in July at Liberty (Halifax County). Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, of Durham, N. C., was with me, and did fine work. The attendance was good, and interest increased to the end of the summer. There were thirteen professions and nine united with the Church.

The third week in July, Bro. Harrell was with me at Lebanon. This is a well-Churched community, and but few attended the services who were not members of some Church. The preaching by Bro. Harrell was of a high order. Sermons were deeply spiritual and appealing. Seven professed faith in Christ, and two united with the Church.

Rev. H. E. Crutchfield, a student and licentiate, did all the preaching at Hebron the sixth week in August. The services were well attended and the spirit of fellowship fine throughout the entire service. Everybody was delighted with the messages and the man. There were thirteen professions, nine united with the Church, and many expressed a desire to lead a more faithful Christian life.

Beginning with the first Sunday in August, our meeting at Union (Virgilina) continued through the second Sunday. Bro. Harrell came on Tuesday and remained with us till the close. The weather was hot, crowds immense, and response to Bro. Harrell's appeals fine. There were about thirty professions, and twenty-four united with the Church. This Church has a membership of nearly four hundred. We have been hindered here for several years from inadequate material equipment. Five years ago we began planning for a new house of worship. Our plans have been drawn, and we are expecting to let the contract this fall for a modern brick edifice with Sunday School and class-rooms.

FROM WAKEFIELD CHARGE.

It gives me great pride to tell the readers of The Sun something of our work on the Wakefield charge. As has already been stated through The Sun, we have bought a parsonage, and have made the first payment. In raising the money, we found the people ready to respond, and with a fine spirit. Nearly every member of the four Churches gave, and gave willingly; they seem to take great pride in giving to the cause. We not only raised the amount that the first payment called for, but we "went over the top" by quite a little amount. We are hoping to get into our new quarters some time by the first of next month.

Well, the people have not ceased to remember us with plenty of good things to eat. Nearly every day brings us something from the hands of some good friend. Saturday, September 6th, one good brother remembered us with another nice ham; this morning, September 9th, Bro. White, out at Mannry (Uncle Wellon's life-long friend), remembered us with a nice box of good things. For all of these things we are grateful to our Lord and Master and to those good folks.

Next Monday, September 15th, our revival will start at Burton's Grove. Bro. Garmon will do the preaching for us. This will be the first one of our meetings; then, on until the middle of October we will be engaged in this kind of work. The week following the fourth Sunday in September, Bro. Poythress helps us at Barrett's, and the week following the first Sunday in October, Bro. J. G. Truitt helps us at Wakefield, and the week following the second Sunday in October, Bro. Wyrick helps us at Ivor. We ask the brotherhood to remember us and the work in prayer, that these days may count great for the Lord.

HOW WE TEACH RELIGION TO CHILDREN.

By Blanche Carrier,
Supervisor of Week-Day Schools of Religion, Dayton, Ohio.

[Miss Carrier studied at Ohio Wesleyan University, Delaware, Ohio, and at Boston University, where she graduated two years ago. She instituted the week-day schools of religion at Dayton in 1922, and in her two years there has made a remarkable success of them. As she writes, today the Dayton schools of religion teach a larger number of children than those of any other city in the country. Over five thousand children are registering in the six schools this fall.]

Hundreds of schools throughout the country are experimenting in religious instruction. Their leaders recognize that the greatest problem they confront is the building of an adequate course of study. The supreme question is, "How can religion be taught to boys and girls?" The largest system of week-day schools of religion is the one at Dayton, Ohio, where trained, paid, full-time teachers give instruction to thirty-four hundred pupils each week. Because these schools run on a high educational basis, the children are granted an hour a week of school time for the study of religion.

Recognizing that the result to be coveted is a way of living rather than an ability to recite certain information, the schools at Dayton are organizing their courses of study around problems of living, such as honesty, courage, good will toward enemies.

What materials do we use in teaching honesty to fifth-grade children, for instance? These boys and girls still love the story. The story makes them acquainted with a great character who is so admirable that they wish to be like Him. So we tell the story of Jacob, a man who learned that God expects people to be square with each other and not to cheat; at another hour the story of the African natives who learned not to steal the possessions of their missionary, because of his Christ-like attitude; then, translating the ideal into the modern daily life, the story of Scotch Granite, the boy who reported truthfully to his teacher the number of times he had whispered.

But we accompany the stories with a number of other things. The children sing the finest Church hymns, and not merely sing them, but carefully study them. The hymns add the emotional appeal which helps to give a motive to conduct.

However, listening to stories does not necessarily produce intelligent citizenship. Two things must follow: First, we may have a discussion, in which the children think out and determine the various forms of honesty for our modern living. Is it right to ride on the street car without paying? To copy another's lesson to hand in? Or to play marbles for keeps? The teachers must use great skill to keep the children from glibly stating in Sunday School fashion and without conviction things which they would not carry out in conduct. Not only skill is required, but sincerity and a keen understanding of the boy and girl.

Secondly, after the boys and girls have really decided on a standard of living, they need to connect it very definitely with their idea of God. So in our schools the children learn to pray. This is a very delicate task. We never ask them to pray at the beginning of an hour, when their minds are not full of something they wish to utter, nor do we ask them until they have learned to express themselves freely and naturally by writing prayers.

So at the close of an hour, if the teacher sees that the children have really grasped and adopted a truth, she says: "Now, we each have something to say to God about this, so I'm going to let you write your prayer quietly in your notebook." When the children have written their prayers, the teacher picks out three or four boys and girls who have put their thoughts well, and says: "We will ask these four to stand and read their prayers as our class prayer for today, while the rest of us bow our heads and close our eyes."

By the close of the year, some pupils are able to stand and lead the class in a prayer without writing it. These prayers are very spontaneous, but they make prayer life a reality for boys and girls.

A prayer of a fifth-grade boy, after a study in appreciation of the Bible, reads: "O God, I thank you for the Bible, and for the things it has taught me. You put the suggestions into men's heads to print the Holy Bible. It has made us civilized and taught us not to steal or kill. It has taught us to believe in you, as I always will. Amen."

This prayer of an eighth-grade boy came straight from the heart. The lad, not born in America, has discovered some wise principle of living. "O God, our Father, if it be Thy will give us strength to do our best to stand for the hard right against the easy wrong. Help the other boys and girls to do right, and not do anything to disgrace our public school or our beautiful city, Dayton. Give us strength to do right, not because we fear the penalty, but because it is right."

Even in the second and third grades, children write real and vital prayers. In one class, the New Year's prayers included such petitions as these: "I thank Thee for making my mother well;" and, "O God, help my father to find a job;" and, "Help me to remeber to hang my clothes up, so my mother won't have to scold me."

The notebooks help crystalize the children's thoughts. At the close of the year, each child may take his notebook home, and many a child is proud to keep it. Some of the headings chosen at random from a fifth-grade notebook are "What Jacob Learned," "Why I Like David," "Why Sir Galahad Saw the Grail," "My Favorite Hymn," "Our Code of Living," "My Christmas Prayer." We encourage each child to express his own ideas so that the book becomes truly his.

An eighth-grade boy, in his notebook, summarizes the life of Jesus thus: "Jesus was a hero because He could not have done what He did if He had not been. It took a stout heart to stand for a cause which He knew He must lose His life for in the end. He must be brave, or He would not have gone to Jerusalem in the face of certain death. He never quavered before an enemy, but stood for His cause until death should hinder Him."

The teaching of religion, however, includes far more than the actual classwork. The longer we teach, the more we are convinced that the teacher must know more about the pupils than she sees in the classroom. She must know the problems they meet and how they meet them. She must know the individuals with their strength and weaknesses. It is because of this that our schools have all the extra-curricular activities that our teachers can find time for.

An eighth-grade class wrote a play on the life of Paul and decided to produce it. During the rehearsals, certain social problems arose. Two or three boys and two or three girls came to the teacher to say, "We are sorry for the way we acted. You must have been ashamed of us." There followed a series of after-school get-togethers, one day a week for the boys, and another for the girls, in which, mixed with games and good times, there were serious little talks with the teacher. One or two choice men and women met with the children also.

In another school, the time came for the eighth-grade pupils to choose their high school course. The question of a vocation was an important one. The teacher invited young men and women successful in certain types of professions and occupations to tell about their work at a series of evening parties at the Church.

So throughout the year, as problems of various types come up in the lives of the children, the school of religion tries to meet them. Often the public school principal is glad to talk them over with the teachers of religion. Often the pupils themselves bring up the problems in little confidential chats with the teacher after class. Often there are comradely talks between the boy or girl and the teacher, talks which face frankly difficulties of the home or of school life, such as hatred of a stepfather, trouble with the teacher, misunderstanding with the mother.

This, after all, is the real proof of religious instruction; it helps the children to live as Christians. When a public school principal said to us, "The life in our public schools is different since our children have been in your school," we felt that we were working in the right direction.

People often ask, "What do the children themselves think of the school of religion?" They are surprised to learn that 46 per cent of those enrolled are boys, who are quite enthusiastic as the girls, and that 38 per cent come from homes not actively affiliated with the Church. We were sure that the children respect our school as highly as the public school when a sixth-grade boy came in one day after school and said, "I've been sick and missed two lessons. Would you have time to go over them with me, so I won't lose anything the others have learned?"

Some of the children wrote letters to us at the close of the years. We quote from them. Virginia said, "I have enjoyed our Bible school class very much, although I attend Sunday School and Church regularly. I have a better knowledge of the Bible than when I started in the fall, because we go more into detail in this class."

Martin said, "I learned that you should go to Sunday School, and not stay home. I learned we should make friends with the boys and girls, and not to get mad at them. I thank you very much for this."

Helen said, "It has helped me a great deal in school work towards my class-mates, as I naturally have a hasty temper."

And Robert said, "I cannot tell you what religious instruction has done for me. I look at God from a new angle now. Best of all, it has convinced me to join the Church."

In planning for week-day schools of religion, there is nothing more important to remember than that we must have and maintain the respect of the pupils and the respect of the public schools. To do this, we must produce a thoroughly pedagogical piece of work in order to affect conduct vitally. For this reason, we must have teachers who are not only sympathetic and sincere, but are also well trained. We must have equipment comparable to that of the public schools. We must conduct the schools in such a business-like manner that the children recognize that here is a piece of work that deserves their most careful attention.—The Christian Work.

The "dead" League of Nations seems to be pretty active. Monsieur Painleve, the new President of the French Chamber of Deputies, when he took office recently, declared that the League of Nations must be strengthened. The new French government proposes to make almost as much of the league as does the MacDonald government in Great Britain. The key of the foreign policy of the present British Cabinet is the league.—Christian Work.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE MISSION BOARD.

The Home Mission Board of the Alabama Christian Conference held a very interesting meeting at Roanoke September 5, 1924. The board was all present, and was called to order by the chairman, Rev. C. W. Carter, who led the opening prayer. After the transaction of some unfinished business, the following was attended to: It was ordered that the treasurer be instructe dto send a check for $25.00 to the widow of the late Rev. J. W. Elder, and also pay Rev. W. T. Mecham a like amount as soon as the treasury will permit.

Rev. J. M. Anderson was present and reported a new Church organized by himself in Randolph County, Ala., with twenty-three charter members. The board gladly endorsed the work of Bro. Amerson at this point and also commended him for work done at Macedonia Church, in Clay County, Ala. The work at Roanoke was next considered, and the following facts were brought out: That we have purchased a lot and have paid on it $200, and have in bank about $30.00 additional for that purpose. It was thought that early in next year we may begin our building at Roanoke.

The board endorsed the idea of forming a pastorate in and around Roanoke and locating a pastor in Roanoke. This we must do sooner or later, and the sooner the better. Let us take this matter to God in prayer, that the man may be found and that the work may prosper, "for if it is of the Lord, you cannot overthrow it." Brethren, our work is growing in influence and in importance. I wish we might view our work from a larger standpoint, and get a clearer vision of our great opportunity.

May God bless the work of our great Church.

G. D. Hunt,
Secretary of Board.

QUICK GAINS AND FAR VALUES.

Christ's discourse on the infinite treasure gives us a view of life which He often expressed. He seems at first to make nothing at all of earthly riches. He even goes farther and appears to treat food and clothes as hardly worth serious concern. The natural inference is that we are to give no thought at all to earthly goods of any sort. The lily and the birds are to be our teachers. We are to fold our hands and wait for a provident Heavenly Father to give us what we need.

But we must be on our guard against this extreme view. We must not forget that this manner of speech is the Oriental way of putting the emphasis. The Lord does not provide for those who are carefree and easy and who live without effort, like lilies and birds. Christianity is, of all things, a strenuous religion, and it does not offer prizes to persons who fold their hands—it does not encourage the unlit lamp and the ungirt loin.

Christ is only bringing out with powerful emphasis the fact that the supreme aim is to be a kind of life which never exhausts itself—you are to be perfect like your Heavenly Father. That is the kind of life which He here calls the infinite treasure. Riches, and even clothes and food, are to have the second place, not the first. The moment they become the end and purpose of life, they arrest the supreme search, and change a being who was meant for infinite things into a creature of a day, living for things which are bound to perish with the using, things which are at the mercy of rust and moth and thieves.

The whole passage means something like this: "Live for infinite values, find something which multiplies and increases as you use it; set your heart on such an aim that you make each point attained a new point of departure for further advance." This does not mean that you are to be "other worldly," and to drop your interest in this world. It means rather that in this world you are to use every situation and circumstance only in such a way that you will enlarge your life—help to realize your true self.

The great fact of life is this: that only something which is of permanent value can satisfy any of us; that which satisfies now, and at the same time adds to our capacity, is supremely the thing to seek—that is precisely the characteristic of the spiritual life which Christ calls the heavenly treasure.

He gives two reasons to show why it is that everybody does not live for the infinite treasure. First of all, it takes what He calls the "single eye" to see it. By single eye, He means the appreciative eye, the eye trained to see spiritual values, as is the musician's ear for harmony, and the artist's eye for beauty; the man who has only an eye for quick, easy gains, immediate personal advantage, would be sure to miss the real goal. Then, again, too many of us try to split the difference and get a fairly good thing out of both heaven and earth. As Whittier puts it, "We try to save our soul and winter's pork with the least possible outlay of sanctity and salt." This attempt to split the difference Christ calls "trying to serve God and mammon. The mammon who was put as a rival of the higher life of the Spirit, is a personification of materialism.

The real drama of our existence is the momentous choice between the quick returns of earth and the far gains of spiritual life.

Oh, if we draw a circle premature,
Heedless of far gain,
Greedy for quick returns of profit, sure
Bad is our bargain!

CHRIST WANTS THE LIFE FIRST.

Each one of the letters to the seven Churches, in the first three chapters of Revelation, opens with the expression, "I know," and represents a direct address of Christ to these Churches. What did the Saviour know about those Churches?

What was it about them which so interested Him that He directed John to write it down? There is not a word about their buildings. There is not a thing said about the adequacy of their equipment. There is nothing at all as to the number of their members. There is not even anything about their finances.

All of these material aspects and tokens of the life of the Churches to which we attach so much importance are here ignored. That which is of paramount importance to Him is the spiritual life resident within the Church organizations.

We are not to think that the material aspects of Church life are to be frowned upon. We are certainly not to think that Church finances are a matter of indifference. Assuredly we are not to believe that money stewardship is to be ignored. There are abundant teachings on these things elsewhere which we urgently need to assimilate and practice.

But, notwithstanding, it is tremendously impressive that it was the inner life of the Church which alone engaged the direct address of our Lord in His message through the Seer on Patmos. He was concerned with outward things only as they related to the things which were inner. Ephesus was disloyal. Pergamus was decadent. Thyatira was declining. Sardis was lifeless. Philadelphia stood steadfast. Laodicea was self-content, poisoned with complacent neutrality. The Saviour said, in effect, "I know you as you are, not as you seem."

Men do not find God by mechanisms or by human wisdom. Said Wendell Phillips, "The Puritan did not stop to think; he recognized God in his soul, and acted." We do not think too much, but many too exclusively depend upon thinking in religion. We cannot get rid of mechanisms, whether in buildings or in Church progress. But we can lose our souls or stumble all the night long in darkness because we are mistaking these mechanisms for life and forget to keep trimmed and burning the light of a holy faith, which, like the Puritan of old, recognizes God in our souls, and through this leads us to God-honoring action.

Many of us are becoming too cool and calculating in our programs of service. Perhaps we think too much in terms of Christian statesmanship and too little in terms of the ready and humble soul hearing the call of God. Too often we ask, Will it pay? Is it expedient? Will it succeed? Yet when anything worth while has ever been done in Christian history, from the Churches in Asia until this day, it was done by asking other questions—Does God require it? Does Christ command it?—Western Recorder.

A CHRISTIAN EDUCATION PILGRIMAGE.

XI. CENTRAL EUROPE.

Passing south from Brussells, through Luxenbourg to Switzerland, we arrive in Strasburg, in Alsace, on "Bastile Day"—the French Fourth of July. Since Alsace is again French territory, following the war, we are permitted to see the evidence of patriotism, or lack of it, which would be manifested on a national holiday by a people who have been over forty years under German control, and where even their own French language was tabooed. When the Germans took over this country from France, they did all in their power to make it a real German province. German, and not French, was taught in their schools so fully that I tested it out among children on the street and found that they could not understand their French language at all, but all knew German. In the years of German occupation, not only were great numbers of Germans imported into Alsace-Loraine, but people who held conversation in their French language were watched, and even imprisoned on the merest pretext. The Kaiser himself often visited Strasburg and preached in the great State Church his famous sermons on "Unser Gott," and held magnificent receptions to himself and caused his images and monuments to be placed on important buildings and parks, and in every way tried to convert this rich city and country to German ideals.

During the war, Strasburg was occupied by German troops and held until the armistice; but as soon as the city was rid of German military power, the people tore down the image of the Kaiser and beheaded the statues of the line of Emperors of Germany which had been erected on public buildings. I saw four such beheaded figures.

Crowds thronged the great public square on this "Bastile Day," and the patriotic spirit was manifest every where. Flags and fireworks abounded, and it was indeed a veritable French

"Fourth of July." Incidentally, it is of interest to us to know that our Fourth of July is really a national holiday by law in France, and the United States Stars and Stripes float from the French capital on this day in recognition of what France and America have meant to each other.

But "Bastile Day" is, of course, quite another day, and celebrates the fall of the Bastile and the beginning of that which made way for the French republic. I asked our Strasburg guide what the city would do with the Kaiser today if they could get hold of him, and he said that many would kill or torture him, but he would put him in an iron-barred cage and send him through the world in a circus parade, that people might see the beast.

The story of Strasburg Cathedral and University must be told at another time, but two very interesting things must be mentioned. The cathedral has passed successively from Catholic to Protestant, and is now controlled by the Roman Catholic Church, and, with its great Strasburg Cathedral clock, is one of their show-places of Europe. Dr. Athearn took us into its Lawrence chapel, where Protestantism was first preached in France, and we seated ourselves in this Catholic Church to hear the story of how it all happened. It was a strange experience in the midst of a Catholic Church, with images and altars and priests and worshipers coming and going; but probably Dr. Athearn's addressing us in English in a foreign land made it easier to do it. However, we were the center of interest to our Catholic friends, who occasionally caught from Dr. Athearn the words of "Catholic" and "Protestant" and "Luther," and wondered what we were doing there. The old cathedral has a background of history of over a thousand years, and the most wonderful chimes in the world.

Dr. Athearn and I and his son made a private excursion to the university and the theological school, where Johnnes Sturm first began his experiments in what we might call high school work today in America. This was the start of such work in the world, and not only did the French and German and English get their ideas and methods from Sturm at Strasburg, but Horace Mann worked out his public school system from the theories and practices of Sturm. Into these halls came Martin Luther and Calvin and Erasmus and Zwingli to sit at the feet of Sturm, and carried to the Church and the world his educational methods.

The present director spoke English fluently, if brokenly, and received us enthusiastically, and when I told him who Dr. Athearn was, he took us intimately through the school and its work and insisted on piling up books and relics on Dr. Athearn until he was forced to protest that he would never be able to get them to America and begged him to ship them to him, which he gladly agreed to do.

Strasburg is on the Rhine, and we crossed this swift-flowing stream here into Germany, although all this "border land" is held by the French troops, which are everywhere in evidence. The Rhine here is a beautiful river, crossed by a great ornate bridge built by Napoleon, and the "New Bridge," used more largely by the troops and over which we passed. The Rhine itself impresses one with power by its width and depth, and most of all by the swiftness of its flow. I had never seen such swiftness of flow in so great a river. It seems to carry all things its way and makes you think of the tendency of the German mind and ambition.

But we only touch Germany as we leave for Zurich and Switzerland, the most beautiful land my eyes ever rested upon. The beauty of its cities and their cleanliness, the sweep of its rivers, the blue and emerald of its wonderful lakes backed by the majesty and beauty of the green, but snow-capped, Alps—all blend into a picture too wonderful for words, and which must not begin here, or there will be no room for this article in THE SUN.

But we must not leave Strasburg without a word about Louis Pasteur, the great French chemist, whose scientific research and discoveries has made him one of the world's greatest benefactors. His unique monument stands at the entrance of Strasburg University, where he spent much of his active life and where he struggled in hardship and poverty for the things which sought expression in his great mind for the world's good. It is related of him that in his old age he was given the money and help to do the things which he had tried so hard to do without them, and he stood before his benefactors one day and declared that his life was a failure, for if he had had the help in his younger years that was now offered him in his age he might have multiplied his usefulness many times. Pasteur is best known to the general public as the organizer of Pasteur Institutes for the cure of hydrophobia and lockjaw, but we also owe to him the scientific foundation of the methods of checking cholera, tuberculosis, diphtheria and other dreaded germ diseases. It was of Louis Pasteur that the French delegate to Glasgow spoke when he said that the greatest Frenchman who ever lived was surely not Napoleon, who destroyed life, but was Louis Pasteur, who saved the lives of millions and who probably contributed more to the comfort and health and common good of humanity than any other man of the nineteenth century.

And here just let us say, while it is the time to say it, that it will be better for all the world when histories cease to magnify military life beyond the victories of peace. We hear a hundred times as much about Napoleon and the wards of France than we do about Pasteur and the lives he has saved and the good he has done in his love and service for mankind. Napoleon did all for his selfish ambition, and we glorify him. Pasteur did all for others, and we forget him. Speed the day when the world shall recognize its real friends and treat them as such, both living and dead.

But we are leaving the land of Erasmus and Sturm, and entering the country of Zwingli and Calvin, and Pestalozzi and Rosseau, and not only beauty, but inspiration, is before us, for we are on the way to Geneva, the capital city of the world, and the home of the League of Nations.

THE COST OF THE WORLD WAR.

It cannot be estimated, but here are some figures that will help stagger the imagination in trying to grasp it. The direct cost of the recent World War was $200,000,000,000, and with the indirect cost, it came to $337,000,000,000. This equals $20,000 for every hour since Christ was born. The daily average cost of the war was $215,000,000, which is $9,000,000 an hour.

In human lives it cost 3,000,000 dead soldiers, 13,000,000 dead civilians, 20,000,000 wounded, 3,000,000 prisoners, 9,000,000 war orphans, 5,000,000 war widows, 10,000,000 refugees. The imagination cannot grasp the agony, the suffering, the anguish that this entailed. And yet they want Mobilization Day!

The only question at all important in our immigration policy is the necessity of peopling the United States with the recial stocks out of which a nation can be built. The temporary needs of manufacturers should not be allowed to interfere with that great and basic program.—World's Work.

OUR PLEDGES
Men and Millions Sacred, Solemn and Binding.

These obligations were made through the Church to the Kingdom of God and to all that pertains to building up that Kingdom in the world, so far as our Christian Church is concerned. As Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., has so pertinently pointed out: "A Christian can no more drop his pledges than he can drop his prayers or his Church membership. Misfortune may make it impossible to meet financial obligations--'When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both' (Luke 7:42)--but not till 'they had nothing to pay.' Obligations to God are as binding as obligations to men, and God will help those who try to keep their pledges."

Many are making great sacrifices to meet these obligations and pay these pledges. Is your Church on this list? If not, let's do our best to get it there. If there, let's get it in first place.

NOTHING SHOULD BE SAID TO BELITTLE SPOUSE BEFORE CHILDREN.

"Study to show thyself approved of God."—2 Tim. 2:15.

Don't quarrel before your children, fathers and mothers.

You are bound to make harsh statements, one to the other, under such circumstances, that you would not have your children hear if you stopped to think. As a husband or a wife, do you say things to your life partner, not infrequently, which belittle that one in the estimation of your children? Do you realize what sort of effect this is bound to produce on children who are otherwise thinking that father or mother are little short of perfect? It is natural for children to think their own parents are the best parents in the world. When this opinion is shattered, there comes a change in the child. There is a different opinion, feeling and attitude toward the parent.

Usually a child leans more toward one parent or the other, and after parents quarrel in the presence of their children there comes a feeling stronger for the one favored and a decrease in love for the other. For the sake of your children, be as united as possible. For your own sake, keep the regard of your children by showing respect each to the other, thus forming a stronger tie for good than could possibly exist without that mutual respect. CHRIST'S REFRESHING.

"The hearts of the saints have been refreshed through Thee."—V. 7.

To write a letter seems a simple task. Abraham Lincoln wrote a letter to Mrs. Bixby. Her five sons had been killed in battle. Her mind was frantic and her heart imbittered. The letter that President Lincoln wrote changed all that to a solemn price that she had laid so costly a sacrifice upon the altar of freedom. This is a type of the change and the refreshing that Christ brings to us all who take Him.

St. Paul speaks of Christ as a source of refreshment, for to Christ all things and all people were suggestive of God, or of the better qualities of men. Refreshing people may or may not possess intellectual force, but they must be (and they always are) forgetful of themselves and their individual concerns, and they are generously interested in the life of those about them. Just what we wish Christ to do to us in this respect, we can and we must do to others. That is our task. It is a ministry of helpfulness—if it be nothing more, let it be at least that. As we feel the constant need of the refreshing Christ in our lives, we will realize the need of it in the lives of others. When we go among them, or they may come to us, may it be our glory that through us and by us, they may know that Jesus is the Christ of God, who makes happy, and that they too may know Him whom to know is life eternal.

Prayer.—Say the Lord's Prayer together.

WEDNESDAY.

THE DEVIL'S DEPARTURE.

"Then the devil leaveth him."—Matt. 4:11.

There are two classes of people the devil will leave—the strong and the weak; but for opposite reasons. If we are strong enough to resist him, he will flee from us finally, and angels will minister unto us. Our Lord is an illustration of the first. If we are so weak as not to be able to resist, when we fall into his snare, he again seems to depart and leave us alone. The following story illustrates this: I once observed a large spider's web as large as the top of a small writing-table. It was curiously woven, and its object, of course, was to catch flies and bugs. While I was beholding it, a large bug was caught in it, and immediately the spider came from its hiding, and the fight was on. It was an interesting struggle. Both for a while seemed to do their best—the spider to enslave, and the bug to be free. But the spider won, having tied every leg of the poor bug. Then the spider left and returned no more. The bug ceased to struggle and seemed resigned to its fate. My sympathy was with the bug, and I felt it should have my aid. So I broke the web and freed the bug. It reminded me of Satan and his snares and of our need of heavenly help.

Prayer.—Our Father, give us eyes that we may see the devil's snares. Surely in vain are they set before us and our children. Help us to help the helpless. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. In Jesus' name. Amen.—T. E. White.

THURSDAY.

THE CROSS OF FULFILLING.

Read Jno. 17, and 1 Cor. 6:16.

The incarnation experience of Jesus is our experience. We, too, are sons of God. God in us, and we in Him. What happened in Christ's birth happened also in our birth. We became sons of the Father in heaven. The life-work of Jesus on earth, His experience on the cross, these must also be our experience. The continuance of Christ's work on earth falls on us. The cross of Christ is a token of the fact that His desire for mankind was unfulfilled. The cross we carry in life, our personal crosses represent the unfulfilled desires of our hearts. We must also take the cross of Christ, that we may help fulfill His desires in mankind. As the life of the vine is to the branches, so is He. So are we to Him. The function of the vine is the function of the branches—the branches must bear fruit.—Chaplain A. R. Parker, U. S. N.

Prayer.—Dear Father, raise our desires and our hopes, our whole powers and life unto Thy holy and loving service. As servants, may we follow our true type—Jesus—and be willing to bear our crosses and His cross, that the desires of Thy great heart and all heaven may be fulfilled. In His name we ask it. Amen.

FRIDAY.

CHANGING THE FACE OF THINGS.

Lesson: 1 Kings 3:4-15.

Can we change the face of things around us? How can we change the habits of dishonesty and waste to honesty and thrift? How can we banish the darkness of men's souls and flood them with the light of God? How can we inspire feeble lives with the desire for a more abundant living? Solomon's request to God is our request. We must have wisdom and understanding to make conditions around us better than they are.

Every day, yea every hour, our minds and hearts and wills are challenged, and we are as little children. We know not how to go out and come in, and yet we have the task of going forth and changing the face of the world. Solomon's task humbled him. Our task should humble us. The Chinese maxim is "A lamb knows how to kneel to suck."

Yet you can never tell one his limitations by pointing to them; you must do so by pointing away from them. Would you show one his weakness, you must show him his strength. Would you point out one's ignorance, you must point out the truth. Would you teach one the folly of his pride, you must display the dignity of being humble. No man can see the brass until his eyes have rested on the gold.

Prayer.—Our Father, we come to Thee to get wisdom and understanding. It is only by coming to Thee that we shall learn how to do our task. Thou alone canst show us the way. May we see Thee and know Thee and know ourselves, and live right forever. Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE SECOND TOUCH.

"He put his hands again upon his eyes."—Mark 8:22-25.

Jesus healed men by touch, and yet in this story, as Mark tells us, there were two touches before the man was able to see. The first touch brought him the indefinite and filmy sight of men "walking as trees"; but Jesus touched him again and then he saw clearly. This man needed the second touch to be fully healed. So do we often need it. The first touch of Christ is wonderful; the first experience is ecstatic. Look back across the years, how He charmed us. How the heart burned within us as we surrendered to Him in youth. The first touch, however, only brought us a partial view of our new world. The first touch may be called conversion, the second regeneration.

The second touch of Jesus is the completing one. So many have had the first touch and not the second. Yet the second touch involves so much more. It gives us a true view of man, no longer as "moving trees," but as real men, a new humanity in which all men are brothers. The second touch is missionary, spiritual, international. Many in the Churches have not received it, and so their religion consists largely of creeds, suppers, socials and musical programs. "When I was a child I spake as a child, I thought as a child; but when I became a man, I put away childish things." So it is when we have received the full vision, the complete sight, the full-orbed life. Only Christ can bring the second touch.

"Ope Thou mine eyes, O Lord my God,
That I may see with vision sure,
That Thou art near to every life
Whose inmost heart is brave and pure."
—Rev. A. E. Gregory.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

SUNDAY.

"THE SABBATH WAS MADE FOR MAN."—Mark 2:27.

Pentecost saves man from all his perils. This power came to the apostles by their tarrying with God. It was heaven's response to their devout and reverent minds. Heaven always responds to reverent minds. Life is superior only in humility and worship.

Love is the only force that binds together and holds up. Prayer is the only article that receives the urgencies that glorify life and heal its dissentions. Pleasure without Christ storms the conscience and breaks down the higher elements of life; but with Him, life sparkles like wine.

Prayer.—Our Father, help us not to walk after the flesh, but after the spirit. Surround us with strong protection against life's perils. Whatever life may mean to us, first of all help us to make it a search for Thee, Thy will and Thy way. In His name we ask it. Amen.

The great principles of right and wrong are legible to every reader; to pursue them requires not the aid of many counselors. The whole art of government consists in the art of being honest. Only aim to do your duty, and mankind will give you credit where you fail.—Thomas Jefferson.

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT, Editor.

DEAR KIDDIES IN THE "KORNER":

Well, now, you'd better be careful to get all the lessons—know the 'rithmetic, and all the spelling—so you won't be in a sure-'nuff "corner" in school. The only corner I like for you to stay in is the "Kiddies' Korner." How do you like to be in that "Korner"? Well, I should like to get some letters from you all this very week, telling me how schools are going, and what your Hallowe'en fun is going to be, and, of course, what you like best for your own page in THE SUN. I'll send you some new and funny games to play for Hallowe'en. So you, and you, and all you other yous—everybody—please write to

Your loving editor,

FANNIE AND HER DOLL.

Fannie had a bad cold. Her head ached, her eyes were heavy, and she really was only fit to go to bed, or at any rate remained warm and snug by the nursery fire. It was a regular November day out of doors. The fog was so thick that pea-soup was a joke to it, and therefore not particularly inviting for any little girl to wish to go out. Still, Fannie had set her heart upon going out all the same, for her grandma had sent to tell her that she had brought her a beautiful doll from Paris, and that she must come and fetch it. And this was the day that had been fixed for her to pay grandma a visit—the day she had looked so forward to, when she should see the lovely new doll, and bring it home as her very own.

"Nurse," said Fannie, "do ask mother if I may not just go around to grandma's; I do so want to have my doll."

"Well, I hope you are anxious to see your grandma, too, Miss Fannie. I'm sure I trust it isn't only for the doll you wish to go," answered nurse; "though, for the matter of that, I'm quite sure your mamma wouldn't dream of letting you go out on such a day as this, and with your bad cold, too."

"Fannie's house is only just around the corner. Mother might send me in the carriage, or I might go in a cab with you. I want to see Granny, and I want my doll," said Fannie, angrily.

"Well, Miss Fannie," said Nurse, "it's no use for you to lose your temper about it. But if you're a good girl, and will try to be patient, I'll see if your Mamma will allow me to go for it," and Nurse went bustling out of the room. Then Fannie went to the window and looked out, making up her mind that she should not mind running out in the fog if she could but get her new doll. "I'm sure it would not matter a bit; my cold could not be made worse by it," said the little girl to herself. Then she remembered that it would be a matter of disobeying her mother. She loved her dearly, and all at once she fancied she saw her mother's face, with a grieved, surprised look upon it, such as it would be likely to wear if she discovered that Fannie had willfully disobeyed her. The tears rushed to the child's eyes, and going from the window, she sat down again by the fire.

"No," said she, "mother did tell me I was not to go out of the nursery all day because of my cold and the fog, so I will do as she told me, and I won't think of my doll any more today."

Having made this wise resolution, Fannie took up an amusing book, and was soon deeply interested in it. In a short time, the nursery door opened softly, and who should come in but an elderly lady, carrying a parcel. Fannie was reading so earnestly that she did not at first look up. As the lady came nearer to her, she did raise her eyes, however, and jumping up, cried out, "Granny!"

"Yes, dear," said her grandmother; "I have brought you your doll, who has caught a terrible cold on her journey from Paris, and requires to be kept very warm, which you can safely do, as she has a peculiar complexion which will, unlike most dolls, stand any heat."

Fannie was delighted with her beautiful doll, and sat with it rolled in a shawl near the fire, making believe that she was the invalid.

THE FROG PRICE.

By Theo Hines.

In the olden times, when wishing was having, there lived a King, whose daughters were all beautiful; but the youngest was exceedingly beautiful—so beautiful was she that the sun itself, although seeing her very often, was enchanted every time she came out into the open.

One day she was playing with a golden ball when it dropped into a beautiful fountain. She began to cry, and as she cried a voice called out, "Why weepest thou, O King's daughter?" She turned around; and guess what she saw—an ugly frog!

"Get away from me, you ugly frog; I am crying because my ball fell in the fountain."

"What will you give me if I bring you your ball?" said the frog.

"My dresses, my pearls, my jewels, or the golden crown which I wear," answered the Daughter.

"I do not want all those things," said the frog. "If you will promise to let me eat out of your little golden plate, sleep in your little bed, and be your companion, I will get your ball."

"I will give you all if you will get me my ball," said the Daughter.

The Frog dived down in the water, and soon was up again with the ball in his mouth. She picked it up and ran off with it. The Frog called, but she did not hear him. While she and the King and his courtiers were eating, a voice called out from the door, "Thou youngest Daughter of the King."

She went to the door to open it, and when she did she shut the door with a slam and went and sat down at the table, looking very pale. The King saw that her heart was beating very fast, and he asked, "Has a giant come to take you away?"

"Oh, no," answered she; "it is no giant, but an ugly Frog." What does the Frog want with you?" said the King.

"Oh, father, I dropped my golden ball in the fountain the other day, and this Frog got it for me. I promised him if he would get my ball he could be my companion."

The Frog called out again for her to let him in. "Go, let him in," said the King. So she went and let him in. He hopped right up in her little chaid. He said, "Push your plate near me, so that we can eat together."

After they had finished, the Frog said, "Take me and put me in your little white bed, because I am very tired." She picked him up with two fingers and put him in a corner of her chamber. While she was asleep, he crept to her bed, and said: "Take me up and put me in your bed, so I can sleep well."

At this, the Princess took him up and threw him against the wall. But as he fell, he was changed into a handsome young man. He and the Princess were married and lived happily ever after.

THE DOLL'S PARTY.

Two little sisters, May and Addie, had each a doll nearly as large as a baby; besides several small dolls. One day, May wrote a note in her doll's name, asking Addie's doll to a doll's party, which was to be held in the summer-house at the end of the garden, at 4 o'clock. Addie, for her doll, sent word back to May's doll that she would be very glad to go to the party.

As soon as May got the note she ran down to the summer-house to get everything ready. She took her box of tea-things, in which were cups, saucers, spoons and plates, a tea-pot, cream pitcher and sugar-bowl.

She first put a clean white cloth on the table, then she set on the tea-things as she had often seen her mother do when getting tea at home. Her mother had given her some cake and a few biscuits, and some real tea to put in her tea-pot.

Just as the clock struck 4, Addie, with her doll in her arms, came down the garden-walk. She stopped at the summer-house door and knocked. May opened the door, and all the dolls shook hands with her, and the little girls said, "How do you do?" for them.

The dolls were seated at the table, and the tea began. They were all very hungry, and shortly nearly all the good things were eaten up, when there came a knock at the door. "Who can it be?" said May, as she went to the door. A little boy named Arthur came in, followed by his little dot. Arthur was looking for his sisters, and went to the summer-house to see if they were there. When he came near the door he heard May say, "Will you have a piece of cake?" Looking in at the window, he was just in time to see May take the cake for her doll, saying, "Thank you, dear," and then eat the cake.

He looked on for a while, and heard all the nice things the dolls were made to say to each other, but seeing the cake and biscuits going fast, he thought he had better join the party before it was too late, so he went quietly to the door and knocked. "May I come to your party?" asked Arthur. "I won't tease you or break your tea-things." "How funny it is to have a boy at a doll's party; but you may come in."

"All right," said Arthur. But while he was bowing to the dolls before seating himself, his little dog jumped slyly and snatched at the last piece of cake, so that Arthur was deprived of the pleasure of eating it.

THE SQUIRREL.

I saw a squirrel and it saw me,
It was so frightened it climbed a tree.
Then I went back to my little hut,
And then the squirrel threw down a nut.

And then I said: "Oh, come with me,
I'll make a nest up in my tree."
So then the squirrel just hopped along
And sang to me this little song.

"You gave me a home and I thank you!
I'll make you happy when you're blue!"

Jack Frost is coming; he blows his horn
As he comes through the fields of wheat and corn.
He paints the leaves upon the trees;
He laughs when streams and brooklets freeze;
He laughs aloud and cries "Ho! ho!"
Winter is coming with ice and snow.

I saw a little brook,
And I thought I would look
In and see what I could see.
There I saw a little elf
That looked just like myself—
Ha! ha! and he was me.

Review: "Opening Period of Christ's Ministry."

Golden Text: "For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have eternal life."—John 3:16.

Devotional Reading: Isa. 55:1-13.

To review means to view again. In this particular instance it will mean to look at the lessons that we have been over during the past quarter. And this will be a good thing. For it will help us to fix in mind some of the most important truths in connection with the twelve lessons that we have studied. Perhaps we can summarize the lessons in such a way that we will always have a "peg for our memory"—some way of putting the truth so that it will "stick."

The lessons began with the birth of Jesus, and ended with His first missionary tour. They include many events, and embody many truths. But there are several fundamental truths underlying all these things. They may be summed up as follows:

1. Jesus Christ is the Son of God and the promised Messiah.

2. His mission was to be spiritual, and was to reveal God.

3. He was to do this by His life, and His teaching, and His service.

4. The supreme motive of all that He said and did and was, was love.

The individual lessons emphasize general and specific truths. These columns have given, from week to week, some of the teaching points. The present article will simply sum up the respective lessons in a brief way.

1. The Birth of Jesus.—God enters into human life. He is not a being remote from the world He has created, but is in our midst, and is to be found in our fellowmen, although they cannot fully contain Him or exhaust His meaning.

2. The Boyhood of Jesus.—Jesus was a normal human being, embodying in His life the laws of growth and development, universal to mankind. This humanity makes Him fully capable of helping us in our human weakness.

3. The Baptism of Jesus.—Baptism in itself does not guarantee salvation. It is the outward symbol of an inner change or state, and an act of consecration. The mode has little significance.

4. The Temptation of Jesus.—The will of God, and not expediency, was the governing principle of Jesus' life. In that He was tempted, He knows how to help those who are tempted.

5. The First Disciples of Jesus.—God is to save the world through men who first of all know Him and then give themselves to the task of helping others to know Him. Devotion to Jesus Christ is the essence of discipleship.

6. The First Miracle of Jesus.—Social life is legitimate, but is found at its best only when dominated by the spirit of Jesus.

7. Jesus Cleanses the Temple.—Righteous indignation is an essential factor in the Christian life. God's house is a place of worship.

8. Jesus Talks with Nicodemus.—God loves the world. His love desires all men to be saved. It is only as a man is born of God's spirit that he can see the kingdom of God.

9. Jesus Talks with a Samaritan Woman.—Jesus Christ satisfies the deepest needs of the human heart. God's love overleaps all barriers.

10. Jesus Heals a Nobleman's Son.—Jesus Christ is Master of life. He has compassion for all those who are in need.

11. Jesus Driven from Nazareth.—The message of Christianity is good news, and finds its embodiment in Jesus Christ. The truth is not always welcome.

12. Jesus Makes a Missionary Tour.—The riches of Christ are for all. Prayer is one of the most dynamic forces in making us want to share those riches with others.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic: "Getting Things Done."—Neh. 1:1-6, 4:1-6.

"Let all things be done decently and in order."

"To everything there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the heaven."

Daily Readings: M., Sept. 22, Organizing for victory.—1 Kings 20:13-21. T., Sept. 23, For charity.—Acts 6:1-7. W., Sept. 24, For discipline.—Tit. 1:1-16. T., Sept. 25, For Efficiency.—Neh. 4:12-23. F., Sept. 26, For helpfulness.—Mark 2:1-5. S., Sept. 27, For worship.—1 Chron. 23:25-32.

In our lesson study, we see Nehemiah at the court of King Artaxerxes as cup-bearer to the king. He, with his other brethren, were in captivity. The enemy had devastated Jerusalem, the old home. The walls of that sacred city had been torn down, and the nation which was once the leading of nations, had become desolate. A messenger of Nehemiah's kin brought him news of the conditions of the old home. Nehemiah was sad. Although he was of good position himself, he didn't selfishly forget his brothers. He was sad with them of the conditions of Jerusalem. He set to work planning what could be done towards rebuilding the torn-down walls. His first real work was that of talking to God. With the approval of God, he gets the permission of the king to go back to Jerusalem for a season. After planning his work completely and had let his people know the aim he had in mind, they said, "Let us rise up and build." They strengthened their hands for the work and set about the task, and although the enemy mocked and laughed at their efforts, they worked to carry out the plans. At last the wall is finished. Why? "The people had a mind to work." How? By planning their task and then joining their hands for the task. They proved to the world that they could "get things done."

Our Church year is almost over. We should co-ordinate our plans with that of the auxiliaries of the Church and set our hands to certain and definite tasks. The society that really reaches out and helps the world is the one that is "getting things done." In planning our programs, we should see that they are planned rightly and wisely. Then all hands should be joined to the execution of those plans. The C. E. pledge requires that the members should "get things done." If we are good Christian Endeavorers we shall get things done for the kingdom. We are workers and co-workers with Jesus. May we work with God always to the end that we may leave the world a bit better than we found it.

For the Meeting.

Does God's work show haphazardness, or does it show systematic planning?

Suppose God, in controlling the stars and the sun, was not orderly and systematic?

Why was Jesus' life such a great blessing to himself and to the world?

Is a person who has no plan for life an asset or a detriment to society?

How should we begin our planning for a life work?

How did Nehemiah begin? Was it a good move for him? Why?

Has God a plan for every human life? How shall we find it?

BETHLEHEM NOTES.

Dear brethren and friends of Bethlehem College, and especially you of the Christian Church: The time has arrived when the second payment of our subscription to the Bethlehem building fund is due. I desire to thank again all friends who so readily met their promises to this fund last year. Many loyal-hearted men and women, and a great number of children, responded to the appeal, and this in the face of the fact that we made poor crops. Now we have a good crop generally, and I feel sure almost every one can pay some on the subscriptions. Let us honor the Lord by meeting, as best we can, our promises to His kingdom service. "Give and it shall be given to you," is the divine idea.

Brethren, don't fail us in the critical period. We need money to finish paying for the building now almost completed. We must pay for our equipment, and need still more equipment. And then, above all, we need more room. We must build more. We will need an administration building just as soon as we can get one, and even before we get it. More than eighty students have registered for this term, and still they come. I think we will be sure of one hundred.

I wish our people could see this fine body of young men and women. It would be an inspiration to any one. We are building a growing institution, fostered by the Church of God. It must do work for God through human life. A Church institution never gets grown. "Whenever you will, you may do them good." Will not every one get ready to help this fall? Get your offering ready, and send it to me. Or if you had rather, I will come after it. I mean to visit every Church—that is, if it is possible to do so—during the winter. I will appreciate it if the pastors or some interested one would notify me of your meeting days. I desire to see you face to face and talk the matter over with you in the name of our Lord. My plan is to pay our present indebtedness, and then begin a new building at once.

We must have more room. Come to see the building. Visit the school. Write the financial agent and enclose a check, and all hearts will be happy.

G. D. Hunt.

The religion of the average man is a reflection of his undisciplined self—an unassorted mixture of second-hand opinions, adopted in laziness and maintained in obstinacy.—Dean Inge.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

Our Reidsville Sunday School came to visit us last week, more than two hundred strong—old folks, young folks, boys and girls—all happy on a picnic day. Bro. Ledbetter, their pastor, had notified us in advance of the day, so we were in readiness with a long table under the beautiful oaks for the picnic dinner. We made the table one hundred feet long, as our Reidsville people had been here on a picnic before, and we knew something of the bountiful picnic dinner they always bring. We found on this occasion we had not overestimated in our calculation, as every foot of our table was used in order to make room for their most excellent dinner. All the Orphanage family was invited to partake, and the invitation was gladly accepted and thoroughly enjoyed. The day was ideal in every way—cool, clear and pleasant. The children spent the day on the "ocean wave," "giant stride" and swimming in our pool. We are always glad to have Sunday Schools to picnic here. We have a good ground, with plenty of shade, playground fixtures, swimming pool, etc., for entertainment, and in case of rain we have plenty of shelter. We hope our Reidsville people will make this an annual affair.

Our children have about finished their vacation visits, and practically all are home again. Several have gone out recently, but others have come to fill their places. We have had lots of applications recently, and now have about seventy-five on the waiting list, some of them not eligible, but many of them very urgent cases. If we had a building that would care for thirty-five, it would relieve the most pitiful cases. What shall we do? Shall we turn them all away, or shall we build another building? If you say turn a deaf ear to the cry of the fatherless and the widow, are you complying with the teachings of the Bible, which commands us to bring forth the tithe of all our increase, that the widow and the fatherless may be fed. If you say build another building, then how much would you invest in it in order to give thirty-five children a home? It will cost to build and furnish about $30,000.

HOME-COMING AT DAMASCUS.

BY REV. W. C. WICKER, D. D.

At the home home-coming celebration at Damascus, the following account of Rev. Robert G. Tinin was presented by Rev. W. C. Wicker, quoted from "The Lives of Christian Ministers," by Prof. P. J. Kernodle:

Rev. Robert G. Tinin was a member of the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference. He was born in 1818, and on October 16, 1892, he was said to be in his seventy-fourth year. At this time he was living in Orange County, N. C.

In 1847, he was at the Conference at Pope's Chapel, in Granville County, as a licentiate, and was assigned to the Haw River circuit, with Rev. J. A. Turner. This year he was engaged in a meeting at Hanks' Chapel, in which fifty-four white persons and eleven blacks were converted. In 1848, he was engaged in a meeting of six days at Kedar, and attended the Conference at New Providence. He was chosen a delegate to the Southern Christian Association, to meet at Raleigh, N. C., in 1849. He was ordained at Hanks' Chapel in 1849, by Elders D. W. Kerr, T. J. Fowler, and J. R. Holt.

In 1851, he was at the Conference at Union Chapel, in Alamance County, and in 1853 at the Conference at Mt. Pleasant, at which he was assigned to the following Churches: O'Kelly's Chapel, Hanks' Chapel, Smyrna, New Salem, Pleasant Grove, and Liberty. He was at the Conference at O'Kelly's Chapel in 1854, at which place the North Carolina and Virginia, and the North Carolina Conferences met as one. At the same time, a monument to Rev. James O'Kelly was unveiled. He attended the Conference at New Providence in 1855.

At the Conference at Hanks' Chapel in 1856, he was appointed a delegate to the Southern Christian Association, and a fraternal messenger to the Eastern Virginia Conference, which he attended, at Bethlehem, in Nansemond County, and at which he preached on Sunday. In 1857, at the Conference at Bethlehem, in Alamance County, N. C., he served on the committee on the Graham Institute, and was chosen a fraternal messenger to the Eastern Virginia Conference, and a delegate to the Southern Christian Convention.

A petition from the Church at Jones' Schoolhouse, in Wake County, organized by Rev. R. G. Tinin, was accepted, and the Church unanimously received into the Conference. He was chosen also on the board of directors of the Home Missionary Society of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference. The Southern Christian Convention met at Cypress Chapel, in Nansemond County, Va., to which he had been elected. He attended the Convention. In 1859, at the Conference at Union Chapel, in Alamance County, he served on the committee on religious exercises and on the special committee to which was referred the report of the Conference committee.

At Pleasant Hill, in 1860, he served on the committee on home missions, and was pastor of Bethlehem Church. At the Conference at Damascus, in 1862, he was appointed on the committee on temperance, and in 1864, at Antioch, in Chatham County, he was appointed on the committee to consider the recommendations in the annual address, which recommendations referred chiefly to the publication of THE CHRISTIAN SUN and the employing of an editor.

He was appointed by the committee on ministerial supply to have charge of Martha's Chapel. In 1865, the Conference met at Oak Level, in Franklin County, at which he was in attendance and served as chairman of the committee on statistics.

At O'Kelly's chapel, in 1866, he was appointed by the committee on ministerial supply to preach at Bell's Christian Chapel, Moore Union, Wake Chapel, and Shallow Well. He attended the Conference at Union, in Alamance, in 1867, and likewise the Conference at Salem Chapel, Forsyth County, in 1868. The Conference in 1869 was held at Wake Chapel, which Church he had been serving for several years in succession. At the Conference at Union, in Halifax County, Va., in 1876, he was in attendance, but reported himself without work. He was appointed to Bethel and Pleasant Grove, Chatham County. He was at the Conference at Damascus, in 1878; also at the Conference at Christian Chapel in 1879, at which he served on the committee on religious literature. He preached during 1881 to 1883.

In 1884, he was present at Union, in Alamance County, and reported that he preached and labored as opportunity was given. At the Conference at New Providence, in 1886, and at Hanks' Chapel, in 1889, he reported to Conference. In 1893, he resided near Mt. Zion, and assisted Rev. W. J. Laine in his ministerial duties, and in the minutes for the year his name appears in the directory, but in 1894 it is left out. The roll was revised, the Eastern North Carolina Conference being organized at this time.

During the time in which he was actively engaged in the ministry, the Churches under his pastoral care prospered. He was prompt and regular in attendance upon the meetings of the Conference, and was a pious, exemplary minister of the gospel.

PROHIBITION AND CLOTHES.

Henry White, editor of the Clothing Trade Journal, official organ of the International Association for Garment Manufacturers, and former head of the United Garment Workers of America, the other day discussed the effect of the eighteenth amendment on clothes.

"The shutting off of the legalized liquor supply, immediately diverted two billion dollars from booze into useful channels. A goodly proportion of this money has gone into more and better clothing. Sober men deck their wives out decently, buy good garments for their children and are careful of their own appearance.

"You don't have to go farther than New York City to see the change that has been wrought in this trade, and that can be attributed directly to prohibition. More than seven thousand saloons have been closed. These occupied important corners and were thrown on the market at a time when there was a pressing demand for real estate.

"To my knowledge, more than two hundred of these have been taken over by retail clothing and furnishing stores. High wages have given people more money, but the closing of the saloons has shown them how to use it. Cheap materials, ill fitting and badly cut garments are no longer tolerated. People are willing to pay for good workmanship, and they take pride in being well dressed. Any manufacturer of garments will tell the same story if he is honest about it."—Christian Work.

THE SPELL OF AUTUMN.

Oh, Autumn roads are red and bronze and glowing as a flame—each one of them is like a torch, yet no two are the same! Each one of them is like a glow from a vast sunset sky, and each one makes the pulse to thrill, and makes the heart beat high. Oh, Autumn roads are luring roads, that call us from afar; that bid us win to that dim place where great adventures are!

Oh, Autumn woods are like a song—a vivid song, and free. There is a splendid burst of sound on every blazing tree. Each single leaf is like a verse, a rhyme of golden glow, the Autumn woods are like a song, that few of us may know. For few of us will pause to hear the throb of nature's voice, although the cadence of it makes the waiting soul rejoice!

Oh, Autumn brooks that dance between the fields of garnered grain—have each of them a merry tune, a joyous glad refrain. And though they know that they are bound for the far-reaching sea, they run their race with quite an air of pride and mystery. The yellow grasses, bending near, can touch the water's brink. And purple asters, in their grace, can dare to bend, and drink!

Oh, Autumn lies across the world, and little homes that stand by pleasant lanes seem cheerful as a warm, extended hand. One knows that they are waiting for loved wanderers to creep beyond their opened portals, and one knows that they will keep hearth fires glowing in the dusk, and happy tables spread with food for hungry folk to eat, with fresh new milk, and bread. Oh, Autumn lies across the world—it calls and bids us roam. But every road, and tree, and stream is murmuring of—home!—Exchange.

GET OUT THE CHRISTIAN VOTE!

Christian people must vote if they hope to retain Christian ideals in the policies and machinery of their government.

Christian men and women have not been voting in adequate numbers. The families of the nation have come to permit organized minorities and backroom politicians to usurp the powers that belong in the great body of the citizenship.

Wake up, men and women of the Churches!

You have a responsibility as a Christian citizen. Honor it.

In government, as in the other activities of life, you get what you work for, and no more. Work for cleanliness and purity and Godliness in your national life, and work for them with your ballot and your voice.

Twenty-one million native-born Americans qualified to vote failed to go to the polls in the 1920 election. Let us remove that blot from the banner of democracy.—Christian Herald.

A traveler staying for the week-end in a little village was telling the oldest inhabitant that he could not imagine how people managed to live in such a dull place.

"Well, zur," said the native, "you should stay here till next week, and then you'd see the whole countryside stirred up."

"And what is going to happen next week?" asked the stranger.

"Plowing," was the reply.—Epworth Herald.

"With all due deference, my boy, I really think our English custom at the telephone is better than saying, 'Hello!' as you do."

"What do you say in England?"

"We say: 'Are you there?' Then, of course, if you are not there, there is no use in going on with the conversation."—Christian Register.

Well Known Hospital Physician Says These Are Some of the Danger Signals of Exhausted Nerve Force—What To Do

One of the most terrible of all human ailments is exhausted nerve force. It weakens all the vital organs of the body and as a result all kinds of alarming symptoms may appear. Some people get nervous indigestion, pains over the eyes, in the heart, and across the small of the back; in others the first symptoms are mental instead of physical—sleeplessness, worry over trifles, or inability to concentrate on your work.

The nervous mother is upset by her children, squabbles with her husband, has frequent fits of the "blues" and bursts into tears over the smallest troubles. In such cases it is worse than useless to waste time taking stimulating medicines or narcotic drugs; the starving nerve cells must have nerve food which is supplied by the blood. Any physician will tell you that if the blood supply were cut off from any nerve in your body that the nerve would die.

If you have any of the symptoms of nerve force exhaustion, you should at once take steps to enrich your blood. This can be quickly and most effectively accomplished by the free use of Nuxated Iron, which not only increases the activity of the blood making organs, but feeds true red blood food directly to the blood itself and thereby helps to create millions of new red blood cells.

The discovery of organic iron as contained in Nuxated Iron is one of the most valuable red blood making scientific discoveries since the creation of modern medical science, and its effect in helping to create new nerve force and revitalize worn-out, exhausted nerve cells is sometimes most amazing.

Try Nuxated Iron for two weeks and if at the end of that time you have not obtained all and even greater benefits than you expect, the manufacturers will promptly refund your money.

NUXATED IRON INCREASES THE NERVE FORCE AND GIVES NEW STRENGTH AND ENERGY

FOWLER.

Following a lingering illness, Mrs. D. W. Fowler died at her home here on Thursday morning. She had been confined to her bed for some time. The fortitude and uncomplaining spirit shown during her suffering was an inspiration to those who cared for her.

A short funeral service was conducted from the home on Friday afternoon by the local pastors, the Rev. D. A. Long, the Rev. E. H. Davis and the Rev. C. L. Dowell, in the presence of a large number of friends and relatives. A mixed choir sang appropriate hymns. Her nephews—H. F. Fuller, B. A. Fuller, Charlie Mitchell, Edgar Mitchell and Graham Mitchell—were pallbearers.

Many beautiful flowers, carried by her nieces, testified to the esteem in which she was held.

Mrs. Fowler was Miss Dora Mitchell before her marriage, and has a large number of relatives in this section. She joined the Christian Church when a young girl and lived a consistent member until her death. She is survived by her husband and three children, Mrs. John Collins and Miss Pearl Fowler, of Franklinton, and Auburn Fowler, of Fuquay Springs.—Franklinton "Times."

RICHARDS.

Little Augustine B. Richards, the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Boyd R. Richards, passed to his eternal home on Saturday morning, September 6, 1924. He was a beautiful child, and was dearly loved by his parents and all the members and friends of the family, all of whom longed for him to remain with them longer, but God also loved him and needed another jewel in heaven, so he called him home.

The funeral was conducted by the writer in the presence of only the immediate family, on Monday, September 8, 1924, at 10 A. M., and the mortal part of this beautiful babe was laid to rest in the family lot in Mt .Hebron Cemetery, Winchester, Va.

"Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God." "In heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven."

May the Lord bless and comfort the bereaved family.

ROSS.

Rachel Cynthia, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Ross, was born May 15, 1924. Death kissed her spirit away August 15th. During her short stay on earth she touched the chords of love in many hearts besides her parents.

A sweet flower has been removed from earth and transplanted in the heavenly Eden, to bloom through the eternal ages. So heaven is made brighter. May the parents and friends be comforted with the thought of meeting her again where there will be no more parting.

Building a Country Sunday School

By E. L. Middleton.

Mr. Middleton possesses definite qualifications for the preparation of this work. For twelve years after leaving college, he was a day school and Sunday School teacher in a village that had "once-a-week" preaching, with half the membership of the Sunday School living in the open country; while for fourteen years more he has been a State Sunday School secretary in rural State. Mr. Middleton urges the adoption of no novel or revolutionary ideas or methods. He recognizes the place and the value of recognized Sunday School policies and methods, and has prepared a digest of the essentials in a manner plain enough to render it adaptable for use in any rural school. Methods, administration, organization and development are each and all discussed in this book in an eminently practical way.

The price of the book is $1.25. You can order it through "The Christian Sun," 1536 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By Rev. S. M. Lynam.

As a Matter of Respect.—

The vicar of a fashionable Church in Paris has become so shocked at the way bridemaids have dressed at Church weddings recently that he has issued an order that the Church supply mantles ready to throw over the shoulders of his fair parishioners who come to weddings or to any service in the Church too scantily clad. If these young ladies will not care for themselves, this vicar will care for them. We are sometimes persuaded that some American Churches might well follow the example of the Paris Church.

Another Scientific Conquest.—

It is reported that Dr. H. H. Dale, of Canada, has discovered the germ that causes sleeping sickness, and has found a palliative for it which, it is hoped and believed, will save the lives of thousands every year in Africa and other countries. This sleeping sickness has claimed a few victims in this country, and it amounts to almost a plague in Africa. If the discovery of Dr. Dale is what is claimed for it, science has again bestowed a blessing upon mankind. God uses the minds of men to do His miracles for Him in our age.

Japanese Go to Hawaii.—

Japanese again last year greatly outnumbered other aliens in seeking admission to the Hawaiian Islands. In the twelve months ending June 30th, 5,134 aliens were admitted, according to the annual report of A. E. Burnett, chief of the immigration force. Of these, 4,050 were Japanese, including 501 "picture brides"; most of the others admitted were Chinese and Koreans. The Japanese continue to emigrate somewhere, and wherever they go they carry their nationality. They are always Japanese, and this makes them undesirable immigrants for any country. There is no chance of their finding a place in the national life of the country to which they go.

A Fact About Butterflies.—

Male butterflies like to get drunk, while female ones shun liquor and are perfectly contented with water as a beverage, is the discovery of the keeper of a London zoo. He kept many kinds of butterflies in a wire-screened garden, and exposed bowls containing pure water and whiskey. The male invariably took to the liquor bowls and sipped until they fell off the brim and rolled on the ground. The females, however, without exception, shunned the alcohol. This fact about butterflies will be encouraging to those interested in prohibition, and now that women have the vote, it is believed that they, like the female butterflies, will not only shun liquor themselves, but will outlaw it still further from their boys. Whatever strikes at the purity and sanctity of the home will find an opponent in the average woman. Her interest is centered in the next generation. She is the guardian of the nation's future.

Henry Ford Takes a Stand.—

Henry Ford has decided to discharge any one from his factory on whose breath may be found the smell of liquor or in whose home intoxicants may be found. An order to this effect has been posted in the Ford factory. It reads: "From this date, a dismissal without opportunity for appeal will be the penalty imposed on any man found to have the odor of beer, wine or other liquor on his breath or to have intoxicants on his person or in his home. The eighteenth amendment is a part of the fundamental law of this country. It was meant to be enforced, and so far as our organization is concerned, it is going to be enforced to the letter."

This stand which Henry Ford has taken is an admirable one, and one which other business men who are employers might emulate profitably. When the citizens of this country get squarely behind the eighteenth amendment, it will be enforced to the letter, just as it was meant to be. Only the citizens can enforce law, and it is their business. They are the nation in the last analysis.

The League is Praised.—

At a meeting of the Institute of Politics, recently held at Williamstown, Mass., David H. Miller, a member of the American Peace Commission in 1919, said that a state of war had hitherto been regarded as one of the normal relations between countries, but we have now gotten beyond that. Sarah Wambaugh, of the secretariat of the League of Nations, said that only Americans, Turks, Mexicans and Russians were still living under the primitive code and needed a protection treaty. Fifty-four other nations had already outlawed war, she pointed out. Miss Wambaugh said that she had a message from M. Politis, representative from Greece in Geneva, about the Corfu incident between Italy and Greece. When she told him she was going to America, he said: "You can tell Americans that if it had not been for the League of Nations, Greece would be in the same situation as Serbia in 1914."

It is a fact that war must be outlawed; but the means must yet be found. It may be that the League of Nations offers such a means, but it would be hard to convince Americans of it. The League for Americans' needs must have some reservations, because of the high position which America occupies. Most of the nations in the league have everything to gain and nothing to lose, while the case is vitally different with America.

Practice Defines Law.—

There's a class of economic doctors who insist that by paying double wages and cutting the hours of labor in half, then unemployment shall cease and hard times be only a memory. Their theory is that workers should have much more time for leisure and self-improvement along the lines of intellectual and cultural gain.

Their opponents—those who see in existing conditions the natural and inevitable trend of affairs—argue that workers who desire to stock their minds with useful information and to benefit their bodies with healthful exercise, have ample opportunity in eight hours daily, and that, since the majority of workers now refuse to expend the energy and self-denial required to promote their individual fortunes, added time might prove to be only an aggravation of the spirit of idleness.

This is really an interesting question; but, like all issues touching the welfare of humanity, it will, we believe, be solved at the demand of economic necessity. And we may rest assured that practice, not theory, will define the law.—Southern Printer.

Consecrated Wealth.—

Consecrated wealth is a necessary partner that goes with consecrated lives in the evangelization of the world. A modest, quiet, humble man who possessed a considerable fortune, but counted his possessions a trust from God, gave himself to the study of the problems of wealth. After prolonged consideration, he published a book entitled, "Wealth, its Acquisition, Investment and Use." One of our exchanges quotes the following striking passage from the book: "There is a luxury in doing good sweeter far than any material gratification that money can buy. It is better to be rich in good works, rich in happy memories, in an approving conscience, in the prayers of the poor and in the smiles of heaven, than in heaps of mere golden dross. He who can truthfully say with the patriarch, "The blessing of him that was ready to perish came upon me, and I caused the widow's heart to sing for joy,' is rich indeed in an immortal treasure, that no possible reverses of fortune can ever destroy." "The luxury of doing good" is a joy worth seeking after. If all God's stewards were faithful, living simply and economically, and in loving loyalty to the Master, giving that which rightfully belongs to Him, how much more could be accomplished in the vast world field, "hastening the coming" of the Lord. —Selected.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Are you ready for Conference? If not, you had better get busy. Some of the Conferences are less than a month off.

Rev. N. G. Newman, pastor, held a very successful meeting with Holy Neck Church the week of September 7th to 13th. There were twenty-seven additions to the Church. Dr. Newman is now settled in the Holy Neck parsonage at Holland, and is happy in his work. His people have received him most cordially.

Our Sunday School at Mt. Olivet, Greene County, Va., Rev. A. R. Flowers, pastor, now numbers more than 170, and is said to have sent in to their Conference at its recent annual session the best report of any school in the Conference. Though located in the mountains of Virginia, where travel is not easy and the roads not the most inviting, this Church and school are among the most progressiive and promising of our country districts. Congratulation to Bro. Flowers and his faithful co-workers.

Rev. McD. Howsare, secretary of evangelism, put on a week's campaign of evangelism in the Holland, Va., Christian Church recently. Pastor and people were simply delighted, edified, thrilled with the methods employed and the results achieved. There were sixty-nine additions to the Church—and Bro. Howsare did not invite a person to accept Christ or join the Church. The members of Holland Church did that; and we are happy to discover that God can, and will, use their efforts, as well as the efforts of an evangelist, to win souls to Christ and the Church.

The people of Elon College community gave their pastor, Dr. Alexander, a real, "sho-'nuf" pounding Saturday P. M., the 13th. Dr. W. P. Lawrence, the spokesman of the happy throng, told Dr. Alexander and family that the Elon folks had been wanting the privilege of going in a group to visit him and his, and only brought along the good things for his larder as an excuse for the visit. It was a happy occasion. We advise every Church whose members read THE SUN to pound their pastor forthwith. It is an excuse for having a real, happy time together. Try it.

We congratulate our good friend and brother, Rev. Joseph Wood Fix, formerly of Burlington, N. C., now of Gresham, Neb. The happy event was solemnized in the West End Methodist Episcopal Church, Nashville, Tenn., and Miss Gladys Eloise Akin was the bride, of whom the Tennesseean says: "Mrs. Fix is one of Nashville's most popular young ladies, having a great host of friends throughout the State." Mr. Fix, well known to many SUN readers, after graduating from Elon College, went to Vanderbilt University, where he received his master of arts degree, and has since been engaged in religious education work in Gresham, Neb.

Rev. A. R. Flowers, pastor, writing September 17th, of the recent revival at his Mt. Olivet, Greene County, Va., Church, says: "The services last week at Mt. Olivet were full of interest from beginning to end. We were not able, for lack of room, to accommodate the people who came. More than 100 were turned away each evening. We have had thirty-five additions to the Church roll this year, and our Sunday School has increased from 134 last year to 176 at present. Our industrial work has also created much interest. I have cotton here that is five feet high and four feet broad, and it was not planted till June 13th, the flood streams destroying the first seed that I put out. I have grown more than a dozen varieties of vegetables, grain, etc., successfully that have not grown here before."

Mr. John T. Kernodle, treasurer-manager of the Central Publishing Company, surprised his friends on last Wednesday evening when he and Miss Virginia Beale were married by Dr. Franklin, of Grace Methodist Church.

Mr. Kernodle was on his way to the station to join the Acca Temple Band on their trip to Atlantic City, where the Shriners were to have a three-day outing. After the marriage ceremony was performed, Mr. Kernodle continued his trip. Mrs. Kernodle joined him on Friday evening in Atlantic City. They will visit Philadelphia, New York, and other points north.

Mrs. Kernodle has been prominently connected with the State Board of Education for the past two years, and both of these young people are active members of the First Christian Church of this city. Many friends are wishing them happiness.

Mr. Jaron I. Joyner, Courtland, Va.....	1.50
Total received to September 18th.....	$23.00

Bro. J. I. Joyner, in remitting gifts from his brother and himself, says: "I wish that we could send more. If we could do according to our feelings in the matter, the work would have been done before now."

We are grateful for these gifts. Let others send in as rapidly as they will. The committee is preparing to act in the matter as soon as the funds are on hand.

The Southern Convention at Norfolk, in May, decided to erect monuments at two historic spots, long neglected by us Christians. One is to be at the site of Old Lebanon Church, Surry County, Va., where all party and sectarian names were discarded by our Church ancestors and the name Christian only was adopted.

The other is the late resting-place of Rev. Jas. O'Kelly, near O'Kelly's Chapel, Durham County, N. C. We should have $2,000 with which to erect suitable markers. What will you give?

FIRST CHURCH, NORFOLK, VA.

The above caption is not inappropriate for what I am going to write, since the whole Christian Church in Norfolk has lost one of its greatest personages in the death of Mrs. M. E. Nichols. Seldom does one see in these days of materialism and specialization the name of one who was neither rich nor a specialist of some kind in a conspicuous place in a paper; not even a Church paper. But here is a woman who was neither a capitalist nor a specialist, a woman who lived for seventy-two years in the same community where she was born, when she married, and became a mother of mothers, who is worthy of a place in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN SUN—the Church paper she loved most to read. Her husband died in Christian faith seven months before she died—the 1st day of August last. For sixty years she was a member of the First Christian Church; she was its first and only deaconess, and died holding the following offices in her Church: deaconess, president of the Woman's Missionary Society, president of the Ladies' Aid Society, treasurer of the Ladies' Aid Society, custodian of the Church's fund for the poor, and member of the official board. She was a Christian worker of few words but mighty results. Her life was a benediction to the whole community.

As far as the First Christian Church is concerned, one of the greatest things about Mrs. Nichols is this beautiful fact, that she was so unselfish in all her activities, so much an exponent of the Christ-like way of living, that while she held many very responsible places in our Church, her going will not impair the progress of the Church. The death of some leaders almost kill a Church. They are not the greatest type of leaders, after all. That leader who, like Mrs. Nichols, was able to live in Christ, to make one's life Christ-centric, rather than self-centric, truly has eternal life; and then one's death is not death, for one's works follow one. Her spirit, her counsel, her way of doing things, her kind of living, is still one of the biggest assets of our section of the city, and her successors will not find her achievements a handicap, but a blessing. So, a rare leader has gone to her reward.

JOHN G. TRUITT, Pastor.

MARS.

For a month the eyes of the astronomers have been turned upon Mars. As the brilliant planet swung nearer and nearer the earth, the intensity of popular interest deepened. Would the powerful telescopes disclose any indication of intelligence and life upon that blazing star? If so, would sufficient information be revealed to enable us to judge something of the nature of that life? Are the intelligent creatures on that planet, if such there be, trying to communicate with the earth?

Speculations were rife and the world listened eagerly for any signs from the watchers on the Jungfrau and Mt. Wilson that new knowledge was being obtained or that communication was being established with our near, yet distant, celestial neighbor.

But all in vain. The planet shone on with its cheery, or baleful, light, dependent upon the mental bias of the star-gazer. The only answer to human queries—a twinkle, a gleam, a shaft of brilliance.

Perhaps it is a rebuke to the soaring curiosity of man. Perhaps it is a challenge to solve the problems near at hand before wandering afield in quest of planetary riddles. Perhaps it is a command to clean up our own back-yards before essaying a conquest of the sidereal spaces.

So long as we are unable to cope with illiteracy, grinding poverty, war, industrial feudalism and religious hatreds, we need not lose any sleep because of our inability to discover life on Mars.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

THE MUSIC WORLD.

By Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D.

(At Elon Chautauqua, July 29 to Aug. 2, 1924.)

V. THE USES OF MUSIC.

Music is used in most human tastes and interests. It brightens the dance, marriage, receptions, picnics, moving pictures, and worship. The piano, orchestra, quartet, violin enter into social gatherings, dining-halls, parks, and wherever people mingle in groups for pleasure. Most of such music is secular and entertaining. The range is from the rudest dance to the highest festival.

Schools, conservatories, opera houses, teachers, singers, orchestras, all work for the refinement of the people in tastes, manners, morals and social relations. Concerts, operas, symphonies enter into the progress of society in all that carries human aspirations higher. Musical circles educate and cultivate, and it would be a dull and coarse world without music. Education is incomplete without music. Like all other arts, it cultivates those who can neither sing nor play. Few can paint, but painting refines society. The same is true of all the arts. The necessities of life are produced by the many; the refinements of society by the few. This use of music goes into the home, the school, the concert hall, the park, the parade. It has its inherent, its latent, its responsive chord in human nature. "The man who has no music in himself, and is not moved by concord of sweet sounds, is fit for treason, strategem and spoils." Culture is inconceivable without music. This would be a dull world without winds, pattering rain, dancing hail, bark of dog, or song of bird. It is a part of the happiness and progress of the human race. National music is as characteristic as speech and custom in social life; but "Home, Sweet Home" touches the heart of the world.

National airs excite patriotic feelings and actions. The "Marseillaise" of France; the "God Save the King" of England; the "Star-Spangled Banner" of America, and "May our Lord Forever Reign" of Japan, are more than songs—they are the outburst of love of country and a patriotism for which millions have died. Such patriotism could not be expressed by words alone. The tune arouses feelings that are silent most of the time. True music arouses the best in human souls and in human society. It is a quelling, unifying power. An audience can be brought to unanimity of feeling by a song, a chorus, or an orchestral melody. It quiets the babe, comforts the mourner, soothes the despondent, and keeps the step of the marching host. Armies march to the sound of the fife and drum, and the great crowd stops to listen to the band. A company of Scottish Highlanders had been forced to fight without the usual accompaniment of their native music. In a battle, when everything seemed to go against them and they were discouraged, their chieftain appealed to the commander to have the pipes play. The effect was magic. As soon as the familiar strains of the bagpipes struck their ears, the fighters took new strength, fought a gallant fight and won the battle.

Germany supports more than ten thousand military musicians. The band and the grandstand puts quick and harmonious step into the crowd; the world is in harmony so long as it listens to music or sings.

The great masters have done their best work in composition and rendition on social and sacred themes. The great music house, after all, is the Church of God. Catholic and Protestant alike have taught the Church to praise God with instrument and voice. The Sunday School is more earnest and enthusiastic in song. Here, all learn the value, as well as the use, of music. The piano, the orchestra, the children, all unite in praise. Could the Sunday School live without sacred music? Could man live without air? There was no Sunday School where there was no song. All devotional services are aided by song; and devotions are richest when they "sing with the spirit and the understanding."

The widest use of music is in the worship of God. Dancing was once a mode of worship. "Miriam, with timbrel in hand, led, nad the women joined her with timbrels and dances."—Ex. 15:20 And "David danced when entering the city with the ark, leaping and dancing before the Lord."—2 Sam. 6:16. But dancing has been degraded until it can no longer be used in worship or religious joy. Children leap and shout when they are happy, and Christians do sometimes; but one of the keenest criticisms of parents in the Bible is in these words: "These children dance."

There are more than 68,000 men and women teaching music in the United States, and more than 75,000 who manufacture, sell, and tune musical instruments. Paris pays $500,000 to 700 singers and players and others needed to produce the opera. In London, 4,000 men and women earn a living as music teachers, and 11,000 in Great Britain. Music undoubtedly aided primitive peoples in the worship of their deities before man had any definite ideas of musical composition. What would the Bible be without a hymn book? What would worship be without song? The millions upon millions of worshippers in the world today worship God in song. If the whole Church could assemble in one place and sing, "All Hail, the Power of Jesus' Name," it would devour the noise of war. What would an evangelistic meeting be without song? Music is the soul of revival, the inspiration of prayer, the fire of praise. How many sinners are converted without song? It goes deeper than words. The tune reaches the heart. The chorus moves the congregation. The psalms live in the middle of the book. A revival of music means a revival of religion, and the songs of Zion will win the world to Christ. Praise is the most powerful weapon in the world; and worship would be dumb without song. All can sing in spirit and with the understanding. The ears that hear, help the voice that sings. Praise seems to be the principal thing in heaven. "And I heard, as it were, the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, Alleluia; for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth."—19:6. David says, under inspiration, "Praise waiteth for Thee, O God, in Zion."—65:1; and again, "Make a joyful noise unto God, all ye lands; sing forth the honor of His name; make His praise glorious."

Music interprets God's words to our hearts, and our hearts to God. He knows us best, and we know Him best, in song. The man who threatened to play down the great bridge with his violin was simply saying that the power of music is beyond control.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE FIRST BIBLE LESSON ON TEMPTATION AND DISOBEDIENCE.

The story of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden is one of the most interesting stories in Hebrew literature. It is interesting not only because of its graphic portrayal of characters and incidents, but especially because it is so true to life. It is a striking presentation of human temptation and disobedience. As to whether or not there were other people living at the time of Adam and Eve, we are not concerned. The Bible does not pretend to be a complete history of the human race. Nor does the Bible writers attempt to impart scientific instruction in telling the beginning of creation—their sole object is to give an intelligible account of God's relation to the world and to man.

Who were Adam and Eve? Were they perfect beings before the temptation and the disobedience? Were they real persons? As to whether they were perfect beings before the temptation and disobedience, people differ in their opinion. That Adam and Eve were real persons, seems verified in the fact that the world is still full of "Adams" and "Eves."

There are two philosophies of life. The one says that the human race started on a very high level, the level of human perfection, and because of the sin of one man and woman, the whole human family was damned, and has been going from bad to worse ever since. This philosophy teaches that Adam and Eve were perfect until they sinned, and that they were more righteous before they sinned than anybody, except Christ, has been since. It teaches, in other words, that the world has been going backward ever since Adam and Eve transgressed God's law, and that what humanity is hoping for is that God will some time reinstate man into the exalted position of the perfection that Adam and Eve enjoyed.

The other philosophy of life is that the human family started very low in moral and spiritual appreciations, and has been slowly climbing higher; that, by and large, humanity is climbing, advancing, that it is moving in an upward trend toward God. This philosophy of life teaches that Adam and Eve, representing the first members of the human family, were perfect so far as innocence was concerned, until they fell in temptation—innocent, just as a little babe is innocent. But there is no righteousness in a baby's life. Righteousness is the quality of character that is attained only by overcoming temptation. Perfection is more than innocence.

Adam and Eve were as perfect as a little eighteen months' old baby, because they were as innocent as he, until they disobeyed God. But I would hate to think that there is a boy or girl in your Church who has arrived at the age of moral accountability who is not more righteous than Adam and Eve ever were. Is not the truth of the matter this: Adam and Eve, representing the first man and woman of the human family, lived in the childhood experiences of the race. They lived the experiences of children during those days of innocence. When they found themselves possessed with a moral consciousness—able to know God's demands, having attained the stage of accountability, and deliberately ignored the "thou shalt not" of their conscience—they passed that moment from innocence to guilt. What they had done perhaps ofttimes before, unconscious of the fact that doing so was a transgression of God's law, that same thing became a sin the moment they became able to discern between right and wrong. The moment they became conscious that such and such was against God's holy law. Paradoxical as it may sound, yet, nevertheless, it is true that the temptation itself marked a stage of advancement in the moral development of Adam and Eve, but their sin was the signal of a backward step. And more than that, it showed the real condition of their past life. In other words, their sin gave evidence to a moral weakness, an unwillingness to do what they knew to be right. Moral courage is measured by a man's resistance against temptation. Righteousness is the fruit of innocence maintained in the face of temptation. The opportunity was given them to rise from innocence to righteousness, but they chose to fall victims of sin. Sin is innocence surrendered to temptation. The test of a man's character is not alone what he does not do that is wrong. It is what a man does that is right as compared to his opportunity to do what is wrong. The highest test of character, however, is what a man will do when he absolutely knows that nobody will find it out.

Eve's temptation was the outcome of her listening to the tempter's subtle words. The tempter beguiled her with the assurance, "Thou shalt not surely die, for God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be God, knowing good and evil." She learned the possibility of knowing both sides of life—of knowing the good and the evil.

The writer of Genesis pictures the tempter as being a snake. No one, I suppose, thinks that it was an actual serpent or snake that tempted Eve, and that the whole tribe of serpents crawls as a punishment of an offense committed by one of their number, or that the whole iniquity and sorrow of the world are due to an actual serpent. Plainly this is figurative language. The greatest truths are most easily expressed in figurative language. Not that the tempter was a literal serpent, but that the temptation comes like a serpent —like the serpent of the field, that fascinates its victims by its glittering eye, stealing upon them by its noiseless, low and unseen approach, capable of crushing its victim with every part of its sinuous length. Temptation, like the serpent, lies apparently dead for months together, but when roused it can summon strength even to crush its strongest victim. Unseen temptation lies by our path and flashes its poison into our souls before we scarcely know it. As the serpent finds its way everywhere—over fence, over rocks, into every corner and recess, so it is impossible to keep temptation out of life. It appears where least we expect it and when we think ourselves the most secure.

Eve fell out of curiosity to learn why that particular tree of the garden was forbidden. This is true of every life. Temptation succeeds by first exciting our curiosity. The boy and girl are anxious to learn what certain forbidden practices offer. That is the secret of the reason why so many young men insist on sowing their wild oats. They are curious to know the experiences involved in the sowing, but do not take time to consider the lamentation of the reaping. The desire to satisfy the curiosity as to what the different sins offer is the secret of every downfall. No drunkard ever intended to become a drunkard when he first placed the forbidden glass to his lips. No man or woman who is living a degraded life today expected to fall so low when they first started on the downward course of sin.

The opportunity of finding enjoyment and pleasure, even though it was forbidden, lured Eve away.

There are numerous young Eves and young Adams today who would rather follow pleasure's siren call than the call of duty. They would rather enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season than to consider what contribution of service they might render the world. The world has many men today who daily are made to mourn because they failed to take advantage of their opportunity when young, and chose to reap pleasure for a season rather than make preparation for a life. The boys and girls so often think they know more about what they ought to do than father and mother do. They choose to do as they please, regardless of the opportunities for self-realization that the parents offer them; and after it is too late they can only say, "Father and mother knew best, after all."

Eve provoked the temptation by not turning a deaf ear to the tempter. It is always dangerous to parley with temptation. Questions of doubt as to the rightness or wrongness always argue strongly for the wrong. Things that are right and wholesome never set one to doubting.

We can get a glimpse of how human Eve was in the fact that, having fallen into the temptation, she tried to shift the blame upon the serpent for beguiling her. She showed a lack of appreciation of individual responsibility. The same lack is found in so many men and women even in this day and age. It is so easy for some people to lay the blame for their sins at some one's else door.

Having yielded to temptation, Eve also led Adam into the same sin.

Instead of resisting the temptation herself and helping him to resist, she yielded and caused him to yield also.

Our power of personal influence is a tremendous force for good or for bad in the lives of our companions and associates. There is no neutral ground in our social relations. We are either helping or hindering others in their effort to live in harmony with God's laws. We are either making it easier or harder for men and women to be Christians. "No man liveth to himself alone," whether he lives in sin or in holiness. The man who is guilty of leading others into sin will have a hard account to settle at the judgment bar of God. The man who has been instrumental in God's hands of leading others in the way of truth, holiness and love, will receive God's own reward.

After Adam and Eve had fallen into sin, they heard the voice of God walking in the garden, asking, "Where art thou?" They had disobeyed God, but still He was interested in them. No person falls so low in sin, but that he can hear the voice of God calling, "Where art thou?" if he will but listen. When you are about your work in the home, in the store, or wherever your work may be, if some sin has come unto your life, you can't evade the voice of God, "Where art thou?" God's patience is never exhausted in this search after the sinner, or in His search after the Christian who has gone astray.

Adam and Eve felt guilty, and attempted to hide from God. Sin always drives men from God. It drives them away from His Church. You never knew a man or a woman who was living a consistent Christian life to go back on the Church. "They that do evil will not come to the light, lest their deeds be made manifest." Adam and Eve sinned against God, but He followed after them and found them. His love is always seeking to bring back those whom sin has driven away. God wants to forgive. He wants to cover up the guilt if men will come out of their hiding and surrender to Him.

The world was a Garden of Eden to each of us, as it was to Adam and Eve, until we took of some forbidden tree of experience, until we disobeyed God. Sin drove us out of the garden of innocence, the same as it did Adam and Eve. You will remember how dark the world seemed to you the first time you willfully disobeyed God. The time you took His name in vain; the time you broke one of His commandments. You know how you could hardly look any one in the face. You tried to hide your soul. Then the struggle in your life began. Every sin weakens a man in the struggle against other temptations. The world is a Garden of Eden or a wilderness of gloom to us, just as we make it. In Adam we all die—that is, by following Adam's example in yielding to temptation, we die morally and spiritually; but in Christ we are all made alive: that is, by following Christ's example, we are made to know the joy and meaning of life as a gift of God. Each man must choose for himself death or life. Moral and spiritual death, of which the physical death is but a symbol, is sure to come to the person who, with Adam and Eve, yields to temptation. Moral and spiritual life, which alone explains the purpose of existence, and which is eternal, is the heritage of those who, with Christ, resist temptation.

THE ACHIEVEMENT OF AGE.

In our thinking we generally divide the span of man's life into three ages, rather than the classic seven ages. For us, life is thought of as comprising youth, manhood, and old age. Each period has its individual characteristics. Youth is the period of development, enthusiasm, activity, and vision. Manhood is the period of maturity, when mental, physical, and social powers are at the height of their strength and usefulness. Old age is the period of slowing up of all the faculties, and of a gradual disintegration.

Is such an appraisement of life true? It can be true only when life is viewed in the light of the purely physical. It is utterly impossible for me to believe that God sees life from such a viewpoint, or that God has intended any such order. There are no backward turns in God's plan. There are no downward scales in God's universe. God is ever leading onward and upward. I believe in a divine plan that has something richer, sweeter and nobler in store for us every step of the way. What, then, is God's plan for this three-aged life of man. Youth is the time when the physical powers are running strongest, and exercising their greatest influence. Manhood is the period when the intellectual powers have forged to the front. A man of maturity relies not on his physical strength, but upon his intellectual powers, to carry him through. And what of old age? If the divine triad is to be completed, then old age is the period when the spiritual gains the ascendancy. It is the time when the spiritual faculties of man that have been, or should have been, blossoming in the two earlier periods, produce their perfect fruit.

Some day, perhaps, we will get a Christian view of old age. At present, our thought of old age does not even measure up to that of the old pagan philosophers. I know a lot of good Christian women (and men, too) who, when you mention the subject of age, either hurriedly change the subject or else their faces take on an expression of mournful misery, or they try to assure what will pass for meek resignation to a horrible fate. They act as if God were visiting some terrible judgment upon them, or as if He has very carelessly permitted an awful catastrophe to creep upon them. Some are even resorting to heroic measures, and endeavoring to cover up the changes that time has wrought in their physical appearance. Their efforts would be amusing if the results were not so tragic. You even hear men and women who have been of large service in the kingdom talking as if all their usefulness were passed because they are no longer as young as they once were.

What does it matter if your body is growing old, if your spirit is growing stronger with each passing year? What does it matter if your feet will no longer carry you to the sanctuary, when upon the wings of believing prayer you can soar up to the throne of God, and of the Lamb. What does it matter if your physical vision is growing dim, and you are no longer able to revel in the beauties of this natural world, if you have learned to see with the eye of faith the beauty of Him who is altogether lovely? What does it matter if the ear no longer catches the delicate shadings of sound, if the inner ear is attuned to catch the faintest whispering of the still small voice? Who has not seen soul-beauty that would rival that of the angels, shining upon faces that were as wrinkled as frost-bitten persimmons, and has not come away feeling that he had seen the most indescribable beauty of earth. And all the old folks that you have ever known who were worth knowing and loving were folks like that. The leaves always begin to lose their beauty when the fruit begins to ripen. Let us rejoice in facing an age when the physical and intellectual powers shall be slowed up, if it means that the Spirit shall bear its perfect fruit of love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, and temperance. These, in their perfection, are the achievement of age.

It is the privilege of every Christian to look, strive, and pray for the day when these fruits of the Spirit shall ripen into the perfection of spiritual development. If the minister has come to old age without attaining this crowning glory of his ministry, then God pity him! And if our Church is so blinded by the physical and the intellectual as not to appreciate, and avail themselves of these real spiritual powers of her aged ministers, there is but one path for her to tread, and that is the path of repentance.

"NATION PUTS ON WAR PAINT."

After all, the militarists, with all their persistence, did not fool the people. They had told us that Mobilization, or National Defense, Day was in no manner a war movement, but a peace movement. But on September 13th, when the morning dailies greeted us, the big headlines were "Nation Puts on War Paint," "Demonstrates Power," "Nation's Metropolis Plays War and Tests its Defensive Power." Let us presume for the sake of charity that the War Department does want peace, but the method pursued, to say the least of it, seems to be a very awkward gesture in that direction. We have enough of war to last us for all time to come. We cannot see that it will help any to keep war terms before us, much less war units, fighting forces, war paint, and such like. What the United States needs today is a mobilization for peace and to take steps to defend itself against all war and all signs and aspects of war, and all methods and measures that look like war. To say that preparedness prevents war is to go in the face of indisputable facts, and also in face of the awful tragedy to which Germany can give sad attest.

However, the day is past, and the great body of the American citizens, so far as we have been able to learn, passed the day in their peaceful and useful pursuits, giving not the slightest heed or attention to Mobilization Day. The militarists had their glory, and we trust that their efforts will unite with the efforts of the pacifists in helping to bring a permanent peace to the world. But the folly of Mobilization Day was, and is, we think, deplorable, and we cannot bring ourselves to believe the people of this nation ever care to see this folly repeated.

SACRIFICIAL GIVING.

"He that giveth, let him do it with simplicity."—Rom. 12:8.

"Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity, for God loveth a cheerful giver."—2 Cor. 9.

Sacrificial giving usually comes from those who have little of this world's goods. It is the story of the noble giving of "the Churches of Macedonia" repeated, "How that in a great trial of affliction, the abundance of their joy and their deep poverty abounded unto the riches of their liberality" (2 Cor. 8:1-2). The Southern Baptist gives this interesting and touching story: "An Italian widow, of Washington, who made $900 last year doing laundry work for congressmen, paid $600 of it into the treasury of the Baptist Church of that city of which she is a member. She is greatly interested in the salvation of her people." This widow did not give "all her living," as did the "certain poor widow" who cast the two mites into the treasury of the Lord (Mark 12:42), but she gave the greater portion of her living—not the tenth (which, alas, only a small fraction of God's people give), but two-thirds of her income. May such simplicity and liberality as exemplified by this widow incite others, whether rich or poor, to "go and do likewise."—Selected.

When James Gordon Bennet sent Henry M. Stanley to search for Livingstone, he said: "Draw on me for a thousand pounds today to provide your equipment; and when that is exhausted, draw on me for another thousand; and when that is done, draw another thousand; and when that is done, draw another—but find Livingstone." God asks us to glorify Him by a life devoted to Him every day, and He authorizes us to draw on Him for the wisdom, grace and strength needed to enable us to reach His end; when one day's supply is exhausted, we are to draw another, and then another, and then another, until the complement of our days is filled up.

IDEALS OF EDUCATION.

Generally speaking, there are four theories of education claiming the world's attention. These ideals are not rigidly exclusive, and any one of them naturally and necessarily embraces points emphasized by the other three, but each one stands out clearly and distinctly from the others and has its advocates and parties in the educational world.

The first theory is that the aim of education should be discipline. The distinctive aim of all education should be to train and discipline the mind. This ideal is the one held by the great English schools, such as Eton, Rugby, Winchester and Harrow, and by the great English universities such as Oxford and Cambridge. The curriculum is shaped with this end in view. The boys are put upon Latin, Greek and mathematics at an early age, and practically every student, regardless of what he is going to do after graduation, is held to the same course. Especial stress is put upon methods that call for the severest disciplining of the mind. For instance, every boy spends years in translating Latin verse into English blank verse, and in turning English into Latin. When the curriculum branches out into philosophy or the arts, the whole emphasis is put upon training the mind to think logically and clearly. The results of this theory of education, in spite of the tremendous assaults against it from Herbert Spencer's time until today, have commended themselves to the at least serious respect of all people. Out of these English schools and colleges have come the greatest statesmen of the last hundred years, the great bishops, lawyers, educators, and editors, and the men who, in India and other colonial dependencies, have governed with a most remarkable degree of success. Professional men in England do not put in a third of the time in direct preparation for the profession that Americans do. There are, for instance, nowhere near so many divinity schools or law schools in England as there are in America. The theory is that if you have a trained, disciplined mind, it is capable of doing anything. We have heard it said that even the great offices, banks, factories, engineering works, ship-building concerns in England prefer to take men trained at Oxford or Cambridge, to men who have grown up in their own establishments or those trained in technical or commercial schools. The highly trained mind can grasp specialties of which it has known little, in one-fourth the time that the untrained mind can, although the untrained mind may have much more intimate knowledge of the special thing; and although the remark of the head of a great brass foundry at Sheffield to the effect that he would rather take a boy from Oxford reared on Latin and Greek than a boy from the technical school reader on mechanics, should be taken with a grain of salt, it does represent a very general feeling of a great body of English opinion. The advocates of this theory of education also point with great pride to the fact that Englishmen can write. The editorials of many of the great British papers approach often remarkably close to literature. While this ability to write, this sense of style, is probably partly due to tradition, to the hearing of perfect English at home, and to the reading of fine English from childhood, there is no doubt that the almost inevitable result of the emphasis put upon translation in all the English schools is superior style, a sense of the value of words, which is a great part of style, and order, which is the opposite of slovenliness.

The second ideal of education is culture. The educated man is the cultured man, the gentleman, using that word in the sense in which it is used in literature—the well-bred, widely read man, with poise and good judgment, and broad outlook upon both life and letters.—in Matthew Arnold's famous words, the man who knows the best that has ever been said and done. It is this ideal of education that our older colleges—Yale, Harvard, Amherst, Williams, Dartmouth, Brown, Columbia and Princeton—emphasized for many years and which some of them still continue to emphasize in spite of the inroad the vocational ideal has made. In these colleges, Latin and Greek were studied until recently as at Oxford and Cambridge, but with a somewhat different emphasis. Discipline of the mind was there, but the great thing was to give the student knowledge of the two great ancient literatures of the world. There was also much philosophy and history, and in more recent years, introduction to the great literature in our own tongue. There are still many who are clinging to this cultural ideal, although they are having a hard fight against the commercialism of the day and the tendency of these once distinctively cultural colleges to yield to the clamor of an age which somewhat sneers at culture and looks upon a gentleman as out of date and measures success purely in terms of income or to use vulgar parlance "in getting there." But the gentleman—the man of culture—has his own secret sense of joy and of real mastery, and there are those who believe in culture, and if all our colleges desert this ideal and simply become schools of finance and engineering, will seek it in the quiet of their own libraries. We believe a reaction will come in time, and some of our colleges again return to the old cultural ideal and aim at turning out truly educated men—men who will not have to ask "Who was Shelley, anyhow?" as we heard the graduate of one of our modern colleges ask one night when Shelley was quoted. There are many who still would hold, with Matthew Arnold in his reply to Herbert Spencer, that there was no harm in knowing that what produced the candle-flame was carbon and oxygen in combustion, but that he would much rather his boy should be able to read Hamlet by the flame, and understand it. (The protest by one of the classes of Amherst College against its deserting its old cultural ideal and becoming a university with emphasis on practical science and allied subjects is an interesting instance of the remnant still left in the country, who believe that the end of education is a high type of manhood, cultured gentlemen.)

The third ideal, and one which just at present has the great supremacy in America, is the vocational. The protagonists of this ideal believe that education should direct all its energies to training a man to do one thing, and that its ultimate end is success in that one thing, and in plain English, the gaining of a livelihood. The group which emphasizes this ideal has got everything pretty much its way just at present. They are turning our high schools into preparatory schools for stenography rather than for college. They are turning our colleges into schools of business, or journalism, or mechanical, mining and electrical engineering. They are not satisfied to have our boys take a cultural course in college before entering the divinity, law and medical schools; they are insisting that the college incorporate the work of the professional school in junior or senior year of its own course. By and by, they will insist that the men who are to be clergymen, lawyers, physicians and teachers put all their years of school and college upon the direct training for their profession. More and more, they are getting the cultural course in the college supplanted by vocational courses. The graduates of today are great successes, but the book-stores are going out of business.

The most recent educational ideal is what might be called the creative. The exponents of this ideal are still somewhat vague in their definitions, but it is possible to see what they are after, and it is very interesting. The aim of education, according to them, should be to discover what particular talent or aptitude the boy has, and then set him to work along those lines that he may develop this talent to the highest point. The great criticism they have of the older education is that the child is not interested in his task. It is drudgery. Every child is interested in doing something. Discover what his bent or interest is, then let him educate himself along these lines by research and original work. Perhaps the most thorough experiment in this ideal is the Lincoln School in New York. This school does not neglect the other aspects of education, but the chief aim of the score of exceptionally talented teachers is to study each boy individually, find what his genius, talent, bent, aptitude or taste may be, and get him interested in educating himself along these lines. Here is a concrete illustration of how this method works. A boy of thirteen, whom we know, was in one of the best boys' schools in the country. He betrayed no interest in any of his work, and had no high marks. He was put in the Lincoln School. The teachers found that he was more interested in history than anything, although not greatly interested in that. They suggested to him that he write a pageant or drama covering the period of English history which he was studying. He started in on it, and in a week was so consumed with his task that his parents had a real problem in getting him to bed at night. What is more to the point, this boy who had never done anything well, turned out a rather remarkable piece of work, one that shows considerable promise in writing. This started him to writing poems, too, on other subjects. At the same time, he began to show an interest in all his school work. We are told by the Lincoln School officers that this is the common, rather than the exceptional, outcome of their methods. The whole experiment is being watched with great interest. The first criticism of this ideal that will occur to everybody is that life is made up, to a large extent, of tasks one does not like to do. If one is exercised only in the congenial tasks, what training is he getting to do the hard, distasteful tasks life will surely offer? The authorities will answer that when the boy finds himself through the thing he is interested in, the mind has so been trained and strengthened in that task, such habits of hard work have been formed, that he comes to the hard task with the assurance of ability to do anything. Furthermore, they will say that the hard, disciplinary work is not neglected in the curriculum. "But the first aim of education is to help the boy to find himself, and then setting him to creating along those lines."

We have attempted no full estimate here or comparison of these ideals and theories. We have merely tried to indicate what they are. The final, ideal theory will no doubt comprehend all of these ideals in its methods.—Frederick Lynch, in Christian Work.

THE MEETING AT MT. CARMEL.

Surely we did not accomplish all that we would like to have done, but we feel that this is just the beginning of a continued work that will continue to grow, to the glory of God and the salvation of man. We truly had a great meeting. The pastor did the preaching, and the people worked and prayed; in fact, they stood by the work with their presence, and gave their co-operation. The members of the Church, with a few exceptions, unless they were sick or providentially hindered, were there—not Thursday and Friday, but the first day and the last day. Many of them came Monday afternoon, and they were there Friday night when the meeting closed.

Not only members of Mt. Carmel, but other Churches; not only Christians, but Baptists and others as well were with us. We very much appreciated the way the Baptist people stood by the work with their voices, in the singing and the praying. We had good singing. Sister Johnson, our organist, stood by the work from first to last, and our own people were there to help in the singing, and not only our people, but the community. Many times during the meeting there were people in the choir from every choir in the community, and there was a mighty praise going up to God.

The people were there; we had a large congregation to begin with on Sunday night. And on Monday afternoon—that day in the revival when the people usually remain by the stuff—old members of the Church stated that there was the largest crowd that they had ever seen on Monday afternoon in the history of the Church.

After the first two or three services, the Church was packed from the pulpit to the door, and many on the outside a part of the time. The people were reverent; if any came for sport, they soon found it was no place to sport, but to worship.

We organized two prayer groups Monday, and they were very largely attended and a great benefit to the meeting. Bro. Johnson, father of Rev. I. W. Johnson, led the sisters in their efforts, and the pastor helped the men. I would not know how to give special credit to any one, but will say the superintendent of the Sunday School was there, the teachers were there, the deacons of the Church were there, and, as I said before, with a few exceptions, the members were there.

People attended, prayed, sang, and did personal work. The results, like all revivals, cannot be estimated, and time only will tell the results.

It is not known just how many new professions there were; there were thirty seven joined the Church, and some of these were members of some Church, but the most of them new professions. Many backsliders were reclaimed, and hundreds of people came to seek a higher state of Christian living. Now, for anything that might have been accomplished for good, we give God the praise, the honor, and the glory, because we are sure that man can never bring about a revival by himself. But we are confident that God is desiring to use man to glorify His name, and will use man when he will let God have His way. And we are confident that God is ready, waiting and willing to send a revival when we are willing to meet the conditions.

Thanks to all the people that helped, and praise God for any good that was accomplished.

A CALL TO MISSIONARY SOCIETIES.

The presidents of all Conference Woman's Mission Boards throughout the Southern Christian Convention are most earnestly requested and urged to do everything possible to raise their full quota of the Convention apportionments for this year. Never before in the history of our Woman's Boards have the needs been more urgent than at this time. Dr. J. O. Atkinson, secretary and treasurer of the General Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention, is called upon just now to raise $10,000 by January 1, 1925.

Any of our women who have made Men and Millions pledges may aid wonderfully by paying their pledge, in addition to their missionary society pledge. Let us not fall behind in our finances at this critical time.

MISSIONS

Rev. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

MEN AND MILLIONS.

Many Sun readers may be tired of the name, but none who know the facts are tired of the results achieved by Men and Millions. Those who say or think or imagine that the movement has not more than justified all the labor and expense put upon it are certainly not acquainted with the achievements of the movement. Admit that it has not accomplished thus far in every detail all that had been desired, it has, at any rate, quickened activity in every branch and enterprise of the Church. In the light of its achievements, it seems to have been a providential movement to the greatest possible extent.

How The Christian Sun would have survived without it, no one can tell. It came to the rescue at a time when there was no other available hand in sight to help. It has added very materially to the income of our superannuated fund, so that all our aged and infirm ministers and the widows of deceased ministers receive twice every year an expression of gratitude of our Church through a money contribution to their support.

The colleges have received help, our Sunday Schools have been assisted, our Orphanage has been benefitted, our missionary work in all lines has been increased, and, in fact, all the interests and enterprises of the Church have been the beneficiaries, while so far as we know, none have been the losers.

Many of the faithful are paying their pledges promptly and accurately. These are the beneficiaries and the backbone of the Church in a time of need. If those who opposed the movement or remained out of it have united or co-operated in any sort of team-work for Christian service, by enlarging the Church and building up the enterprises and institutions of the Church, we have not heard of it.

There are many who will yet pay their pledges. They are loyal, faithful and true. They only need time and opportunity. The movement is not finished, nor has it spent its force. It has great achievements yet ahead. Every dollar paid in on pledges will aid materially in carrying forward all that our dear Church stands for and is undertaking to do. Let no one despair, but let every one who is willing to sacrifice in the Master's name, put forth an effort to pay his or her pledge that may yet remain unpaid. There never was a holier movement initiated amongst us, and none with higher purposes and aims than that of Men and Millions. God bless the unnumbered faithful ones who are quietly, but sacrificially, loyally meeting their obligations.

N. C. WOMAN'S MISSIONARY CONVENTION.

The twelfth annual session of the Woman's Missionary Convention of the North Carolina Conference will be held Friday, October 31st, with the Reidsville Christian Church, Reidsville, N. C. All societies are urged to have at least two delegates, and more if possible, at this meeting. Churches having no missionary society are requested to make a special effort to have representatives at this meeting also. In so doing, some woman may catch a vision of the splendid work being carried on by our women and be inspired to organize a society in her Church. Let's make Friday, October 31st, a great day in our work—every society represented at this meeting, every society going over the top in their objectives for the year's work. Mrs. L. L. Vaughan.

THE TENT OF MEETING.*

By Howard W. Pope.

When Moses wished to talk with God
And meet Him face to face,
He chose the path all saints have trod,
And sought God's meeting-place.
And when he reached that holy place,
All watched the fleecy cloud
In which God veiled His form and face,
But spake to him aloud.

When Moses went into the tent,
The pillar did descend
To guard the door where Moses went—
A listening ear to lend.
Thus Moses spake unto the Lord
And made his troubles known,
And God did answer, word by word,
Till they were clearly shown.

God's hungry heart doth still delight
To talk, as friend to friend,
To all who come by day or night,
Whom His dear Son may send.
Then, let us have a meeting-place
Where daily we shall go
To speak with Jesus, face to face,
And tell Him all our woe.

And talk with Him, as man to man,
Of children, business, friend;
Of every hope, and wish, and plan,
Until our life shall end.
And we shall find no hour so sweet,
And no such precious place,
As when, before the mercy seat,
We meet Christ face to face.

*Exodus 33:7. Moses called it the tent of meeting. And every one that sought Jehovah went out unto the tent of meeting.

A CHRISTIAN EDUCATION PILGRIMAGE.

XII. SWITZERLAND.

Passing from Belgium to Switzerland was passing from the land of war to the land of peace. Although Switzerland was surrounded on every side by warring nations (from 1914-1918) and bordered on Germany, Belgium, Italy and France, yet she remained loyal to the cause of peace for the four strenuous years of the World War.

Beautiful and historic Zurich was our first stop, and it is no exaggeration to say that this city rivals any in Europe as a delight to the eye and a satisfaction to the senses. Flowers, beautiful flowers everywhere! trees, wonderful linden trees in bloom perfume the wide and winding streets; terrace upon terrace up the mountain-side gives glorious views of mansion and cathedral and homes white in cleanliness and red-tile roofs to contrast with the green of the foliage and the wealth of color and shape scattered in gardens everywhere. The great hotel is situated on the terraces a thousand feet above the level of the main street, and our drive up and down was interesting beyond description. The sight from this point ranges for miles over hills and valleys and lakes, changing color with the sun and the shifting light and shadow of the clouds.

Half-way up on the terraces, we visited the great Oberstrausse Protestant Church, with its background of mountain and its foreground of the city at our feet.

But two things especially drew us to Zurich—Zwingli and the Protestant Cathedral, where he was first a Roman Catholic priest and afterward a prophet and leader of the Reformation, and the old school where Pestalozzi began his educational experiment in teaching children and gave us the foundation of our present elementary education. Today, according to the law of the land, it is required that a picture or statue of Pestalozzi and the two children (which is a copy of the great statue in the public gardens of Zurich) shall be in every school-house in Switzerland. I should like to give here an outline of our study and the lectures of Dr. Athearn in Zurich on Zwingli and Pestalozzi, but I am not able to sufficiently condense it in any way to do it justice.

But we must not leave Zurich with its combination of grandeur and tidiness without telling about its spotless street cars of blue and white, as clear and as attractive as a Dutch housewife's tiled kitchen. Imagine a pure white street car, trimmed with delft blue with great double width polished French plate-glass windows, and all looking as clean as the shiny china plate you are to eat from at the hotel, and then to find that the car fare is less than 2 cents in American money. One feels like taking off his shoes as he enters, as they do in the spotless homes of Holland.

But we art now pressing on to Lake Lucern for the morrow, and then to Interlaken and the heart of the Alps.

I will always remember Lake Lucern, for I had a real bath there, which is an experience in Europe. Wash bowls and pitchers are the rule in the good hotels in England and on the continent. And the good Englishman carries his sponge with him. Of course, it is possible to get a bath, or a "tub," as they call it, in any good hotel if you order it the day before and wait patiently for the maid to call you when "your bawth" is ready, Sir," and then pay extra for the service and tip the maid beside. But in Lucern I defied the hotel and all its servants, and had a real swim in old Lake Lucern's blue in sight of the snow-capped Alps. I arose from the tang of the sea with more life in my veins and new zest for the fray.

I was surprised and delighted at Interlaken, the "heart of the Alps," to meet Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Carroll, of our Burlington, N. C., Christian Church. We were mutually and agreeably surprised, for we had parted only about three months before at the Southern Christian Convention at Norfolk, Va., and with neither knowing that the other was bound for here. It was a breath from home, and all too short a pleasure, as our ways parted.

A wondrously constructed "tally-ho and four" transported us from our station to the Eden Hotel, and we were greeted and cheered along the streets by the natives and travelers. We found that this tally-ho was not generally used, but was brought out for us because the proprietor of the Eden had a special friend in our party who had been recently married. At any rate, we greatly enjoyed it. I must here record that there is a garden, with walks and statues and flowers and trees, in connection with our Eden, and that there was also a worthy matron named Eve in our party, and I had the delightful and unique experience of walking with Eve "in the 'Garden of Eden' in the cool of the day." But, lest that real Eve of mine back home should misunderstand, I must hasten to add that the walk was only about a hundred feet and only a minute long, that I might make this record to lighten my story.

On every side of Interlaken are the Alps, but towering, snow-capped above them all, is mighty Jungfrau with her veil of clouds which she only occasionally lifts to show the grandeur and beauty of her form and to permit a far look beyond into the lands of earth and sea and sky. We were wondrously fortunate in having a perfect day for our climb and in having the heights of Jungfrau clear from her veil of clouds for a full half-hour. Many tourists had waited days and weeks for such a sight, but Jungfrau (meaning "The Virgin") was kind to our Christian pilgrimage, and immediately lifted her veil on our arrival at the mountain hotel at Sheidegg.

But the story of the Alps is a story by itself, and I mean to tell it in future numbers of the Sunday School Herald, and hope to remember in it, its peaks and glaciers, and its majesty and glory—something of Him who lived and loved us before "the mountains were brought forth or ever there was formed the earth and the world."

And now, after our descent and after our meeting with Dr. Athearn and the pastor of the old English Church at Interlaken, we press on to historic Geneva, the city which, more than any other, can claim to be "the capital city of the world," and as I see I am coming to the limits of my space, I must attempt the impossible, and compress a thousand years into a paragraph.

Here is the city where, under the leadership of John Calvin and the opposition of Voltaire, there was tried out to a finish the union of Church and State with the Church supreme. Here it was that intellect in Voltaire clashed with emotion and art in Rosseau. Here it is that the great international labor experiment is being centered, and here is the Palace of the Nations and the home of the League of Nations.

I cannot tell of our sight-seeing in this "city by the turquois lake," or of beautiful Mt. Blanc, always white with snow on the sky-line, or of Dr. Athearn's climax of lectures on Calvin and Luther and Christian education; but I may light up, with this closing paragraph, with two incidents which were at least inspirational to me.

One was our visit to St. Peter's Church, and standing there in Calvin's pulpit and in the Hall of the Maccabees with Dr. Athearn. Around us everywhere was history which shall never die. We walked together the pathway and narrow stone stairs which Calvin walked in meditation from his college of a thousand preachers in training, to his pulpit in old St. Peter's, where his messages shook the nation and has echoed and re-echoed in the history of the world. It was a sight and an experience which Dr. Athearn says he never will forget, and which I am sure I could not if I would.

The other incident at Geneva happened on Sunday night. We had been to a Swiss open-air religious service, where we had heard them sing, "Bring Them in from the Paths of Sin," in French, and an impassioned religious appeal in the same language. I was walking with Miss Gertrude, Dr. Athearn's daughter, along Woodrow Wilson Avenue and passing around to the rear of the Palace of Nations, which we had not entered, as it was closed until the next day, and as we were to leave in the morning, we would miss it. We saw a light and a man through the open doors, and boldly mounted the wide stone stairs, passing between two of the largest dogs I ever saw—one a Belgian police dog, and the other a great Swiss St. Bernard. But both (especially the St. Bernard) made friends with Miss Gertrude, and I made friends with the caretaker, who took us two on a privately conducted tour of the Palace and into rooms which the ordinary tourist does not see. But all this is another story, too, for young people and people with young hearts, and the story of the Palace of the Nations—the dream of our great war President—will be told some day in our Sunday School Herald, for we lack space here and must hurry on to France with a new love for Switzerland and the Swiss in our hearts.

OUR PLEDGES
Men and Millions Sacred, Solemn and Binding.

These obligations were made through the Church to the Kingdom of God and to all that pertains to building up that Kingdom in the world, so far as our Christian Church is concerned. As Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., has so pertinently pointed out: "A Christian can no more drop his pledges than he can drop his prayers or his Church membership. Misfortune may make it impossible to meet financial obligations--'When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both' (Luke 7:42)--but not till 'they had nothing to pay.' Obligations to God are as binding as obligations to men, and God will help those who try to keep their pledges."

Many are making great sacrifices to meet these obligations and pay these pledges. Is your Church on this list? If not, let's do our best to get it there. If there, let's get it in first place.

MONDAY.

THE SOUL OF MAN.

(Read Psa. 8.)

Christian people, though in many respects like others, live and move in a different world. Others live in spiritual apathy, indifferences and spiritual insensibility and are dead to what is most vitally significant. Christians look beyond into the future. Riches and power and glory, beautiful as they may be, are to them perishable and passing, and unworthy of more than secondary, if not to say momentary, consideration. These things come and are often flaunted in their faces to tempt them as they come to tempt others; but in their case without success. A Christian's thoughts are too much taken up with more important matters. They refuse to heed such distractions. Their thoughts are with eternal things—the supreme delights. Their eyes are riveted on celestial joys, and the things of earthly and passing nature have no appeal.

In a word, a Christian lives and moves among spiritual realities and appraises everything at its first value, and only one is peerless and without a rival—the soul.

Prayer.—Our Father, we pray Thee to endow us with wisdom from on high, that as we enter upon this week's tasks we may discern between the important and the unimportant, the real and unreal, the truth and the false, the good and the bad, and build our souls up in His likeness. In His name we ask it. Amen.

TUESDAY.

A SERMONETTE.

A word to the homely girl.

In face and form you may be unattractive, but mere physical charm is not all important. Cheerfulness is better. If you are bright, well-read and show a genuine interest in the affairs of your fellow-beings you will be sought.

If you seek opportunities to serve, rejoice with the joyful, and sympathize with the sad, and keep your record clear and your life clean, you will find yourself surrounded by many friends.

Friends as a result of mere physical beauty amount to very little. Those who love you for beauty of heart and mind are lasting friends. You may not make friends as quickly as the girl who is pretty and chic, but you can show qualities that will make the mere beauty envious.

Perhaps you have received many snubs and rebuffs because you are lacking in physical charm, but there are always those who look deeper. In time, you will surround yourself with a coterie of true-blue companions who will be a source of great pleasure to you. So do not be discouraged. WEDNESDAY.

HOLD THY TONGUE.

"If any man among you seemeth to be religious and bridleth not his tongue, this man's religion is vain."—Jas. 1:26.

If one can manage his mouth, he can escape most ills of life. The food and drink we take in and the chatter we send forth make us a hundred troubles. Fasting and silence are the three methods of health and harmony. There is so much we may better leave unsaid, that it is astonishing the brain does not better supervise the mouth. Put this mischief on half-rations.—The Catholic Citizen.

Prayer.—Our Father, enable us to hold our tongues from all that is unseemly, from speaking proud things, from backbiting our neighbors, from speaking deceits, from flatteries, from all evil: and give us wisdom to use knowledge aright, and with truth that is as clear as though its words were from the Lord. Put upon our tongues the law of kindness and love towards every one. In His name we ask it. Amen.

THURSDAY.

AMEN!

"Let all the people say, Amen."—Ps. 106:44-48.

This is the exclamation of a grateful heart. It is the end of a saying that is the beginning of a doing. "Amen" ends the praise and the prayer, and it is the beginning of action of him who prays. It is the beginning of the task. "Amen," used to puzzle us until we came to know what it meant—"so let it be," and "so let it be" means "I will do all I can to make it so."

"Amen" is the willingness to shoulder responsibility. It is not getting something from God, but it is giving ourselves in partnership with God in the tasks of the world.

We pray for righteousness in our home and city. What do we do to bring it to pass? Our "amen" is our avowal that we will go through fire and blood before we will yield one inch to the foul sins that stain the soul.

"Let all the people say, Amen."

Prayer.—Our Father, help us to know what to pray for, and how to work for what we pray. Turn our thoughts to Thy word for guidance, and our souls to Thee forever. In His name. Amen.

FRIDAY.

WHAT IS RELIGION FOR?

"It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."—Matt. 4:4-7.

Has it ever occurred to us to ask: By what do we live? What is it that makes life livable? There are three great institutions which support life. They are: first, the family; second, government; third, religion. What is the family for? It is to keep the race alive, to develop social virtues, co-operation, good will, unselfishness. Government is to secure and guarantee human rights, to promote the common welfare. What is religion for? It has a real function in normal society. It is meant to emancipate our spirits from fear of the unknown and the unseen, and our bodies from habits which are hostile to health and happiness and to enlarge our horizon.

Religion is the one thing in the world that gives breath to life. It gives wings to the soul. It delivers us from the peril of thinking in a circle, and enables us to live on the line of discovery. Religion of the right sort increases one's inner resources, and makes him of more value to himself and to the world. Our souls are bound until infinite power sets them free. Our souls are blind until Christ touches us and bids us see. As our organs of spiritual vision accustom themselves to the light, we learn to see life on earth as a divine gift, and life in heaven as its logical fulfillment.—Rev. C. C. Albertson.

Prayer.—Lord's prayer, all the circle joining.

SATURDAY.

GOD'S WAY OF TEACHING US.

"Whom shall he teach knowledge?"—Isa. 28:9-12.

The child, learning, must go over the same things again and again. So God must make us do. We are slow in learning the things of the kingdom. Difficulties and chastisements must needs fix our attention upon the course to be pursued, the defects to be corrected. We cannot have things we wish. There are sudden disarrangements of life, squalls upon our sea. If, in addition to the fightings without, we are impatient, our lessons are not being learned. Perhaps we do not wish to learn. Our training must needs be the more severe to bring under control the rebellious spirit.

We do not realize that the interferences in life are precepts upon precepts for our perfecting. The quickest way to efficiency and peace is to accept these adversities as schoolmasters for our good, submit ourselves to their training, reach out and take for our improvement whatever they have to offer us. Instead of fretting, we should say, "What can I learn from this? How from it can I perfect myself?" No doubt, our Ruler sometimes sends such experiences for our good. The more quickly we learn and do, the more quickly they may cease. But if not, the sooner they may lose their disturbing power over us. As in a storm, pouring oil on the troubled waters quiets them, so having perfection and peace tends to peace without. "The fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace."—J. H. Mills.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

SUNDAY.

"The Sabbath was made for man."—Mark 2:27.

"I was in the spirit on the Lord's Day."—Rev. 1:10.

When we are in the spirit on the Lord's Day, the gates of a new world are open to us. John saw visions and heard music, and received God's will, and was inspired to do His will.

It is said that John was a slave on Patmos, and was worked that hard that he would have no time for worship, and any noticeable devotions on his part would bring upon him more misery. But John's spirit could not so be bound. His spirit was free and he had open access to the spiritual world.

While he toiled, he passed into an ecstatic state. He was suspended from the material and lived in another world. He visits again the tomb with Peter. He hears the women talking about seeing him. He heard the Master's "Peace be unto you" in the upper chamber. He shared the life with the infant Church. He is brother and companion to the saints of earth and skies. He is with them in darkness and glory. And God talks to him of things to come.

God reveals to us great things of the spiritual world when we keep His law and spirit.

Prayer.—Our Father, in Thee we live and move and have our being; help us to place all that we are in Thy light and spirit and at Thy service today, and reveal to us our souls and all that Thou wouldst for us. In His name. Amen.

NOTICE.

Kiddies' Korner

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT, Editor.

Sing a song of seasons,
Something bright in all—
Flowers in the Summer,
Fires in the Fall!

DEAR LITTLE DREAM FAIRIES:

When you have read this little letter from your editor, you must read the story about Dream Fairy Dear. Bless me! after I read this story I just thought about all my Kiddies, and you seem like Dream Fairies to your editor. And, what fun it is, too, to think I have a "Kiddies' Korner" full—chuck full—of Fairies! Well, now, do you know a lot about the Fairies? But wouldn't we just love to know more? a lot more about them! I would! Do you know a little Fairy story that your teacher told you in school? Send it to me and we will publish it in the "Kiddies' Korner." Ho! ho! I 'most forgot something. When you write to me, write plainly, and then I won't have to put on Grandfather's glasses—don't forget now, angels.

What little boy wants another story soon, real soon, about Peter Rabbit and his Ma—what? You do? Goody! You shall have it—next week. So watch your "Korner," dears.

Good-by now. Your editor,
MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT.

WHEN LITTLE THOUGHTS GO RHYMING.

A Little Cock-Sparrow sat on a tree,
Looking as happy as happy could be;
Till a boy came by with his bow and arrow—
Says he: "I'll shoot the Little Cock-Sparrow.
His body will make me a nice little stew,
And his giblets will make me a little pie, too."
Says the Little Cock-Sparrow, "I'll be shot if I stay,"
So he clapped his wings and flew away.

NURSERY JINGLE.

Is John Smith within?
Yes, that he is.
Can he set a shoe?
Aye! marry two.
Here a nail, there a nail.
Tick, tack, too!

THE HIDDEN TREASURE.

Once, not so long ago, a lot of elves lived in the hollow of a big tree. They had heard that a great treasure was hidden in this same tree, and my! they hunted and hunted every where, but they could not find it.

One day a great queen from over the seas came to the hollow tree, and two of her faithful servants were told to hunt for the treasure. While they were sitting on the bank of a stream resting, they saw a box floating down.

"Maybe that is a box of gold, or something," said one of the servants.

He stuck out a stick and pulled it in to shore. It was the treasure! And, listen—after he opened it, he found a lot of subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN SUN!

THE ELF DANCE.

One fresh, early morning
Before the Sun awoke,
Some gay little Elves
Came dancing out to play.
They had torches in their hands,
And fireflies following them.
In their hands were little bands.
They played on the soft green grass—
Pitter patter went their little feet.
They played where the dew was falling
Until they heard the Queen Elf calling.
Then they ran gaily from the dawn,
The little fireflies leading them
To show their way home.

TAXICABS.

I love to ride in Taxicabs—
Yellow, Black and White,
Because they go so very swift;
They go with all their might.

I like to get the good, fresh air,
'Way up on top a bus;
But I always have to ride inside,
'Cause my Auntie makes a fuss!

Dear little Birdie,
Up in a tree;
Dear little Birdie,
Come sing to me.
I'll pet your brown head,
And put you to bed,
And kiss you good-night
When your prayers are said.

SIR GALAHAD A MODEL.

To a high castle on a far hill an angel of heaven had borne the Holy Grail, that sacred cup from which Christ drank on the eve of the last supper. And there only good knights and pure were set to guard it, and Amfortas was their king. But Amfortas did evil, and a spell was cast over him and his court, so that they slept and the Holy Grail stood unguarded.

And it was made known throughout the world that only a knight pure in heart as in deed should find the Grail and free the castle from its spell. So all knights strove to live purely, and many set forth in quest of the Holy Grail, but none were truly pure and none reached unto the high castle on the far hill, until to the court of King Arthur came a boy, Sir Galahad by name.

When but a babe, Galahad had been given to a company of nuns, that he might grow pure and innocent as they. And while a holy woman held him in her arms, the angel of the Grail came in a vision, so that the babe laughed and held out his hands to the mighty adventure before him.

So in the convent the boy Galahad was trained in holy ways. And one day from the court of King Arthur came Sir Launcelot to knight the boy and lead him to the other knights of the round-table. All night young Galahad knelt alone in the convent chapel until the candles burned in their sockets, and, when dawn stole through the windows, came Sir Launcelot and Sir Bors to fasten spurs upon his feet and to lay upon his head the helmet of knighthood, while all about stood the nuns in holy white, holding high their flickering flames and bidding their son godspeed.

In his robe of red, the bright red of purity cleansed by the fire of temptation, knelt Sir Galahad and pledged his life to the quest of the Holy Grail.

DREAM-FAIRY-DEAR.

By Anna Williams Arnett.

A Go-to-Sleep Story for Wide-Awake Children.

One evening, just as the sun was saying "Good-night," the beautiful moon came riding through the sky.

Dream-Fairy-Dear, who lives in the moon, stepped into her airship made of a fleecy, misty white cloud, and started to the earth.

By and by, she came to the home of Little Papoose. He was swinging in his little birch-wood and deerskin cradle under a pine tree. Little Papoose saw Dream-Fairy-Dear in her beautiful white airship, and said, "Dream-Fairy-Dear, where are you going in your beautiful white airship?" And Dream-Fairy-Dear whispered, "I am going to the Land of Dreams, where birds sing at night, where butterflies can talk, where babies ride ponies and chase the wild deer."

Then Little Papoose said, "Please, Dream-Fairy-Dear, take me with you in your beautiful white airship. I want to hear the birds sing at night and the butterflies talk, and ride a pony, and chase the wild deer."

Dream-Fairy-Dear smiled a sweet smile, and said, "You may go with me, Little Papoose, if you will shut your eyes." So Little Papoose shut his eyes. Then Dream-Fairy-Dear lifted Little Papoose up, and up into her airship, and on and on they sailed while Dream-Fairy-Dear sang a song of the wind.

By and by they came to the home of Little Brown Boy. He was playing in the sand by the sea. Little Brown Boy saw Dream-Fairy-Dear in her beautiful white airship, and said, "Dream-Fairy-Dear, where are you going in your beautiful white airship?" And Dream-Fairy-Dear whispered, "I am going to the Land of Dreams, where tigers are kittens, and crocodiles have no teeth, and little boys ride on the elephant's trunk."

Then Little Brown Boy said, "Please, Dream-Fairy-Dear, take me with you in your beautiful white airship. I want to play with a tiger kitten, and a crocodile without teeth, and ride on the elephant's trunk."

Dream-Fairy-Dear smiled a sweet smile and said, "You may go with me, Little Brown Boy, if you will shut your eyes. So Little Brown Boy shut his eyes. Then Dream-Fairy Dear lifted Little Brown Boy up and up into her airship, and on and on they sailed while Dream-Fairy-Dear sang a song of the wind.

By and by they came to the home of Little Blue Eyes. She was standing by a window playing with her doll. Little Blue Eyes saw Dream-Fairy-Dear in her beautiful white airship, and said, "Dream-Fairy-Dear, where are you going in your beautiful white airship?" And Dream-Fairy-Dear whispered, "I am going to the Land of Dreams, where dolls never break, toys grow out of the ground, and caramels and fudge grow on trees."

Then Little Blue Eyes said, "Please, Dream-Fairy-Dear, take me with you in your beautiful white airship. I want a doll that will never break, some toys that grow out of the ground, and I want to pick caramels and fudge from the trees." Dream-Fairy-Dear smiled a sweet smile, and said, "You may go with us, Little Blue Eyes, if you will shut your eyes."

So Little Blue Eyes shut her eyes. Then Dream-Fairy-Dear lifted Little Blue Eyes up and up into her airship, and on and on they sailed while Dream-Fairy-Dear sang a song of the wind. By and by, they came to the Land of Dreams. Little Papoose heard the birds sing at night, heard the butterflies talk, and rode all around on a pony, and chased the wild deer.

Little Brown Boy played with a tiger kitten, a crocodile without teeth, and rode on the elephant's trunk.

Little Blue Eyes found a doll that will never break, some tops growing out of the ground, and picked caramels and fudge from the trees.

So they stayed and stayed, and played and played in the Land of Dreams—all night long!

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

By H. S. Hardcastle.

MISS PATTIE COGHILL, Field Secretary, 11 East Newton St., Boston, Mass.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

October 5, 1924.

Subject: "The Choice of the Twelve."

Golden Text: "Freely ye received, freely give." Matt. 10:8.

Lesson: Matt. 10:1-8.

Devotional Reading: Isa. 40.

Reference Material: Matt. 10:1-42; Mark 3:13-19; Luke 6:12-19.

"And He called unto Him, His twelve disciples." They were to "be with Him, that He might send them forth to preach, and to have authority to cast out devils." These two quotations give us an insight into several vital facts regarding the twelve men who made history for Christianity.

"He chose twelve because every Hebrew would recognize instantly that this meant a new Israel, a new kingdom in which the whole race would be blessed, a new Jerusalem into which all the nations of the earth would bring their glory and their honor. The number twelve was like a thought-form to the patriotic Hebrew. He pictured the kingdom of God as having twelve sections."

He chose them, "that they might be with Him." It is no reflection upon Jesus that He wanted companionship. He was normal, the most perfectly normal man that ever lived, and His instinct and longing for human fellowship was strong and insistent. He wanted these men for what they meant to Him. But He wanted them more for what He meant to them. For He faced a critical period in His ministry. The opposition of the leaders and the inability of the masses fully to appreciate His teachings were becoming more and more evident. He had great truths to impart to the members of His needy race. He could not do this alone. And hence He chose these men, that He might impress upon their minds and hearts His teachings and His spirit. As one writer has so strikingly put it, "He wanted to make men who would make men." He wanted to change the world through changed men." It might be added that the condition or test of discipleship was primarily devotion to Him. A willingness and readiness to forsake all, and personal purity and sincerity outweighed formal orthodoxy of belief.

He chose them, "that they might go forth to preach." They were to company with Him, they were to learn of Him, they were to imbibe His spirit, and then they were to go forth to preach, to tell others the "good news." And they were to have authority to cast out devils. Companionship with Him and obedience to Him would give them power over the forces of evil in whatever form they might be encountered. It is encouraging to know that Jesus never revoked this promise. If we learn of Him and go forth in His name we shall be more than conquerors through Christ. This coming to Jesus and going for Jesus is the orbit of the Christian journey through life.

Luke tells us that "He went out into the mountain to pray, and He continued all night in prayer to God." There was much at stake. He must see to it that He had help in picking those who would make history for the kingdom. The Father had a part and a say in the matter.

There is no indication that the men He selected were saints. They had no wings, full-grown or even newly-fledged. They were, for the most part, out-of-door men—genuine, red-blooded men. Some of them were rather hard and coarse. None of them wore a halo, and they can best be characterized by a term popular with college men—"he-men."

It would be interesting to go into a detailed character-study of these twelve men. Space forbids more than a summary of the characters as they are revealed in glimpses and snap-shots in the gospels. Simon Peter, rough, energetic, a combination of strength and weakness; now good, now bad, but always intense; bold, confident, impulsive, and loving, a natural leader and independent character. Andrew, practical nature, with a keen sense of spiritual values, a strong sense of personal conviction, and missionary in spirit. He had a broad sympathy and sound common sense. James, "the son of thunder, sound and loyal, but hot-headed and fanatical, and presumptuous. He was the first martyr. John, known as the apostle of love, and worthy of the title later, but also a "son of thunder, hot-headed, zealous, ambitious, intolerant and exclusive. Philip, an inquiring spirit, cautious and deliberate, rather materialistic in spirit, prosaic and unimaginative, lacking vision and enthusiasm. Bartholomew—we know nothing about him directly, but tradition says that he was placed in a sack and cast into the sea. Nathaniel—probably the Bartholomew of the gospels, fair-minded and sincere in purpose. Matthew, a business man, a gifted writer and a loyal disciple of the truth when he found it. Thomas, known as a "doubted," a title which is not altogether fair, for he was certainly an honest doubter, and, moreover, he was courageous (see John 11:16) and unselfish. He was somewhat gloomy, a despondent, but he was sincere in all that he did. James, the son of Alpheus, little is known of him, as is the case with Thaddeus. Simon, the zealot, a man of revolutionary tendencies, with a hatred of anything foreign, and a believer in strict legalism. Judas Iscariot, sordid, greedy, two-faced, mercenary, with at least some business ability.

This was the stuff from which the Master made men. There is no finer tribute to His ability as a Master than the way in which He took these men of various dispositions and with painful limitations and transformed them into men who went out to turn the world upside down and start a process that will eventually redeem it. "Ye call me Lord and Master, and ye do well, for such I am."

Some Things We Can Learn from the Choosing and the Sending Out of the Twelve.

1. God means to change the world through changed men.
2. God will redeem the world as soon as He can get men enough to carry out His purposes.
3. Devotion to Jesus is a primary test of discipleship.
4. Prayer should precede any important undertaking for God.
5. Jesus Christ is Master of men.
6. The kingdom needs all kinds of men.
7. He who goes in Christ's name has Christ's blessing.
8. Christians are personal representatives of Jesus Christ.
9. We are to give as we have received.
10. The divine wisdom suits the task to the worker, or fits the worker for the task.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

By Wm. T. Scott.

October 7, 1924.

Topic: "In His Steps—How Jesus Cheered the Fearful and Discouraged."

Lesson Study: Matt. 9:2, 10:24-33; John 14:1-3.

(Consecration Meeting.)

The richest, fullest life our earth thas ever known was the life of Jesus Christ. No one has ever had such complete satisfaction and settled peace as He. Rich and full as His life was to Himself, it was the richest, fullest life to others that has ever administered to humanity. Wherever He made His abode, He was a source of helpfulness. Even the hem of His garment was filled with that strength of ability to meet a need of humanity. His life was like a mighty well of water. It had more in and gave more from it than any other life since time began. Love of His Father welled up like a flood within His own heart, then flowed forth to "cheer the fearful and discouraged." He came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to this end His spirit exists in the hearts of men today. Wherever He saw a need, He met it sufficient to the individual. Ours would be a dark world indeed if Jesus had never come. What a loss is coming to heathendom, those who have not seen His star. He is the hope of the world. Christian Endeavorers, let us, in "walking in His steps," seek to do those things that most perfect His unfinished work left to the hands of us. "If you do it unto the least of these, my brethren, ye do it unto me."

For the Meeting.

Give some instances where Jesus abolished fear and brought hope to the discouraged.

How may we, in following in His steps, help to abolish fear and help to uplift the discouraged?

Why was Jesus able to do these things? His life was consecrated to His Father. In following in His steps, let us consecrate ourselves to Him.

HOLLAND.

Revival services were held at Holy Neck Christian Church September 8th to 12th. There were two services each day—2:30 and 7:30 P. M. Rev. O. D. Poythress, of South Norfolk, was the preacher and leader, and rendered faithful and effective service. Mrs. George D. Eastes, of Portsmouth, Va., did the playing. The crowds were large and the interest good throughout. There were thirty or more professions, and a large number of reconsecrations. Twenty-seven united with the Church, four by letter and twenty-three on profession of faith. Seven were baptized by sprinkling at the Church on Sunday morning, the 14th, and fourteen were baptized in the afternoon at Norfleet's Mill Pond.

More than 85 per cent of the United States corn crop is fed to live stock, and somewhat less than 10 per cent is used for human food. The hog is the largest consumer of corn, 40 per cent being fed to swine on farms. Horses and cattle are next in order.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

The fall of the year is here, and with it comes our multiplied needs. Somehow, we kinder wish we could hold it off a little longer. As the weather gets cold and winter sets in, it calls for shoes, for more than a hundred children, clothes for boys and coats and dresses for the girls. It takes quite a lot to meet all the bills at the present high prices.

Mrs. T. E. Brickhouse, Norfolk, Va., sent us a splendid suit of clothes last week that fit one of our boys as well as a tailor-made suit. It came at the time the boy needed a suit, and he was delighted to get it. If our people would just think of us and send us suits that the boys have outgrown and yet are in good condition, it would be a great help to us in our work here. We cannot use clothes that are worn out. Sometimes girls will have dresses that they have outgrown, but still in good condition and of no further use to the family; why not send them to us by parcel post? it doesn't cost much.

We have tried our best to reach half our goal for the year by October 1st, but while we have gotten our total for the year up to $12,961.66, we still lack a little more than five hundred dollars being half-way to our goal. I appeal to the Sunday Schools that are not on the giving list to join in now and be in the final race when we reach our goal. The fellow who helps to kill the bear gets lots more pleasure out of it than the fellow who don't. The Sunday Schools that help us to reach our final goal this year will be in a position to rejoice with us in the final victory. We want every school to have a part.

The following have been sent in: Mrs. J. A. Williams, Franklin, Va., 1 box clothing; Mrs. M. S. McNeal, Hobson, Va., 4 dresses; Virginia Jenkins, Driver, Va., 1 dress; Mrs. Barrett, Elon, N. C., 4 dresses; Rosemont Church, Virginia, 1 box clothing; Miss Margaret Clegg, Burlington, N. C., 9 dresses, 1 sweater; Holland Beamon Company, Suffolk, Va., 1 car coal; Class 5, Burlington Church, 10 dresses, 1 handbag, box toilet articles for little girl; Ladies' Aid Society, Portsmouth, Va., 18 little dresses for girls; Bethlehem S. S., Timberville, Va., 1 box clothing; Mrs. J. C. Cox, 1 quilt; Mrs. A. J. Holland, Holland, Va., 1 dress; Union Daily Vacation Bible School, Holy Neck and Holland Churches, 8 dresses, 6 strings of beads; Miss Sadie Boyd, Richmond, Va., 1 box clothing; Mrs. T. E. Brickhouse, Norfolk, Va., 1 nice suit for boy.

FINE REVIVAL MEETINGS.

So far as I have been informed, God has wonderfully blessed the efforts that have been put forth for the last several weeks in the salvation of souls. I have been too busy with my own revival work to read the general news, but in Lee, Chatham, Harnett, Wake, Johnson, Franklin, Vance, and other near-by counties in this State, the record for great Holy Ghost revivals has been unusually good.

Organizations of lay workers with zeal like unto that of the early Christians, recorded in the Acts of the Apostles, have contributed much to the great success. The Churches of my home community in Wake County have co-operated so faithfully in prayer and service, demonstrating such a passion for souls, that the pastors have felt but little need for preaching, but have merely directed the work, receiving members and baptizing candidates. We thank God that very few are left within the reach of any evangelical Church to advocate the cause of sin.

We believe the great Ham-Ramsay meetings, held in Fayetteville, Durham, Raleigh, Wilson and other towns in our State, and now at Henderson, have caused the great awakening by sending out, as they have done, various federations inspiring Churches and communities to organize workers and secure the conversion of souls. I am thankful that the Churches of my field have shared in this great awakening.

I have held meetings in seven Churches of my pastoral charge, beginning the third Sunday in July and continuing until now. Thus far, more than 300 altar professions, including conversions and reclamations, have been witnessed, and from these more than 150 have united with these seven Churches. A great many have joined other Churches. I have two meetings yet to hold.

Rev. J. W. Knight was with me four days at Zion. He is indeed a very consecrated man and a most earnest preacher. Rev. A. R. Brothers, the engineer-preacher of Raleigh, has been with me five weeks of this time, and has certainly endeared himself to all that have heard him. He is one of the most spiritual, consecrated and forceful workers that I have ever been associated with. He has the tact to sway the people. God is wonderfully blessing him as a winner of souls. He is certainly strong in the faith once delivered to the saints, and gives promise of being a most successful and earnest preacher, and one that will be well received by any congregation who may give him a hearing. His love for God's Word has caused him to make it his daily companion, and many who hear him are inspired to accept its wonderful truths, and read to secure the help that they are convinced that God has so graciously given him from His Book.

Raleigh, N. C. J. E. FRANKS.

DAMASCUS MEETING.

I am writing this because it was my privilege to be there at this home-coming and series of meetings that followed. This meeting was held on the third Sunday in August and the following week. This Church was the first one to which we ever preached. It was while we were in school at the Graham Normal College. It was indeed a privilege that we enjoyed. We preached from Monday till Thursday evening. Rev. Bro. J. E. McCauley was called to his Church in Virginia for a funeral, hence he left us Tuesday morning. The meeting was very good. The pastor, Bro. Carden, closed the meeting on Friday with, I think, good results.

Danville.

We met our appointment at this place on the first Sunday; preached at 11 A. M. and 3 P. M.; baptized eleven members, and preached again at 7:30 P. M. to a large congregation.

Monday evening we preached near Ringgold, Va., and from there we went to Richmond, Va., to visit our daughter, Mrs. C. O. Robbins. While there, we visited Rev. Bro. W. T. Walters and his Church. The Church is beautiful and well arranged. The Church is in a new part of the city, and the lot on which the Church stands is everything that we could desire. Bro. and Sister Walters seem to be happy in their work. We also visited THE CHRISTIAN SUN office. Bro. Kernodle and son were very busy with their work, and we had a delightful time with them.

We also had the privilege and pleasure of attending the Presbyterian Synod, then in session, which was largely attended. While there, we heard three missionaries speak—one from India, one from China, and one a native of Japan—which was of great interest to us. The Synod set themselves strongly against Sabbath desecration, and they took the position that it could never be done by legislation, but it must be done by preaching the Gospel in faithfulness and righteous living. We think they are right, and we also think the law should honor and stand by the Church of Jesus Christ. P. T. KLAPP.

FULLER'S CHAPEL REVIVAL.

Fuller's Chapel has recently closed a week of successful revival services. As the pastor has been in charge there but a short time, the members of the Church thought it best that he conduct the services, thus affording him an opportunity of becoming better acquainted with his members and friends of the Church throughout the community.

Members of the Church and congregation, and people in various sections of the county gave their hearty support to this meeting. The attendance was good at all services, especially in the evening.

Children's services were held three afternoons during the week. From fifty to seventy-five children were present at each of these services, with a goodly number of young people, parents and friends in attendance also. Twenty-seven of the children and young people accepted Christ as their personal Saviour, and many of the young people rededicated their lives to the Lord.

The pastor feels that many of the Church members experienced a reconsecration of spirit during this revival. We believe a greater interest in the Church is being shown and more active service will be the result of the services. We trust the meeting will be of lasting good to the Church and community, and through its influence many souls may be led into the kingdom.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Having learned of the death of our dearly beloved friend, Mrs. Walter Denson, Columbus, Ga., wife of our Sunday School teacher, a cloud of sorrow surrounds us all.

She shall ever occupy a large place in our memories. In her passing from the earthly labors to heavenly reward, we feel keenly our loss, but we are glad that we can look through this vale of tears and rejoice with the angels that they have one more added to their band, and because of the fact that we can claim one more treasure in heaven.

She was a sweet-spirited Christian, a thoughtful and considerate friend, and we are thankful for the few years she was permitted to live among us, and for the beautiful examples of sweet, Christian character and nobility of purpose she set for us.

Although our Heavenly Father has transplanted this noble character into the realities of eternity, we cherish sweet memories of her beautiful life and good works here.

Knowing that God is too wise to make a mistake and too good to be untrue, therefore, resolved:

First, That we register our appreciation for that part of her life we can call ours, as friend and worker with us.

Second, That we express to her faithful husband, Mr. Walter Denson, our deepest sympathy in the giving up of all earthly claim to the one who has been so truly a helpmeet to him. May he ever look to Him who heals broken hearts and gives comfort and companionship to those who are lonely.

Third, That these resolutions be entered upon our class record, and a copy be sent to her grief-stricken husband.

MAYNARD.

Mrs. Alice Maynard, widow of G. R. Maynard, departed this life September 9, 1924, in her sixty-ninth year. She was a member of Cross Roads Presbyterian Church and had been for a number of years. She was very kind and considerate and delighted to minister to those in need. A good woman has fallen asleep. She will be greatly missed in home, Church and community.

The funeral services were from Union Christian Church, conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. Mr. Roberson, of the Presbyterian Church. The interment was in the Church cemetery. Sweet be her sleep till the Master bids her arise.

Burlington, N. C. P. H. FLEMING.

BLANCHARD.

Lonnie Roberts Blanchard, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Blanchard, died September 14th and was buried on the 15th at Shallow Ford Christian Church. The funeral services were from the home, conducted by the writer. We would point the bereaved parents, for comfort, to Jesus Christ, the Healer of broken hearts.

WHY YOU NEED IRON—

To make you strong and "brainy" and put the power into your blood to overcome disease germs

The food you eat contains carbon. When your food is digested it is absorbed from the intestines into the blood. When the carbon in your food comes in contact with the oxygen carried by the iron in your blood, the carbon and oxygen unite and by so doing they give off tremendous energy, thereby giving you great force, strength and endurance. Without iron your blood carries no oxygen and without oxygen there is nothing to unite with the carbon in your food, so that what you eat does you no good—you do not get any strength from it—it is like putting coal into a stove without a fire. You cannot get any heat unless the coal unites with the fire.

The strongest weapon with which to prevent and overcome colds, pneumonia, kidney trouble, rheumatism, nervous prostration, in fact almost any disease or disease germs is plenty of good rich, pure blood, strength, energy and endurance and the greater energy carrier in the body is organic iron, not metallic iron which people usually take, but organic iron like the iron in spinach, lentils and apples, and like the iron contained in what is known as organic Nuxated Iron, which may be had from almost any druggist. Nuxated Iron often increased the strength, energy and endurance of weak, nervous, run-down folks in two weeks' time.

It has been used and highly recommended by former United States Senators, Members of Congress, Judges of U. S. Courts, many physicians and prominent men.

Over 4,000,000 people are now using it annually. Satisfactory results are guaranteed or the manufacturers will refund your money. Sold by all druggists in tablet form only.

DENSON.

God, in His wisdom, saw fit to send His death angel into the home of Mr. Walton Denson, of Columbus, Ga., and claim the life of his faithful companion, at the age of 34, Sunday morning, September 14, 1924. Mrs. Denson was ill only a few days, during which time she suffered greatly, but she was patient through it all. She had no fears of the great beyond, for she was one of God's own children and was ready and willing to go at His summons.

Besides her grief-stricken husband, she leaves to mourn their loss two sons and an infant daughter, mother, six brothers and one sister, and a host of other relatives and friends. She was a kind and loving mother, wife and neighbor. She was ever ready to lend a helping hand to any whom she could assist in any way. She was a cheerful, sweet-spirited Christian, a sunbeam to her family and friends, and no less than a tonic to the sick. May God bless the bereaved ones, and may they, with her many friends, get ready to spend eternity with her in her glory world.

The funeral services were held from the Rose Hill Presbyterian Church, where she was a faithful member, at 3 o'clock Monday afternoon. The services were conducted by Dr. C. B. Tomb, pastor, assisted by Rev. L. A. Henderson, pastor of the Rose Hill Baptist Church, and Dr. Fred Jenkins, of the Business Men's Evangelistic Club.

The services were attended by a large number of friends, and many beautiful floral tributes were in evidence, showing the high esteem in which she was held. She was laid to rest in Riverdale Cemetery to await the coming of our Lord.

A FRIEND.

JONES.

Gordon, son of Jett and Ada Bridges Jones, was born December 1, 1897, and fell asleep in the closing hours of August 16, 1924, at Wise Sanitarium, Plains, Ga., where he had been carried for treatment for injuries received August 3d in an automobile accident which occurred near Cusseta, Ga.

The funeral services were conducted from Providence Chapel Christian Church Sunday afternoon in the presence of one of the largest congregations ever assembled there for such an occasion by Rev. J. T. Budd, pastor Richland Methodist Church, and Mr. Bond Brown.

He is survived by his parents, three sisters—Mrs. B. J. Earp, Miss Ruby Jones, and Mrs. Roy Christian—and a host of friends.

May God comfort these heart-broken parents and sisters.

C. E. GERRINGER.

CARTER

Etta Dixon Carter, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. O. Carter, of Pleasant Hill Christian Church, died September 10, 1924, and was buried on the 15th in the Church cemetery. The funeral services were conducted from the Church by Rev. H. J. Fleming. May the bereaved parents find comfort in Jesus Christ our Saviour, who loved us and gave Himself for us.

Building a Country Sunday School

By E. L. Middleton.

Mr. Middleton possesses definite qualifications for the preparation of this work. For twelve years after leaving college, he was a day school and Sunday School teacher in a village that had "once-a-week" preaching, with half the membership of the Sunday School living in the open country; while for fourteen years more he has been a State Sunday School secretary in rural State. Mr. Middleton urges the adoption of no novel or revolutionary ideas or methods. He recognizes the place and the value of recognized Sunday School policies and methods, and has prepared a digest of the essentials in a manner plain enough to render it adaptable for use in any rural school. Methods, administration, organization and development are each and all discussed in this book in an eminently practical way.

The price of the book is $1.25. You can order it through "The Christian Sun," 1536 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va.

Church Bells.—

The village of Allraht, near Cologne, Germany, boasts the first Church bells made of an alloy of aluminum and copper. They will not burst nor rust, and may be made at one-third the weight of bronze bells.

Freud Deserts the Libido.—

The New York Times, in a recent book review, commenting on the latest work of the famous Psychoanalyist, Dr. Sigmund Freud, has this significant statement: "Dr. Freud has come to the conclusion that thoughts of life beyond the grave play a greater part in our lives than any other instinct, including love." Yes, Dr. Freud is growing old. Age does have much to do with the attitudes which we take regarding many things, and the great beyond is one of them.

Missionaries Safe in China.—

The five hundred members of Protestant missionary families in the vicinity of Shanghai, China, are said to be perfectly safe. Cablegrams state that due to the fighting, which is in about twenty miles of Shanghai, some of the outlying work has been disturbed, none of the missionaries or other foreigners in the city are in any danger. China is now enjoying another of those periodical revolutions which serve to while away the summer time each year. China has been visited by one of these every summer since 1912.

Scholar and Evangelist Unite.—

London is to experience something new in the way of an evangelistic campaign this winter, when Dr. T. R. Glover and Gipsy Smith join forces in the English capital. Dr. Glover is to speak at the mid-day meetings at the Westminster Central Hall, while the Gipsy is carrying on the campaign of evangelism in the English capital. It means much to the world when the scholar and the evangelist unite in a common effort. Evangelism is still needed in the Church, but it needs to be tempered with the thought which only the scholar can bring to the Christian faith.

Discover Church in Antioch.—

A recent archeological discovery is that of an ancient Christian Church in Antioch of Pisidia, Asia Minor. Because of an inscription concerning a certain bishop which lived about 375 A. D., it is presumed that the Church was built by the congregation which succeeded that to which the Apostle Paul preached in a private house. If this be true, it reveals the rapid growth of the Gospel adherents, since the Church was an expensive one. The discovery was made by a party sent out by the University of Michigan. Such discoveries are worth much to careful Bible students. They mean much in a correct understanding of the Scripture, and in an appreciation of the growth of the Church.

Buried Treasure to Help Mission.—

While excavating for a new Church, the Presbyterian mission working in Nanking, China, dug up pottery dating from between 1465 and 1488. It is of great value. When the mission sought a site for their Church, they could secure only a deserted palace, shunned by the Chinese because of the large number of executions which took place there about fifty years ago. This would have made an excellent place to bury treasure, and suspecting this, the mission had the contract to provide that whatever was found there should be the property of the mission. The porcelain, after being appraised, will be sold and the proceeds applied to the mission Church in Nanking.

Business Men to Advertise Churches.—

The business men of Philadelphia have united to publish a full-page Church directory in the Saturday issue of one of the city's leading dailies. It is their purpose to give free advertising to every Church of whatever denomination in the city. In this age, when so many things are vieing for attention, it is necessary for the Churches to advertise as well as other enterprises. The business men of the city are aware of this, and are striving to meet this need. They also realize that to invest in a religious movement is good business. They know that a Christian city means a better business for them, and they are willing to put money behind an effort which will help to make the city a Christian community.

Bogus Money—Bogus Booze.—

A nest of counterfeiters was uncovered in New York City recently. The same gang were also working out of Newark, N. J., and Providence, R. I. They were specializing in ten-dollar certificates which were manufactured in Providence and sent to Newark and New York for distribution.

According to the Federal authorities, much of the issue of these bogus ten-dollar notes found its way to the rum-running fleet off the coast and to the bootlegging fraternity around New York and the Atlantic highlands. Many cargoes of liquor have been paid for with counterfeit notes, and many crews of rum-runners have received their wages in worthless notes.

It is in order for the rum-running and bootlegging fraternity to make a demand for the repeal of the laws against counterfeiting. If this were done, according to their logic, they would be assured of receiving Uncle Sam's real money in payment for their contraband booze.

Northfield to Welcome Missionaries.—

William R. Moody, now head of the Northfield enterprises, has announced a gift of far-reaching importance. The Northfield work has received a gift of seven acres of land in the heart of the city of Northfield, and this will make possible the erection of twenty homes for furloughed missionaries who are now embarrassed by having to live on the small sum allowed them by their mission boards. The homes will be erected just as soon as funds can be collected, and will be rented for just the upkeep and the taxes. The Northfield schools will offer excellent educational advantages for the children of missionaries, while the Moody school at Northfield will be of inestimable value to the workers in the foreign field.

This new work deserves the support and the hearty co-operation of all Christians. It will help to keep the busy men and women fresh for their tasks, aside from the material value of providing homes for them while on furlough.

Drying Up Latin-America.—

Reports coming from the Latin-American States of this hemisphere point to a progressive drying-up of those countries. The leaders in those republics have been watching the results of prohibition in the United States and are becoming convinced that the social, industrial and commercial, to say nothing of the moral, interests of their people make a prohibition policy desirable and inevitable.

Taking into account the differing systems of legislation and administration in those nations, the approach to prohibition must be progressive through educational and slowly suppressive measures. Such measures are already in motion in a number of the Southern republics and yielding results that presage the envisioned total prohibition.

Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln and other eminent statesmen believed that our greatest American effects upon the lives and liberties of other people would be the examples of freedom and advanced civilization that we would set before them. It appears that our prohibition example is proving the wisdom of their faith.

President Obregon believes that "within the next ten years Mexico will be dry," and Calles, the President-elect, agrees with that prediction.

Chile is making rapid progress toward prohibition "for the benefit of the working classes," while strong and active anti-alcohol leagues are functioning effectively in Argentina, Bolivia and Uruguay.

These facts strongly appeal to us in the United States to make our demonstration of prohibition's benefits as complete and convincing as they should be.

NOTES-PERSONALS

In Chicago, a judge sent a man to the penitentiary for five years for driving an automobile while intoxicated. Who will say that the sentence was excessive?

It is learned with pleasure that Bethlehem College, Wadley, Ala., has opened up well, and that the president, Rev. S. L. Beougher, has made a fine impression and is doing a great work in behalf of the college. It is felt that he is the right man in the right place.

Our Raleigh Church is making wonderful progress toward the completion of its building, the hope being expressed in some quarters that the building will be ready for services within sixty days. It is a splendid building, and one in which the whole denomination may indulge a pardonable pride. We congratulate the pastor, Dr. Parry, the building committee, and the faithful ones of the congregation who have wrought so enthusiastically and loyally to bring the building to its present status.

Rev. G. D. Hunt, one of the busiest men of our Alabama Conference, has been holding a series of meetings the past week in City Hall, Roanoke, Ala. Our people of Roanoke are holding their services in City Hall, while they busy themselves in securing the money with which to pay for the lot and erect a Christian Church in that thriving city. Bro. V. E. Kitchens, one of the most active of our Roanoke members, says that one day there will be a splendid Church and equipment on the fine lot we have purchased for the purpose.

It will be gratifying to his many friends to know that Rev. J. W. Wellons (dear Uncle Wellons) was able last Saturday, when the Carlton Memorial Library was presented, to be present at the exercises and make a most interesting talk, bringing out salient facts of historical worth and suggestion in the life of the Carlton family. Uncle Wellons has been a life-long friend of the Carltons, and is held in high esteem by them, and in turn they are held in loving devotion by him. It was a joy to all concerned that this veteran of the cross now in his ninety-ninth year, was able to be present and speak on this memorable occasion.

The presentation and formal acceptance of the Carlton Memorial Library of Elon College, Saturday, September 27th, was an epoch in the history of the college and a notable event. The four members of the Carlton family presenting the library—P. J. Carlton, Richmond, Va.; Herbert Carlton, Raleigh, N. C.; Luther Carlton, Kinston, N. C.; Mrs. T. E. Parrot, Newman, Ga., accompanied by her daughter Ellen—were present for the occasion and were guests of the college. The Carlton family make a total donation of the building and all its equipment, which donation represents the largest money gift thus far donated by any single individual or family to the institution. The building has been furnished and equipped at a total cost of a little less than $100,000, and in addition to this gift the Carltons gave $25,000 to college endowment. Dr. R. H. Wilson, librarian of University of North Carolina, delivered a notable address on "The Place of the Library in College Life." The Carlton family have made all friends of Elon College and of the Christian Church their debtors because of their magnificent gift.

Rev. A. H. Sheppard, Columbus, Ga., is to spend several days working in behalf of Men and Millions in the Georgia and Alabama Conference. Bro. Sheppard is to visit all the individuals making subscriptions to Men and Millions that it is possible to reach in his Conference, and to give them opportunity of paying something on their pledge. We have no man better qualified in the Conference for this good work than Bro. Sheppard. We are now in the final year of this movement and the feeling of the board is that every subscriber is due an opportunity of disposing of his pledge in some way. The board has decided to have a representative in every Conference who, between now and the first of January, will give all the people an opportunity of paying their subscriptions or getting a clear understanding of their accounts. Rev. E. M. Carter and Rev. J. D. Dollar will do the work for Men and Millions in the Alabama Conference

If the mission secretary is rightly advised, among the Churches of the Southern Convention now on lookout for pastors, because of recent resignations or decisions to change on the part of the pastors, are the following: Reidsville, in the North Carolina and Virginia Conference; Pleasant Grove and Ingram, of the same Conference; Ramseur and adjacent Churches sufficient for a pastor, in the Western Conference; Rose Hill, Columbus, Ga., of the Georgia and Alabama Conference; Washington Street Church, Portsmouth, of the Eastern Virginia Conference. There are other individual Churches whose members or secretaries have designated changes, but not sufficient in any one place for pastoral support. These are all fine fields, and offer splendid opportunity for great service, and it is devoutly hoped that they will be fortunate in securing the right man as pastor. The problems of any Church are solved when the right man as pastor comes into the field, a fact of universal application. All problems await solution until the right individual arrives, and then they are solved.

The Charlotte Observer, in its issue of September 19th, carried a fine, even a very handsome, cut of our Dr. D. A. Long, and in explanation printed these lines: "Dr. Daniel Albright Long, of Franklinton, has been one of the distinguished veterans attending the reunion of the North Carolina division in Charlotte. Dr. Long delivered an address at the reunion at Concord in 1921 on 'Jefferson Davis, only President of the Confederacy,' which has been put in pamphlet form and highly recommended by the State Board of Education as a supplementary work in the schools of the State. Among those giving commendatory praise of the pamphlet are the late General Julian S. Carr, Dr. E. C. Brooks, Col. Fred A. Olds, the late Dr. D. H. Hill, the late Col. J. Bryan Grimes, Chief Justice William A. Hoke, the late Chief Justice Walter Clark, Josephus Daniels, and others.

"Dr. Long is one of the few Confederate veterans at present in the active work of the ministry, being pastor of a Church at Franklinton, although he is eighty years of age. He is a brother of Judge B. F. Long, of Statesville."

AIRSHIP SHENANDOAH.

As the great dirigible Shenandoah was returning from Narragansett Bay to Lakehurst, N. J., early Sunday morning, its great searchlight, directed toward the surface for guidance purposes, suddenly picked up three small-power boats moving shoreward. In the cockpits of the three craft were piled square boxes of familiar type. As soon as the light fell upon them, the three boats scattered. They put on their utmost speed and dodged and twisted in an effort to escape that glaring beam. It was obvious to the navigators of the Shenandoah that these three boats were rum-runners, suddenly caught on their way from the larger supply ships on the twelve-mile line to distribution points on the Long Island shore. If the Shenandoah had been under specific orders from the prohibition enforcement authorities it could have bagged all three of the smugglers in short order. Lacking such orders, however, the searchlight was merely used experimentally and, it is to be suspected, in a spirit of provocation. The dirigbile was flying low, about 600 feet from the sea, and was in a position to make a clean haul of every lawless craft within a range of many miles.

This unscheduled happening affords a suggestion that is worthy of consideration. The Shenandoah is not particularly useful at the present time, save for experimental flights. Why should it not be put to real use in thus co-operating with the enforcement organization? It could, from its altitude, day or night, give radio information to ships of the enforcement fleet and to shore stations. It could command the whole situation at the mouth of Long Island Sound and along "rum row," which stretches in a curving line from Montank Point down the Jersey shore. As a patrol, it would be better than half a hundred fast ships. The antics of the three craft picked up by the searchlight of Point Judith indicate the demoralization that would be caused if the Shenandoah were thus set to work.—Washington Star.

"SUITED."

Saturday, September 13, 1924, at Williams Clothing Company, Reidsville, N. C., the Ladies' Aid Society and members of the Happy Home Church presented their pastor with a nice suit of clothes. It was quite a surprise, but highly appreciated by the recipient.

Thanks to all who had a part, and especially Mrs. E. M. Gunn, for she was the author of the idea. I could not have been better "suited." May the Lord bless this generous people continuously, and help me to be a better pastor.

FORMAL OPENING OF CARLTON LIBRARY.

The Carlton Library Building, representing a total gift of $100,000 to Elon College from the Carlton family, was formally dedicated this morning at 11:30 by appropriate exercises in the college auditorium, Dr. Louis R. Wilson, librarian of the University of North Carolina, delivering the principle address of the occasion.

The donors of this building—P. J. Carlton, Richmond; Herbert Carlton, Raleigh; Luther Carlton, Kinston; and Mrs. T. E. Parrot, Newnan, Ga.—were present at the dedication.

An appreciative audience was present for this exercise. The faculty and student body of the college attended as a whole, and many of the friends of the community and county showed their appreciation of the donors and the college by their presence.

The exercises were begun with a brief talk in appreciation of the donors by Dr. J. W. Wellons, a life-long friend and spiritual adviser of the Carlton family. Prof. O. W. Johnson was in charge of the singing.

Dr. W. S. Alexander read Scripture and offered prayer. Dr. J. O. Atkinson formally presented the building, and D. R. Fonville accepted it on behalf of the board of trustees of the college. President W. A. Harper presided over the exercises.

Following these items, Dr. Wilson spoke on the subject, "The Place of the Library in College Life." He began his address by congratulating the college upon the quick recovery of the disastrous fire which destroyed the administration building and library nearly two years ago, and of the eloquent testimonial of the fine appreciation and understanding of the donors in the building then being dedicated.

In the completion and putting into use of this building, Dr. Wilson found cause for great gratification. "I see the partial realization," he said, "of an ideal which, for the past quarter of a century, I, as a librarian in a State and section which has all too few adequately equipped libraries, have steadily cherished. It is the ideal of seeing a perfectly planned, perfectly equipped, and adequately supported library growing upon the campus of every North Carolina college, and becoming the great heart of the institution which it serves, a teacher of youth, a revealer of truth, a promoter of service, and a conservatory of democracy."

Dr. Wilson undertook to outline the place of the library in college life in terms of service to the community, service to the alumni, and service to the nation. As a service to the community, he declared that the library furnished the background for the work carried on in the class-room, in the laboratory, and in the society hall; that it imparted to the student the ability of using books and indexes as tools; that it provided wholesome recreational reading and study; that it broadened the outlook on life of the student; that it layed the foundation for men's careers; and that it was the duty of the library to inspire and quicken the appreciation of the beautiful and to kindle within the youth who passed that way a passion for truth.

As an extension movement of service to the alumni, books should at all times be at the service of the alumni, no matter in what part of the country they may be—books that directly filled the needs of their vocations and to keep them growing intellectually. "It more than any other part of our college," Dr. Wilson stated, "can and should be the daily means of strengthening the bond between you and the constituency which you serve."

As a service to the nation, he insisted that the library was charged with the duty of "training more adequately the leaders of a State and section who shall both know and find joy in service to a civilization whose complexity daily becomes more manifold."

At this point, Dr. Wilson digressed from his specific theme to review briefly the sad lack of appreciation of the library and books by North Carolina and the South. The facts are brought out in his words: "It is an indisputable fact that ours is a section which today is not making the use of books and magazines and book stores and publishing houses that it should make and must make if we are to work out a balanced, finely conceived order which will not only minister to our material and physical needs, but will abundantly satisfy our intellectual and artistic aspirations as well.

"Sometimes I think probably I have overemphasized the limitations of the South in these respects. But the exercises of today bring them back with renewed vividness to my mind. They remind me that in the number of books which North Carolina has in her public libraries per one thousand inhabitants, she ranks forty-seventh in the sisterhood of States; that in the number of the popular magazines and daily newspapers read by her citizens, she ranks approximately forty-fifth; that, to build up a collection of books within her borders numbering more than 100,000 volumes, it has taken her more than two centuries—while far larger collections have been assembled in other States in a much briefer period; that to the support of her public libraries, her average annual expenditure per inhabitant has been from fifteen to thirty cents instead of one dollar set up as a standard by the American Library Association for the country at large; that throughout her length and breadth there are to be found only a third or a fourth of the number of book stores to which, by averages for the country at large, she is entitled; and that, with other Southern States, she has yet to build up even in her colleges and State offices, journals and publishing businesses intended to stimulate her intellectual growth commensurate with her development in the fields of agriculture and engineering and industrial activity."

He contrasted this general condition with the splendid provision made here, and in other colleges of the State.

"To have placed here, at the very heart of this college, this beautiful library," Dr. Wilson charged the president in his closing remarks; "to have adequately and generously equipped it; to possess it and to use it for these high ends, is to conceive and to execute in a way that today and through the years will bring to all those who pass this way a greater power of intelligent, helpful service, and a finer comprehension of the fuller, deeper issues of life. To support it bountifully, to develop its resources of book and journal and picture and rare edition, to make it a place in which youth find beauty and truth and a great mission in life, to make it the mentor to which alumni and public turn for guidance, to multiply and enrich its contribution to the intellectual and spiritual growth of the State and nation—these are some of the coveted privileges which you and your honored donors, your librarian and institution possess." C. M. CANNON.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

WHY THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH NEEDS COLLEGES.

President Guth writes masterfully in the July issue of the Christian Union Quarterly on the folly of "Denominational Education." The reader is "almost persuaded."

There is much, however, to be said on the other side. Public money can be used to teach everything else except religion. The subjects that are hostile to religion can be taught in tax-supported institutions, but not religion itself.

To be entirely consistent, President Guth should indict the State institutions along with the denominational colleges. They are sectarian, too. Any institution that is not free to teach all truth is sectarian.

So long as the State taxes its citizens to maintain institutions of higher learning wherein religion cannot be taught on the same basis as other subjects, just so long will the Churches maintain their own schools wherein all truth may be taught, including religious truth.

President Guth cannot minimize the stubborn fact that 90 per cent of the ministers of the Churches continue to come out of the denominational colleges, though more than twice as many students attend other types of school as attend denominational colleges. The Disciples of Christ figure that only 10 per cent of their students of college grade attend their own colleges, and yet they claim that 80 per cent of their ministers come from this 10 per cent.

While some denominational colleges are sectarian, the vast majority are open-minded toward all truth. It is no more fair to style them as a class, sectarian than it is to say that all State universities are godless or that all independent institutions are "cultural."

We have a situation in our country that demands statesmanship, not vituperation. The use of caustic adjectives will only engender bitterness and prevent the calm, judicious temperament we must assuredly employ if we are properly to solve this very pressing problem.

The denominational college with which I am most familiar, has as its motto "Christian character first and always." It is not its business to produce sectarains. It is under the control of a Church that at first wanted its colleges to be free, and so founded them. Sad experience made it obligatory that it change its policy. The Christian Church stands for union of all God's people. It deprecates sectarianism. It is forced to control its colleges to keep sectarians from appropriating them.

When the American people take a commonsense view of religion and give it the same support in tax-supported institutions they do the other departments of learning, I could consider the proposal to do away with denominational colleges which President Guth eloquently advocates. As matters now stand, in sheer desperation, the Churches have no choice but to maintain their denominational schools.

This does not hold for secondary education, because children and young people in these schools are at home or should normally be, and can be given the religious nurture their lives must have in order to be well-rounded. But colleges are far removed from most homes, and present a different problem. The custom of bringing religious instruction in from the outside in State schools, while I heartily favor it, has not yet proven its ability to give the Christian atmosphere to such institutions, so necessary to the steadying of the conviction to give one's life to all-time Christian service. If the future proves it able to do this, the solution of our problem may be in that direction. At present, we should, on this point, maintain the attitude of the open mind.

UNWISE CHARITY.

One of the most difficult obligations for Christians to discharge is charity; and yet, this is a field in which the largest service is rendered with the least consideration. It is certainly a Christian duty to help the needy, and "ye have the poor always with you." There is one thing about worthy duties, they are perpetual. We never get to the end of Christian service until we get to the end of life; hence, it is said: "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." Help for the needy is clearly revealed in the Scripture. "Whoso hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" "He laid down His life for us; and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren." If we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren, certainly we ought to divide our livelihood with the unfortunate. That word "seeth," as used in John, means more than hearsay or casual observation. As the doctor examines the sick person as well as listens to the complaint, so it is the business of the Christian to investigate the case to "see" that the brother has need. Most of the charity is done in a small way, without investigation, and without much thought, in which case neither is benefitted as they should be; for, when charity is thoughtfully and prayerfully bestowed, it proves what the Bible teaches that "it is more blessed to give than to receive."

If charity were more wisely administered, it would prevent imposters, and more completely relieve human want. True charity requires just as much consideration as any business. The waste in the field of charity is enormous. By such methods as most of us use, the kingdom loses its standing and improvidence and destitution are increased. Charity organizations have increased the number of thriftless people and want. The professional beggar cultivates nickle giving where bread, fuel and clothes ought to be given to the really destitute. A Christian gives a dime and passes on and never thinks of the matter again. If he would investigate the case, he would give a dollar or nothing. There is ignorance on both sides. The one who appeals for help thinks others have more than they possess; the giver is just as ignorant of the necessity which he thoughtlessly helps. Diagnosis is as important in charity as in disease. Often the remedy needed is work—good, honest work by a man who keeps out of sight while his family pours pathetic appeals for help into sympathetic ears more tender than thoughtful. No institution is imposed upon more than the Church. The beggars of the world hang around her doors. There is no field where there is more waste than in the field of charity; yet it is the field of largest opportunity to manifest the spirit of Jesus Christ. Christian charity, after careful investigation, is a great work. It blesses those who give and those who receive. It might not strain the teaching too much to extend this principle beyond "this world's goods" to all human relations, and help those who are in need of prayer, of friendship, of hope, and to divide our spiritual prosperity with those without hope and without God in the world.

KEEPING OBLIGATIONS.

An obligation may be moral or legal, or it may be both. A legal obligation may be written or it may be assumed in the presence of witnesses. A moral obligation goes deeper and is without written form or personal witness. A large part of human activity is in the keeping or the discharge of obligations. Obligations may be imposed or self-chosen. Taxes are imposed by the State; donations are voluntary. The origin of the obligation does not determine the binding force of the debt. The payment of taxes, of bills at store, subscriptions for papers and magazines, of subscriptions to eleemosynary institutions, pledges to Churches, and many other promises are all in the nature of discharging obligations. No doubt, moral obligations are more binding than legal obligations. The legal obligation is more easily proved; the moral obligation is seen more clearly by God, and the heart is more conscious of it than the head.

The most conspicuous example of a moral obligation is revealed in the history of Ananias and Sapphira, his wife. Under the spell of the Holy Spirit, the early Christian Church was moved to sell all they possessed, and so use the proceeds that no member of the Church would lack. By voluntary act, the members sold their lands and houses, laid the money at the apostles' feet, and distribution was made to individuals as they had need. Joses, a Levite and of the country of Cypress, sold his land and laid the money at the apostles' feet. No member was compelled to sell and give. It was a voluntary act under the impulse of a generous spirit to share with others what they possessed. Ananias and his wife Sapphira sold a possession and kept back part of the price. They failed to do what was implied in their act. The Holy Spirit revealed the deception to Peter, and he said that they had lied to the Holy Ghost. The land was theirs. The price for which the land was sold was theirs. But they had joined other members, outwardly, in this contribution of all for the use of all, and failed to keep faith with their own hearts. The result was death. Both suffered death for not doing what the act implied. A pledge, whether spoken, written, or implied, is a very solemn thing. The fulfillment of pledges is a binding obligation on mankind.

France through children and grandchildren that

A voluntary pledge leaves no room for ignoring its claims as long as ability to meet remains. It is bad enough to make no vows, no promises, no pledges; but it is infinitely worse to make pledges and not keep them. The vows at the marriage altar, the vows at the altar of the Church, the pledges made to the State and the Church, all require the sacred discharge of them, unless inability makes it impossible. There is nothing more sacred than voluntary obligations. There is nothing so satisfactory in human experience as the faithful discharge of the smallest, as well as the largest, pledge made to man or God. Compulsion is made in the fulfillment of legal obligations. There is no compulsion in moral obligations, but is all the more binding because moral obligations are voluntary.

WHAT DID DEFENSE DAY ACCOMPLISH?

By Rev. R. F. Brown.

National Defense Day, which was born in the mind of General Pershing, thrust upon the American people by the War Department under the guise of a patriotic demonstration, and participated in by many well-meaning but overzealous American citizens, was a farce. It did not show a single thing that the War Department and the people of America did not know before the demonstration. According to reports from the War Department, the test showed that the total number of regular army troops mustered for the day was 92,581; the national guard numbered 167,633, and the organized reserves numbered 59,168; the total being 319,382. The War Department could have given the nation this information six months ago if there had been a demand for it.

But other figures were given to the press of the country after Defense Day which were too obvious to admit of argument, even before the test was applied. The papers state that probably two million people participated in the demonstration during the day. What a wonderful revelation! Contrast this with the number who took part in the demonstrations during the World War—when there was need for such demonstrations—and the weakness of the test will be seen.

The folly and weakness of the plan are revealed in the fact that the defense system, as carried out September 12th, has absolutely no possible training value. How could a voluntary army of two million men be benefited by the one day's demonstration? There was no effort to drill these men, or inform them regarding military procedure. One of the points of scheme's weakness is revealed in the fact that it lasted for one day only. Such a performance could be of no training value to the regular army troops, the national guard, the organized reserves, or the citizens who volunteered. From that standpoint alone it was the biggest piece of folly ever thrust upon the American people.

Again, the plan was of no value as a test of speed with which the reserves might be assembled, or the citizens mobilized in the event of an emergency, for the reason that the date and all the arrangements were announced far in advance. This could not be true in the event of an emergency. This was not the case in the last war, and yet the people responded by the millions to the call of the country. This is a fact well known to every school boy.

A further weakness is revealed in the fact that the test system was no demonstration of the mobilization of anything like all the elements of the nation, both personnel and material, because only a few of the people were assembled and none of the nation's resources. Again I ask the reader to contrast this with the efficient and rapid assembling of both personnel and material in the last war. This nation surprised the whole world with its speed in assembling men and material. The world is still wondering how we did it; and this amazement is caused by the fact that the world does not know the real heart of the American people and their willingness to respond to the nation's call. But that is one of the chief glories of the true American citizen. The true American has never halted or been slow to respond when the nation needed him. He never will!

The plans for the test system were dependent on State and local desires and were, according to President Cooledge, intended to be purely voluntary. The reserves and the citizens were simply invited out, not ordered out, and there was no penalty for failing to respond. It was, therefore, no test of the War Department's ability to control the organization. The very liberal estimate has been made that two million people responded. What did the other one hundred and ten million people do about it? Can anybody say that they are not patriotic? The whole thing proves conclusively that the great majority of the people had sense enough to know that there was no real need for such a demonstration.

The demonstration was not efficient in any manner. There was everything but efficiency. Had the plan been efficient, every village, town, and community would have been organized for the test. But in the manner in which the thing was conducted, there were scores of towns and communities that seemingly knew nothing about such a test, and others knew about it only to laugh about it. And the stupidity of the thing was enough to awaken mirth.

There was an evil suggestion in the time set for the demonstration. It was staged at the time the League of Nations was in session at Geneva. Such a coincident, whether intended or accidental, served to raise suspicion among other nations. It came at the very time the nations of Europe were engaged in a solemn effort to formulate a plan whereby they could co-operate in the worthy work of preventing another war. To them, the test revealed the fact that this nation is willing to spring to arms on the slightest pretense, in spite of the fact that the other nations are sick of war and are now ready to promote an organization for world peace. It will also be interpreted by other nations as a war gesture. Japan protested against it by promoting "Peace Day." And yet we are sending missionaries to Japan. Shame on us!

Granting that the whole movement was intended only as a test of the elements of this nation, both personal and material—it did not reveal either—it is now absolutely impossible to convince the other nations that this was the only purpose of the movement. Even the people of America do not agree as to the purpose of it. To some, it served to demonstrate the fact that there are in this nation thousands of officers who delight in military ceremonies for their own sake. There are still others who think of it only as a revelation of the sad truth that we have in this country thousands of people who are willing to put on a uniform under the slightest pretense and assemble for war when there is no emergency or no desire to promote war.

The test movement served no good purpose in strengthening our confidence and pride in our military equipment, nor convinced the world of the greatness of our military defensive preparations. Instead of the movement strengthening those opinions, it weakened them. The world knows now that the movement did not unify our opinion and cause us to think as one people regarding military preparation. We are hopelessly divided on this question. And the test system was a unifying movement that did not unify.

The movement was a direct thrust at all the work the Church has done the last six years toward world peace. If, tor no other reason, the Christian people of this nation should be opposed to it because it is contrary to the theory and ideal that we have been teaching for these many years. We have been teaching and working and organizing for world peace, and if this plan is made an annual occurrence it will render impotent and useless our efforts in the direction of world peace and a common brotherhood. Long enough the Church has been silent on these issues. Long enough the Church has stood idly by and watched the heartless profiteers make their demands on the government for an organization looking toward war. Long enough the Church has silently watched this nation obey these demands and organize for war. It is high time for the Church to lift her voice in protest against this thing and unite in a demand upon our government that it take some definite step in an effort to organize the nation for world peace, and urge the nation to refrain from inaugurating any military policy, such as Defense Day, that vitiates the sacrificial work of our boys in France who fought to prevent future wars, and renders absolutely useless the work of the Church toward world peace.

Plenty of Preachers, but Low Standards.

Dr. Robert L. Kelly, working under the auspices of the Institute of Social and Religious Research of New York, has dispelled the widespread belief that there is a shortage of Protestant ministers. He points out that there are plenty of ministers, but that many of them are mediocre men, not competent to carry on seminary study. After an exhaustive investigation of theological seminaries in this country and Canada, Dr. Kelly arrives at the conclusion that many of them cannot qualify as educational institutions. The results of his study are published in a volume of 450 pages under the title, "Theological Education in America."

The report goes on to say that there are nine thousand theological students in the United States, or one for every 2,600 Church members. An analysis of the records of seven thousand five hundred of these students shows that less than half of them hold college degrees. High school graduation as an entrance requirement is not even listed in some of the 161 seminaries studied.

In regard to the failure of these seminaries "to set and enforce high, or even approximately uniform, entrance requirements," the report states: "Relatively few seminaries scrutinize carefully the academic preparation of incoming students in terms of standards usually prevailing elsewhere. Many of the men not only do not have the previous training usually demanded—they do not have the native ability to carry on successfully so important a task as that of a minister. They are often mediocre men. In many cases they are men who have failed at other kinds of work."

This report from Dr. Kelly is a glaring indictment of the ministerial students of America, and of the seminaries. The Church ought to, and must, insist on adequate preparation on the part of the ministers who are to fill its pulpits. The ministry is one of the most, if not the most, strategic positions in civilization, and such a task as is the minister's demands training and skill. We do not need mediocre men in the pulpit. We need men who can think and who can hold their own beside physicians, lawyers, and well-trained business men. Seminaries whose standards are so low ought to be put out of business or made to measure up to modern educational requirements by the Churches who will not have untrained and mediocre men in their pulpits.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Mrs. Nora J. Ellis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank W. Rawles, was born November 24, 1866, and died at her home near Cypress Chapel, in Nansemond County, Va., September 20, 1924. She was married to Thomas J. Ellis on July 9, 1885. Her husband died October 26, 1919. She was the mother of twelve children—eight daughters and four sons, all living. Four of the girls married, as follows: Eva Irene married Charles E. Smith, and they have two sons, Ralph E. and Charles W.; Lily May married W. B. Vaughn, two children: Bruce, Jr., and Elsie May; Essie Maud married Marvin Vaughn, and they have two children: Elizabeth J. and Thomas G.; Sarah Blanch married Leroy Barrett, and they have one child, Leroy Thomas.

The following are unmarried: Ellen N., Thos. F., Daisy L., Julia B., Grace I., Frank R., James J., and Clarence H. All of the children are members of the Church. Nine are members of Cypress Chapel Christian Church, of which their parents were faithful members; one is a member of Suffolk Church; one of Oakland Christian Church, and one a member of the Methodist Church at Newsom.

Two brothers survive her—C. F. and R. L. Rawles. The family resided on a farm on the Meadow Road, where home was home and family ties were sweet and strong. Taken all and in all, I have never known a family more genuine in its domestic and religious life than this large household. Unpretentious environment, unassuming in associations, simple in sincere faith in Jesus Christ, devoted in all family relations, it was a model country home, with a faithful Christian mother. Solomon gives us a picture of Mrs. Ellis. "She looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness. Her children arise up and call her blessed."—Prov. 31:27, 28.

The funeral services were held at the home on Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock, September 22d, with a large attendance of sympathizing friends, who had brought a room full of flowers. Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, pastor of Suffolk Church, read the Scripture; Rev. J. M. Roberts, pastor of Cypress Chapel, offered prayer; the choir sang "Asleep in Jesus," "Abide With Me," "Some Time We'll Understand"; Dr. Staley said a few words, Dr. Johnson sang "The Old Rugged Cross," and the service was concluded at the grave with "The Sweet By-and-By" and prayer by this writer.

This sketch is given as a genuine sample of a genuine Christian home in these days, when so many are saying and writing that the "old-fashioned home has passed away." Home is the altar of Christianity, the fountain of character, the bulwark of the State, the throne of purity and love.

A NEW EMPHASIS.

By CHARLES L. GOODELL,

Secretary Federal Council's Commission on Evangelism.

To further the spirit of worship and devotion, many denominations are uniting to stress the period from October 5th to Easter as a period of emphasis on Church attendance and enlistment for Church membership. The first Sunday in October is to be observed as rally Sunday, this date being suggested by the Federal Council of the Churches because it had already been decided upon by more than one denomination. On that date, it is recommended that from all our pulpits a message be sent forth, by lips that burn with the ardor of it, which shall remind the people that man does not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. It will be a challenge to the ministers of America to realize that a waiting community is hanging upon their word, not asking simply for a human message, but inquiring, "Is there any message from the Lord?" They do not want to see a little man and hear only a human message; they want to hear a message from the heart of God and see Jesus only. A service that meets this need will arouse the dullest heart and bring back to the careless and indifferent the challenge which they felt in the days when life was young and holy impulses filled their souls.

One of the methods especially urged in this movement is a systematic plan in the local Churches for the friendly visitation of the entire community by Christian men and women whose hearts the Lord has touched. These visitors will welcome back those who have been away during the summer, will urge those who have become indifferent to the Church to return, and invite those outside into its fellowship. In many cases, they are to go out, two by two, as the first seventy were sent, and they will have the same note of achievement as that which gladdened the Master's heart.

In the days when the open saloon filled the land—a day which, thank God, our children can hardly remember—there used to be a sign over the side door, "Family Entrance." Let us take that sign off the saloon and put it on the Church door. Let the children and the old folks walk into the house of God together. Let them fill the family pew as in the old days. It will give us a sense of solidarity—a sense of united purpose—in spiritual things, of which we have been losing sight.

It is easy for men to drift, to go with the crowd, to travel in the line of least resistance, to do the things which require least of purpose and conviction. So it has happened that in the winter it was too cold to go to Church; in the summer it was too hot; in the spring it was too wet, and the golden days of autumn challenged men to the golf links and the fields. So the days passed and the sense of worship and of duty atrophied the life was one round of the secular with no touch of uplifting forces to break the cordid ties of a selfish life.

It is to challenge the average man that this movement is being put on foot by those who love the Church. The Church of God ought to be the dearest place on earth to any man, outside of his own home. If he had any Christian training at all, he himself was dedicated to God in his infancy. At the altars of the Church he took the most solemn pledge which human lips can utter, and when he chose the dearest heart on earth to be his own, he stood with her at the altars of the Church and asked the benediction of God, at the hands of God's minister, to rest upon a new life; and when his own little children came, if he had not utterly forgotten the training of his youth, he also dedicated them to God. And if, in the passing of the years, the orange blossoms changed to immortelles and the wedding march to a funeral dirge, he halted his dead for a little time at God's altar before he carried the sacred dust to God's care. One would think that a Church consecrated by such memories would be a dear and sacred thing, and that no man would turn from it unless direst necessity forced him to.

Here is an institution connected with the most sacred things of life. Let us make men see that they cannot shirk it nor ignore it without being incalculably poorer for such slight. The greatest of scientists lost his love for music and poetry because he ignored them, and any man who plays fast and loose with the holiest things of the soul will grow poorer and poorer thereby in those values which are infinitely greater than those current in the market place.

Now, as of old, men will find the answer to prayer in a changed countenance. Life seems different with the eternal in view. Many a man in God's sanctuary has felt the iron leave his soul, and the breath of new hope and cheer has brought him solace and stirred him to a nobler life. Can anything be bigger business than the cultivation of such an attitude in the minds of men?

THE HENDERSON CHURCH.

Our Henderson Christian Church has recently completed a week of daily vacation Bible school, of which it is justly proud, having had a total enrollment of one hundred and an average attendance of seventy-three. We considered ourselves fortunate in securing as our helpers Miss Essie Mae Cotton, of Greensboro, N. C., who had charge of the handwork department, and our field secretary, Miss Pattie Coghill, who had classes in Bible, and led our morning devotional service. We also had as teachers several of our Sunday School teachers of the local Church, and several of the older girls of the Sunday School were interested in helping where possible.

On the Sunday morning following the school, commencement exercises were held, at which time the work done during the week was exhibited. Each class in Bible gave a specimen of the work accomplished. Some gave memory verses, some showed ability in verse-finding, while others gave Bible history, answered questions put to them, etc. The songs learned in the school were sung at this time. All had learned the "Bible Song" and many others; also there were appropriate songs for the different departments. Miss Cotton then gave a short talk on the work of the school, its aims and ideals, and had one of the tiniest beginners present blotters, neatly made, to the deacons of the Church, the Sunday School Superintendent and the pastor, this work being representative of that department.

Following a presentation of the flag drill, those present were invited to visit the Sunday School class-rooms, where the handwork was on display. The intermediate girls had made and hung nine pairs of curtains, with draperies, these being for the windows of the class-rooms. The intermediate boys had screened three windows of the Church, and had made a sand table for the beginners' class-room, which was fixed to represent the story of Moses in the bulrushes. Scrapbooks, doll-houses, vases, paper flowers, puzzles, mounted pictures, and cut-outs of all kinds were done by the junior, primary and beginner departments. All of this work was presented to our junior Christian Endeavor superintendent for distribution to sick boys and girls, thus carrying out the motto of the school—"Working for Others."

All of the handwork had been done as a big secret, and both parents and friends seemed delighted on the morning of its disclosure. The children enjoyed the school from start to finish, every one in attendance or in speaking of it seemed highly enthusiastic, and we are hoping for a bigger, better and longer school next year.

PISGAH HONORS FORMER PASTOR.

A very beautiful memorial service was held at Pisgah last Sunday at 11 o'clock for their beloved pastor, Rev. J. W. Elder. Bro. Elder moved to the community about nine years ago, and by his straightforward Christian living he won the affection of all the people. He found no Church of his own denomination with which to worship, so he attended other services, but always with the spirit of co-operation and brotherly love, preaching at such times and places as convenience would afford. Four years ago, there being a demand for an organization of the Christian Church, the same was effected and a good building erected. The first service was held in the new building four years ago the first Sunday in September; the writer assisted in the revival the week following.

Since that time, the work has made steady gain in influence and membership, now having fifty-six members on the roll. During the revival meeting this year, and on August 13th, he was taken seriously ill and was rushed to the hospital at Chattanooga, Tenn. Though an operation was not performed, he passed away on the 23d. The Church was as a sheep without a shepherd. While it has been suspected that now the local organization would become scattered under present conditions, yet they have set themselves to the task, with a determined resolution that such shall not be the case. So, with a small appropriation, the work will be cared for and other places organized in the near future.

By an urgent invitation from the Church, your humble scribe went to conduct the memorial services and to preach while there. During these services we received six members, and prospects are good for others later. One could not attend the memorial services without being impressed that it pays, in large dividends, to live right, and that it pays in every walk of life. Such expressions as "I never saw a questionable deed," "I never saw a crooked step," "I never heard an unkind word," "He was honest," "He was such a help to me" came from those in business, of the Church, of the community, among the old and the young. It was a very fine service, indeed.

Rev. J. H. Hughes will go and preach for them at their next regular service, which will take care of them till Conference. Then arrangements will be made for the work during next year. This is a fine community; the lands are fertile and productive, and a fine promise is to our work in this section. E. M. CARTER.

REVIVALS.

Cypress Chapel.

The home-coming service at Cypress Chapel was a great success. We had an all-day service and an immense gathering of members and friends, who shared with us the pleasure of the occasion. Luncheon was served in abundance. Mr. and Mrs. Sam Davis were with us and furnished excellent music.

In the afternoon, Lieutenant-Governor West delivered a stirring address, which was enjoyed by all present. He gave, in part, the history of Cypress Chapel, which was informational as well as inspirational. At 8 o'clock P. M. the evangelistic campaign opened, and continued for one week. Congregations were very large from the beginning and the interest was fine. Many professions were made and nine additions to the Church accepted.

Oak Grove.

We left Cypress the fifth Sunday afternoon for Oak Grove, where revival services were begun. Interest here was good, congregations very large, and indeed a mighty revival was on. We had eighteen accessions to the Church and many more conversions.

Eure.

We opened the revival at Eure on the first Sunday A. M. in September. This was a great meeting in many ways—great because of the great multitude that attended; great because the great God came in great power. There were twenty-four additions to the Church. The three weeks added fifty-one members to the three Churches. Each Church was much revived; for all of which we give God the glory.

Mr. and Mrs. Sam Davis were with us at each Church. I regard them as a great asset in evangelistic services. They play and sing with the spirit, and the three congregations were highly pleased with their labor in every respect. It is unfortunate that more of our Churches do not use them. They will surely render the service if we will give them an opportunity.

A NEW FIELD FOR HOME MISSIONARY.

By Frances L. Garside.

It happens more times than the world knows that a woman leaves the city to make her home in some isolated section, leaving all the city stands for in lectures, concerts, public libraries, opera, and the constant rubbing together of minds concerned with public affairs. She goes to a section on the map (you would be surprised to learn how numerous they are) where the only connection with the world is found in the rural mail carrier's sack.

But friends write less often as time passes, and less often do they discuss what the world is thinking, taking the attitude that the isolated one has been gone so long "she wouldn't know what we are writing about." The isolated one would like to know; having more time to think, she would think more, and this thinking would affect her neighbors, for a man cannot lift himself up, not even by his boot-straps, without lifting up some one near him, or at least jog them awake.

The Young Women's Christian Association has come to the aid of these who are pioneering in the lonely places by the formation of a corresponding membership course. The lonely one becomes a corresponding member, and this pours out to her the literature that her mind hungers for. She renews her interest in the world; she begins to see the insignificance of those local happenings that had threatened for a time to engulf her. As she is affected, so are her neighbors. It is a plan which brings first aid to the hungry-minded. Though established less than a year ago, it has found members in the rural sections of the country all the way from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from North Dakota to Texas.

DR. D. A. LONG AT DEDICATION.

Recently the town of Franklinton, N. C., received a great gift—that of a $300,000 high school building, erected and donated through the generosity of one of its own citizens, Mr. S. C. Vann. When the building was presented, all finished and ready for use, on Monday, September 8, 1924. The Franklinton News of September 11th says:

The Rev. Dr. Daniel A. Long, veteran of eighty-odd years, led the devotional exercises after the audience had sung "Praise God, from Whom all Blessings Flow." The Rev. Long said:

"I congratulate the Board of Education on the employment of such an able faculty. Teaching has three objects. First, the communication of knowledge; second, the stimulating of the activity of the student; third, the development of character.

"Men make wealth by their thoughts as well as by their hands. A Morse dreamed out telegraphy; Stephenson, locomotive traction; Edison, speaking by, and Marconi, without, wire. The world has hundreds of millions of wealth in all.

"While going through this splendid building, I thought of Psalms xcvi:6: "Strength and beauty are in His sanctuary.' Keep it strong and beautiful While going through the Durfee High School building, Fall River, Mass., I could not find a single mark of any kind defacing its walls. It was the gift of Mrs. Durfee, erected at a cost of $750,000, and has been in use for more than twenty years.

"Boys and girls, for you I am glad, I am glad, I am glad. With you is the bright and breezy morn of life. A long and happy day, I trust, is before you—carpe diem. Like the morning of the natural day, may the morning of your long lives begin with devotion to the great Giver of good. When our beloved land is filled with such a rising generation, like the Island of Megera, upon which the harp of Apollo was placed, it will resound with the songs and praises of a prosperous and happy people.

"The happy spirit of Mrs. Vann looks down upon us today from her celestial home. Let us, with bowed heads, unite with Bro. Dowell in repeating, from lip and heart, the prayer the Master taught us."

A CHRISTIAN EDUCATION PILGRIMAGE.

By Hermon Eldredge.

XIII. FRANCE.

We were up and about early the next day, for our party, which had been together since we left America for the Glasgow World's Convention, was to divide today at Geneva, some going on to Palestine and the rest of us through France and the battlefields and to Paris and home to the U. S. A.

We had a hurried 6 A. M. good-by at the Central Station, and returned to our hotel to leave on a later train for France, Dr. Athearn and his family accompanying us.

But here I must say a word for our wonderful location at Geneva. Ours was the Grand Hotel Bellevue, situated on President Wilson Avenue, which borders the beautiful turquois lake and only a square from the Palace of the Nations. It was only six weeks before we arrived that they had changed the name of the street in honor of the one who conceived the League and who gave his life for it—so Europe believes, and so does our band of pilgrims at least. My own room in the hotel was shared with a fellow-pilgrim from Missouri, and they accuse him of looking like President Coolidge, and me like William Jennings Bryan. We were distinguished guests. We were on the ground floor, in wonderful apartments, with Woodrow Wilson Avenue at our windows and the Wilson drive and the turquois lake before us. The mountains, with snow-white Mt. Blanc in the distant background, were in clear view. Our hotel interpreter asked us how far we thought it was to Mt. Blanc, and although it really looked to be only three to five miles at the most from us, yet I had learned something of the Alps and distance in the past few days, and thought I would be safe and wise, and so I guessed it was twenty-five miles away. He then gravely informed me that it was just about fifty miles, and I had to believe him in spite of the sight of my eyes, which said it was not possible; but when I saw the train schedule of almost two hours before climbing begins, I thought I had rather take his word than to go out to disprove it.

But you never can tell about these trains in Europe, and sometimes the waits are most tedious. They begin the day at midnight on the continent, and instead of going back to 1 o'clock afternoon, they keep right on until it is 24 o'clock at midnight again. At one stop in Belgium we had waited and waited, when a station man came out and put up a sign, reading: "The next train to Metz 19:37," which would be, of course, what we would call 7:37 P. M. But an irrepressable wag in our party who was tired to death with our waiting, insisted on asking whether this next train to Metz was 1937 A. D., for if it was B. C. there was no use of our waiting longer, as it had gone by.

But the Swiss trains are better, and we soon found ourselves at high noon within the borders of France, and a new set of good-natured customs officers and passport examiners who put us through in quick order with French politeness and a smile.

The farms and fields of France were a moving picture before our eyes as we viewed the panorama from our train compartment. The country itself, with its streams and fields and hills, was much like our American Middle West, especially reminding one of Iowa and Missouri scenery, while England had seemed more like New England; Belgium was like Pennsylvania and Southern Ohio; Switzerland more like Colorado and the Rockies, and Holland like no land we had ever seen.

But there were differences from our American scenery on this French landscape. First, all the houses were of stone, and not the frame structures we see in the States. Then there were the old-fashioned wells and the lack of farm machinery as we know it. But most of all was the crops and their way of planting them until they look like a great checker-board upon the distant hills. In our western country we know what great wheat and corn fields are, and even in the East and South we have fields of five to fifty acres of wheat or oats, or corn or cotton. But in France they farm differently. They will take what we might call a twenty-acre field, which is their whole farm, and with no fences they will plant squares or stretches of from one to three acres of wheat, oats, potatoes, cabbage, chard, beets, peas, flowers and sometimes a small fodder corn. I counted thirteen crops in one field which could not have been over twenty acres, with no fences and only a ditch for separation at the roadway. They tell me that in this way one man can run his own farm without help except for his women-folks, who often are in the fields. The different crops can be planted or sowed at different times, and they come to harvest in such rotation and the amount is so small that a man with rake and cradle, or with hoe, as the case may require, can be independent of any one but his own household for both seed time and harvest work.

But another explanation is that the different patches in the larger field or farm belong to different farmers. When a man dies, he leaves his twenty or thirty-acre farm to his two or ten children, and they each take a patch, or strip, or square, until the farms are so subdivided in a law has been passed that there cannot be further division without special permit or legislation. It is actually true that some "farms" have become so small as not to be over ten feet wide by these divisions and subdivisions. This is possible in France and not with us because the children are born and live and die on the same farm, and the old houses are built with stone walls three and often four feet thick. One old Frenchman told me of his house with walls of stone, fully four feet thick, and built before Columbus discovered America.

We traveled, in all, over a thousand kilometers or French miles in France, and saw its present condition six years after the close of the World War. Southern and Western France was not devastated directly by the war, but had awful loss of man power. Northern and Eastern France cannot recover from the loss in men and treasure, and desolated land and timber, and wasted cities in fifty years. The worst havoc we witnessed at one point was about Rheims, which was fought over for four full years, until its 117,000 population dwindled by death and by refugees to 15,000 living in cellars and dugouts, and not a habitable place in this once beautiful city. And now after six years of labor, the city looks a hundred times worse than Dayton did when I was there six days after the flood had subsided. Think of Dayton, or Norfolk, or Erie, or Albany, or one of our American cities of one hundred thousand or more, battered to the ground and its inhabitants killed or scattered a hundred ways and homeless. Today they live in old barracks once used by the soldiers, and in makeshift shops and stores, while the city is still full of ruins and rubbish.

A day in this section, and in Belleau Wood, and along the Marne was a hard one for me. Hundreds of the boys I knew in the officers' training camp at Fort Niagara, the regular army camp at Syracuse, and Pine Plains, and among the drafted boys at Camp Upton now sleep in that Belleau Wood cemetery where the crosses stretch row on row and poppies bloom where their blood was shed. Oh, how it made me hate war, and pray for the day of peace which seems so far, far away from the thought of these lands.

We followed the historic Marne to Chateau-Tierry and drove along the drive of our American troops there until it seemed to me a crime and a desecration to be mere "sightseers" on such holy ground. I seriously thought and planned to go on to Paris before we were half over the battlefields, but I am now glad I was unable to arrange it, for the sight of the trenches and the hill and dale and wood scenes of the fighting of these boys I knew has put a scar on my soul which will, please God, make me realize more than I otherwise could the debt we owe to them and the duty which lies before us.

"So you'll live, you'll live,
Young fellow, my lad,
In the light of each evening star,
In the wood-note wild
And the laughter of the child,
And in all the good things that are.

"And you never will die,
My wonderful boy,
While life is noble and true,
For all of our beauty and hope and joy
We owe to our lads like you."

There was no need for a lecture by Dr. Athearn or any one after the battlefields. They told their own sad and wonderful story which our words but weaken. God speed the day when the spirit of the "Christ of the Andes" shall be a world spirit.

OUR PLEDGES
Men and Millions Sacred, Solemn and Binding.

These obligations were made through the Church to the Kingdom of God and to all that pertains to building up that Kingdom in the world, so far as our Christian Church is concerned. As Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., has so pertinently pointed out: "A Christian can no more drop his pledges than he can drop his prayers or his Church membership. Misfortune may make it impossible to meet financial obligations--'When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both' (Luke 7:42)--but not till 'they had nothing to pay.' Obligations to God are as binding as obligations to men, and God will help those who try to keep their pledges."

Many are making great sacrifices to meet these obligations and pay these pledges. Is your Church on this list? If not, let's do our best to get it there. If there, let's get it in first place.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

DEVOTIONAL MEDITATION.

"The Lord is in His holy temple; let all the earth keep silence before Him."—Heb. 2:20.

"To the Lord our God belong mercies and forgiveness, though we have rebelled against Him; neither have we obeyed the voice of the Lord our God to walk in His laws which He set before us."—Dan. lx. 9:10.

"Seeing that we have a great High Priest, that is passed into the heavens, Jesus the Son of God, let us come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need."—Heb. 45:14-16.

"Come ye, and let us walk in the light of the Lord. And He will teach us of His ways, and we will walk in His paths."—Isa. 11:5-3.

"Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, which was and is, to come."—Rev. 45:8.

"Hear my prayer, O Lord, and consider my desire; hearken unto me for Thy truth and righteousness sake."—Psa. 143:1.

Prayer.—O Master of life and God of our salvation, we are making bold this day to enter the holy of holies, even the life and mind of Thy dear Son. Fill us with reverence and awe. Fasten our attention on things that are high and eternal. Keep us from the profanity of wandering thoughts and the frivolity of surface thinking. Help us this day to live with Jesus and to think with Jesus, so that in the coming days our eyes may refresh those with whom we live and work; set our hearts on fire with the desire to know Thy blessed will, and make us men after Thine own heart, O God, through Jesus Christ our Lord.—Chaplain A. R. Parker, U. S. N.

TUESDAY.

MEDITATION.

Lesson: 1 Kings 3:4-15.

How primary and how profound this story of the dream of Solomon. In our quiet moments (if we ever get any), we too dream of an understanding heart and a discerning faculty. Our heart's desire is to be of service and to give of our best to any; but O our best falls so far short of the needs of men.

We wish to know what to say to this one and to that one. What words shall I write in this letter? How must I replace all that is callous and profane with something better and ennobling?

Prayer.—O Lord, infinite in mercy, and whose goodness is everlasting, hear our prayer and turn us away from all that would separate us from Thee and make us love that which draws us to Thee. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

GREAT SERVICE THROUGH GREAT TBIBULATION.

"These are they which came out of great tribulation. Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve Him day and night in His temple."—Rev. 7:14-15.

Tribulation is a word that comes to us almost unchanged in its form from the ancients. It was the name used for a threshing-sledge which they used in separating the grain from the chaff by rubbing two planks together, in the underside of which were set stones or knives. It was terrible to pass through it, yet it was the best way known that the grain might serve man. Everything that serves us must pass through tribulation. A grain of wheat must be cut down, separated, put in bags, hauled to a mill, crushed, ground, sifted, mixed, worked, rolled and finally baked in the oven before it serves us. It passes through all sorts of trials, and then it serves. As with things, so with saints. We must pass through great tribulation if we would be of great service. Then, too, we ought to remember our tribulation is temporary, but our service is eternal.

Prayer.—Our Father, help us to understand that Thou art too wise to make any mistakes; that we are still the objects of Thy great love when we are passing through great trials, and are being prepared to serve Thee better here and in the world to come. In Jesus' name. Amen.—T. E. White.

THURSDAY.

ALLEGIANCE TO CHRIST.

Lesson: St. John 15:1-16.

Our only hope lies in reverent allegiance to the person of Christ, whose law is the law of love, in acceptance of His principles, and reliance on His power.

Words are too poor, logic fails us, before the mystery of the growing union between man and God, the mutual permeation and inheritance of the human and the divine, toward which and in which our natures strain.

Prayer.—Our Father, rule Thou our hearts, that we may seek and long for and possess Thee only. Make it our pain to lose Thee and our only gain to love Thee now and forevermore. Amen.

FRIDAY.

OUR GREATEST NEED.

Lesson: Jno. 17:1-6, 12-22.

The deepest need of our age is that we should have Christ's conception and sense of God. Whenever we have an overmastering sense of God, however inadequately conceived, we have power from our prayers and dream of dependence on God. From visions of power and achievements, we must always turn to our task, changing the face of things where needed, making rough places smooth, cutting down the grades, and filling in the gullies. When Constantine caught his first glimpse of Christianity, the religion of the empire was changed, and He sends us forth to change things for Him. It is said of Phillip Brooks, "When he came down the street, all was bright."

Prayer.—Father, for the love of Him who loves unto the end, and who, through our work, may see His dream for mankind fulfilled, sanctify us, we beseech Thee. Help us to live according to Thy liking, and crown Thy choice of us by making us worthy. Through Jesus Christ. Amen.

SATURDAY.

SINCE YOUR MIND IS UNDER CONTROL, USE IT TO THINK WORTHWHILE THINGS.

Perhaps for years you have been spending your thinking time, indulging such pleasure as children have when they imagine themselves great personages. As you lie in the hammock, or in your easy chair, resting and relaxing, what course does your mind pursue—to what does your mind revert?

Is it anything which an adult should think about? Is it not true that much of your thinking is done about subjects that you would be ashamed to talk of to your friends? How long have you been going along this way?

You may be like the one who wrote, pleading to be told of some means by which it could be made possible "to think of something useful and practical for half an hour."

Such a letter proved that the person had wasted time on trivial, foolish things, building air castles rather than planning how to make them come true. Are you going to follow such a course? Your mind is under your own control. Using its power increases its strength. Think worthwhile things. (Copyright, 1924, International Feature Service, Inc.)

SUNDAY.

O LORD, TEACH US TO PRAY.

For a continual sense of Thy abiding presence and Thy overruling guidance in our daily life.

For the illuminating grace of Thy holy Spirit, that we may be guided to use for Thee every power and every opportunity Thou hast given us. The best we have to the best we know.

For grace so to live in the light of Thy divine love for us that, loving Thee above all, we may give to others the sunshine of love which has its source in Thee alone. Within us, let there grow the spirit of our great Commanding Officer, our Lord, our Saviour and our dear Companion, and on our lips let us take His words, and say together: Our Father. Scatter every excuse of frailty and unworthiness in us. Consecrate us all with a heavenly mission. Open to us a clearer prospect of our work. Give us strength according to our day, gladly to welcome and gratefully to fulfill it, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Master of men, help us, as long as we live, to live nobly, to Thy praise, and to the good cheer of our fellow-men, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Support us, Lord, all the day long of this troublous life, until the shadows lengthen and the evening comes and the busy world is hushed, and the fever of live is over, and our work is done. Then in Thy mercy grant us a safe lodging and a holy rest, and peace at the last, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

The God of peace, who brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus Christ, the great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do His will, working in you that which is well pleasing in His sight, through Jesus Christ, to whom be glory forever and ever. Amen.—Chaplain A. R. Parker, U. S. N.

WAKEFIELD, VA.

On Monday, September 14th, we began our revival meeting at Burton's Grove. The weather was bad all during the early part of the week, as there was a constant downpour of rain, which affected the congregations to a large extent, for it does not take much rain in this part of the country to get the roads in a bad state for traveling over; but there were the faithful ones who came in spite of the rain and mud, who reconsecrated their lives to God, and when the weather did clear up (about Wednesday), and the crowds did begin to come, the Church was wide awake for service. Wednesday, Thursday and Friday found the Church filled to its overflowing, and particularly Friday night, for the house would in no wise contain the people who came.

There was a spirit in which God was speaking to hearts, and calling them to dedicate their lives to Him, and during the services twenty answered the call, some to reconsecrate their lives to God, but the most of them were unsaved, who testified to the saving grace of God; nearly all were grown young men and women. Out of the number, six has, up to date, united with this particular Church, and many of the others perhaps will in the near future.

Rev. W. H. Garman was with us and did the preaching. His messages were filled with the spirit of love for the unsaved, and were delivered with all the interest and enthusiasm of his soul and body. The Church was wonderfully revived by his messages. May God bless him in his faithful service, and may he be the means of saving many souls yet. It was a pleasure to work with him. J. C. DEARS:

This rainy weather is bad on little folks who want to go to school every day, and Sunday School on Sunday. But it is the very thing for Peter Rabbit and his Ma, for they are as happy as can be every time it rains. Yes, sir-ee! Aren't you surprised? When it rains, you have to put on a big raincoat, and a pair of overshoes, and take your Mamma's big ol' umbrella, and away you go to school; while Peter Rabbit— Oh, it's too funny! That dear, furry, little rabbit takes off his little shoes, and takes off his little red coat I told you about, and away he runs to school as fast as he can hoppity-skip. Oh, dear me! Don't you wish you were a little rabbit? Then you wouldn't ever have to clean your shoes, or quit falling in that ol' mud-puddle, just in front of the door, where you thought you could wade in, and not fall in!

Oh, dear! that makes me think of a game you can play indoors while it rains, and it's the bestest fun! Read on, down in the corner of our "Korner," and see if you like it.

Good-by, rainy dears! YOUR EDITOR.

A RAINY DAY.

(A Game for our Kiddies to Play.)

Skip around room—going out to play;
Look up at the clouds.
Blow clouds away—breathe in, breathe out.
Lightning—clap hands sharply.
Swaying of trees—bend your body right, then left.
Jump over mud-puddles—draw a large ring on the floor for the puddle.
Blow the clouds away.

Heads on him—an' chopped 'em off, too!
Wisht 'at I'd been Jack—don't you?

PETER RABBIT'S TRIP TO THE MOON.

It was a warm day on the green meadows, and Peter Rabbit was taking a nap in the tall grass, when he was awakened by a loud noise. He shook with fright. He did not know which way to run, so he stood still and listened, and again he heard the same noise. It sounded as if some one were hitting on a tree. After a while he heard something that sounded like the falling of a tree. The next thing he knew, he was covered with something that looked like a brush pile. It was a tree some wood cutters had cut down. It was their axes he had heard. He thought it would be a fine place to lie down and take a nap.

Soon a little bear came and said: "Do you want to go to the moon?"

"Yes," said Peter Rabbit; "but how will you get there?"

"Oh," said little Bear, "we will go up the Milky Way."

So when night came, they went up the Milky Way until they came to the moon.

Little Bear called to the Man in the Moon to open the door.

Soon Peter Rabbit heard a step, and it was the Man in the Moon. He opened the door and said, "Come in." So they went in and found themselves in a beautiful garden full of flowers.

Some were like stars. Some were like the sun, and others were like the Moon. Butterflies filled the air and birds sang in the trees.

Peter Rabbit thought he had never seen anything quite so beautiful before. They played tag and hide-and-go-seek till they were tired.

Then Little Bear said they must be going. They went to the Man in the Moon and asked him to open the door. But when he did they found that they had stayed all night and the Sun was up and the Milky Way was gone.

How could they ever get down? Little Bear said they could jump.

They both jumped at once. Down, down they fell. Just then Peter Rabbit woke up. He said, "I do not want to go to the Moon again."

Then he went home to tell Mother Cotton-Tail his dream. HAZEL SONGER.

A RIDDLE.

I like to row in the mud. I can squeal. I have short legs. I have a curley tail. I am greedy. What am I?

"YOU ARE RICH; YOU CAN WALK."

Yesterday a little crippled boy looked up at me wistfully from the white bed in the Hospital for Crippled Children. He said one thing that was worthy the insight of a philosopher. He played with my watch and pen, then asked for my pocket-book. He examined the few meager coins in it, and handed it back to me, saying, "You are rich."

When I denied being rich, he said: "Yes, you are rich—you can walk."

That little philosopher has never taken a step, but he knows that real riches are not in pocket-books, but in strong legs and well-formed bodies to do the work and play of life.

I think I shall always see his little pinched-up, white face, and whenever I feel inclined to grumble a bit, as we all do, I shall hear the pathetic tenor of his quivering little voice: "You are rich—you can walk."

Not long ago, Mr. Rockefeller, the world's wealthiest citizen, passed into his eighty-sixth year. I wonder if the oil magnate could have stood at that bed and offered that little boy all his riches, the little fellow would not have said: "Take your old gold, but give me rather a pair of good legs to walk upon."

Then I thought if some earth-favored mortal whose ships on the sea of life had brought home all the precious things for which mortals strive, could have stood there and made a proffer of it all to the boy to pay him for the loss of limbs, the little man would have said: "I'd rather run and walk and play in the sunshine than to be the richest king."

The common blessings of the earth are the richest. All else is tinsel in comparison.

Have you fair or good health, and can you run about? Thank God, and do not complain at little things again!

Have you the faith of loved ones? Then leave the dirge alone.

Have you sanity and the right use of mental powers? Then sing a song every day. Have you a task that's "high and open to the sun?" Then all the world is at your feet.

When life's clouds hang low and heavy, just take a peep at things through the eyes of the little crippled boy, and then thank God that you can walk—Dr. Holland.

A RIDDLE.

It has a face, but it cannot see. It has two hands—the hands are black. It can tell you the time. What is it?

JUSTIFIED BY RESULTS.

It is being generally accepted that the Republican and Democratic national platforms of this year, and the declared positions of the presidential candidates on law enforcement, practically settle prohibition as the future policy of the people and their government.

Nothing can unsettle prohibition but another constitutional amendment that would repeal the eighteenth. That such a repeal can be had is as unlikely as that Captain Bill Stayton will some soon day put out the fires of the sun with a flapper's perfumery squirt-bulb!

The solid status that has been established for national prohibition is more largely due to the Anti-Saloon League than to any other agency in the nation. As the shock-troops of the Christian Churches in America, operating militantly in fields where the Church itself, in its sacred character and sanctified robes, could not directly function, the Anti-Saloon League, in thirty years of increasing educational and political endeavor, stirred up the conscience of America and fired it with the enthusiasm that brought the nation-wide victory.

Now the liquorites demand that the league be abandoned because they say, "its mission is ended!" But is that so? Nobody can decide that but the Churches. What will the Churches answer?—Sam W. Small.

GENEROSITY DID NOT PAY.

Everybody is taught that kindness and generosity pays. Tom Peel, of Lexington, Ky., will deny that statement. Peel was traveling in an automobile and he was accompanied by a jug of liquor. He brought his car to a stop, and in full view of two officers, and took a drink from the jug. Then he offered the officers a drink. They refused, but being equally generous, extended an invitation to Peel to accompany them to the courthouse. The county judge fined Peel $100 and sentenced him to thirty days in jail.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

By H. S. Hardcastle.

MISS PATTIE COGHILL, Field Secretary, 11 East Newton St., Boston, Mass.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

October 12, 1924.

Subject: "The Sermon on the Mount."

Lesson: Matt. 5:7.

Devotional Reading: Psa. 65:9-13.

Reference Material: Luke 6:20-49.

Golden Text: "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done."—Matt. 6:10.

The Master has called His disciples to Him. He had summoned them to follow Him and to help Him in His work of kingdom-building. And now He tells them in this Sermon on the Mount about the ideal of character and of conduct that is binding upon those who have a part in that kingdom. It is to be noted that the Sermon on the Mount is not a creed, but a code. Its concern is not what men believe, but what they are and how they act. If Jesus had been obliged to give His topic or theme for this sermon, He might well have phrased it, "The character and conduct of citizens of the kingdom." That would have sounded better when it appeared in the press of Palestine—granting, of course, if it had had one, which it did not have—than some of the topics as announced in our current dailies.

The sermon can conveniently be divided into five divisions. (Many preachers dare not have over three divisions, but Jesus Christ spoke so plainly—"He opened His mouth," says Matthew—and there was such freshness and a note of authority in His teaching that the common people heard Him gladly.)

The first division is embodied in verses 3 to 16 of chapter 5. Its concern is with the character of the citizens of the kingdom. They are to be of humble spirit, meek, with a sense in need, merciful, pure, peaceable, and loyal to the kingdom at all costs. They were to rejoice that they were accounted worthy to enter into the fellowship of suffering of the prophets before them. As members of the kingdom, they had a distinctive mission. They were to be as lights, cheering, cleansing, guiding men; and as salt, a preservative element in human life. Their conduct was to reflect credit and glory upon the Heavenly Father.

The second section of the sermon (5:17-48) concerned the citizens of the kingdom and the law. Christ had come, not to destroy the law, but to fulfill it and to fill it full. The citizens of His kingdom were to obey the spirit of the law, and not the letter of it. In the realm of murder, adultery, divorce, oaths, and retaliation, they were to be governed not by what a policeman saw, but by an inner motive. It was not the outward act; it was the inner spirit that made an act right or wrong. And over and beyond all law, there was to be love, not only toward those who loved us, but even toward our enemies.

The third section deals with the citizens of the kingdom and worship (6:1-18). The principle here announced is that whatever form the worship might take outwardly, it must proceed from a spiritual motive within. Religious practices and observances were to be the expression of a heart that worshiped in spirit and in truth. This principle was applied to almsgiving, prayer—the lesson as printed deals with prayer—and fasting. It is to be noted that the model prayer which Jesus outlined was social—our Father, our daily bread, our debts. Men were not to hire a brass band to announce the fact that they had given a basket of provisions or a load of coal to a needy family. Neither were they to stand on the street corners to say their prayers, or to feign righteousness when they fasted. Better to be irreligious than to be insincere.

The fourth section deals with the citizens of the kingdom and material things (6:19-34). A man's life does not consist in the abundance of things he possesses, but in the finer qualities of mind and heart, in character. He is to see to it, therefore, that he lay up for himself such treasures. To attempt to serve God and mammon is as foolish as it is impossible. And lest men should become unduly concerned about material things, Jesus suggested that the Father knew they had need of them, and that He would supply their needs. It was their business to seek first, not second or last, His kingdom and its righteousness. Do God's will and trust Him.

The fifth and final section consists of some warnings and exhortations (7:1-27). The citizens of the kingdom were warned against judging one another—in judging others, they condemned themselves—against the sin of ingratitude; and against false prophets—they were to be known by their fruits. And the citizens were exhorted to ask, to seek, to knock. They were to do unto the other fellow as they would have the other fellow to do unto them, and to do it even if he did not do it. They were to avoid the line of least resistance and to pay any price for the character they must have. And finally, they were not to sit back and listen with smug satisfaction to these good words, but they were to go out and live and do them, and thus develop their own lives and serve the kingdom.

Folks sometimes go out of Church with the thought expressed or unexpressed, "Wasn't that a great sermon?" And then within a few days they forget it. But it was not thus with the Sermon on the Mount. Jesus spake with such authority that the people were astonished at His teaching, and His sermon made such an indelible impression on their minds and hearts that they preserved it, so that we have it even to the present day. Surely this man was the Son of God.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

By Wm. T. Scott.

October 12, 1924.

Topic: "My Denomination—Its History and Teachings."

Lesson Study: Acts 2:1-21.

The apostles, filled with the Holy Spirit, and speaking diverse languages, are admired by some, and derided by others whom Peter disproved and showed that the apostles spake by the power of the Holy Spirit, that Jesus was risen from the dead, ascended into heaven, had poured down the same Holy Spirit, and was the Messiah, a man known to them to be approved of God by His miracles, wonders, and signs, and not crucified without his determinate counsel and foreknowledge. "And it came to pass that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved." He baptized a great number that were converted. And, continuing in this same chapter, who afterwards devoutly and charitably converse together, the apostles working many miracles and God daily increasing His Church.

STATISTICS ABOUT GIRLS.

By Frances L. Garside.

What do girls read? Questionnaires submitted to the girls in industry attending five summer camps sponsored by the Young Women's Christian Association this summer, showed a large majority were "fans" for Gene Stratton Porter, with Harold Bell Wright and Zane Gray following. Dickens has not the popularity his works merit, according to these figures, but it is interesting to know that his works kept close pace with those of the author of "If Winter Comes," while a surprisingly small number—only eight, in fact—find enjoyment in reading the works of the author of "Main Street." Only one reads a physical culture magazine; only two read any of Mary Jane Holmes' works, as opposed to nine who had read "St. Elmo," which was in the height of its popularity some forty years ago.

Three hundred and nineteen always have a book in hand, and 160 reported that they do not read at all.

The ages of these girls averaged twenty-one at one camp, the same at another, twenty-two at one, the same at another, and eighteen at another, giving twenty as the average of the average. It might be distressing to learn that the average girl at Summit Lake Camp, in Central Valley, N. Y., left school when completing the eighth grade, at fourteen, if there was not so obvious the proficiency they have attained in their chosen vocations. It is evident they have gone to school after leaving it, with experience and ambition as the teachers.

A CONCERTED PLAN.

A special interdenominational movement in the interest of promoting Church attendance and enlisting for Church membership is being launched by the Federal Council's commission on evangelism. It is the outgrowth of the conference of the denominational secretaries of evangelism held under the auspices of the Federal Council of the Churches at Northfield, Mass., last June.

This undertaking is not simply a go-to-Church spasm. It is a systematic effort, covering a period of several weeks, to arouse a new interest in the Church, so that public worship shall have a larger place in our community life.

The program suggested by the Federal Council of the Churches includes the best features of various denominational programs. It can be changed to suit the special conditions in any denomination or community. The proposed outline, however, includes the following four points:

1. A friendly visitation of every home in the parish by the pastor or a representative of the Church, for the purpose of extending an invitation to attend its services and securing information concerning the needs of the family and the community at large.

2. A "Church Rally Sunday" (October 5th), with a sermon on the place of the Church in human life, and the importance of loyalty to its regular services of worship.

3. A special emphasis on the work of laymen in securing decisions for Christ and for entrance into the Church.

4. A fall ingathering of new members.

Shuddering is caused when the brain receives a sudden shock, and the heart momentarily ceases its function of pumping blood.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

The continued rains have hit the Orphanage farm hard in its hay crop. We cut fifteen acres while the weather was clear and hot, and about two days before it was cured enough to put in the barn, it began to rain, and it will be a total loss so far as feed is concerned. If we were the only one who has hay down we would feel we used poor judgment in mowing, but we find in traveling that lots of farmers have been caught, and some caught worse than we are. It always makes my heart sick to get our hay crop caught in the rain. If it was not for the fact that we have about ten more acres to mow yet, we would be blue indeed. We have no control of the rain, and have to use our best judgment as to when to try to cure hay. This time we got badly caught, and our loss will be heacy. Still, the rain is a great blessing, and while we will lose on hay, it is fine on our sweet potatoes and our late corn. The Lord knows best, and will provide, and we will trust Him.

REV. THOMAS J. FOWLER.

(Sketches of ministers, as presented in an address at Damascus Church, Orange, N. C., by Dr. W. C. Wicker.)

Rev. Thomas J. Fowler was born in the year 1800, and died November 20, 1878, in his seventy-eighth year. He married Aurelia O'Kelly, a granddaughter of Rev. James O'Kelly, and to them were born seven children. After the death of his first wife, he married a Mrs. Margaret Davis.

In 1828, he was licensed at the general meeting at Union, in Orange (now Alamance) County, to exercise his gifts in public exhortation "as the good Spirit may direct." He was assigned to "News (Neuse) River circuit." He was in attendance upon the general meeting, or Conference, at New Providence meeting-house, Orange (Alamance) County, N. C., in 1830. He was appointed to the Neuse River circuit, in North Carolina. He attended the general meeting at Lebanon, in Surry County, Va., in 1832, and was also present at the general meeting at Kedar, in Warren County, N. C., in 1833. He was at New Providence in 1834, and at O'Kelly's Chapel in 1836, and he was also at the general meeting at Pope's Chapel in 1848.

In 1841, at the Conference at Apple's Church, in Guilford County, he was appointed chairman of the committee on ordination, whose duty was to examine candidates for the ministry. He was also a delegate to the North Carolina Christian Conference, which later united with the North Carolina and Virginia Conference. At the Conference at Pleasant Grove, Randolph County, N. C., in 1843, he was on the presbytery with Revs. D. W. Kerr and Shubal G. Evans, which ordained Revs. John R. Holt and Ashbel S. Nelson. In 1844, at Hanks' Chapel, Chatham County, he was reappointed to represent this, the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference, and at the Conference at Apple's Chapel, in 1845, though absent, he was appointed a messenger to the North Carolina Conference. He was at the Conference at Pope's Chapel, in Granville County, in 1847, and served on the committee on the standing of the ministry. He served on the committee on finance at the Conference at New Providence in 1848, and was chosen a delegate to the Southern Christian Association, to meet in Raleigh, N. C., in 1859.

He was at the meeting when THE CHRISTIAN SUN was transferred from Raleigh, N. C., to Suffolk, Va., and Rev. W. B. Wellons made editor and publisher. In 1850, he was chosen moderator at the Conference at Union, Alamance County, in connection with which Conference a camp-meeting was held. There were present also Elders I. N. Walter, J. K. Cole and James A. Murray.

In 1853, at the Conference at Mt. Pleasant, in Randolph County, he served on the committee to raise funds for the relief of Graham Institute, and was assigned by the committee on itinerancy to New Providence, Pleasant Hill, Cane Creek Factory, Mt. Pleasant, Pleasant Ridge, Shiloh, Christian Union, Shady Grove, Brown's and Way's Chapels. At O'Kelly's Chapel, in 1854, the North Carolina and Virginia and the North Carolina Conferences met as one; he was chosen a delegate to the Southern Christian Association. At New Providence, in 1855, he was at the Conference and served on the ordination committee.

In 1856, he was at the organization of the Southern Christian Convention, at Union Chapel, in Alamance County, N. C. He was one of the committee "to prepare a declaration of the principles generally held by the Christians." He was also appointed on the committee to wait on the building committee and trustees of Graham Institute. At the Conference at Hanks' Chapel, in 1856, he served on the committee on ordination, and as treasurer of the Conference.

He was appointed to attend as an alternate the Southern Christian Association, and also the Eastern Virginia Conference. In 1857 he was at the Conference at Bethlehem, in Alamance County, and was reappointed on the committee on ordination. He was chosen a delegate from the North Carolina and Virginia Conference to the Southern Christian Convention at Cypress Chapel. He was also elected a director of the Conference Home Mission Society.

In 1858, at the Southern Christian Convention at Cypress Chapel, in Nansemond County, Va., he, as chairman of the committee to whom was referred the subject of the Graham Institute, reported: "That since the meeting of the last Convention, the Graham Institute has, by the joint consent of the North Carolina and Eastern Virginia Conferences, passed into the hands of a joint stock company who propose in the future to conduct it as a denominational school." He was appointed on the board of visitors of the Graham Institute, and chosen a director of the "Book Concern." He preached a "sermon of great power and feeling" at this Convention.

In 1859 he was on the committee to nominate officers for the Conference, at Union Chapel, in Alamance County, N. C., and on the committee on ordination, and to examine the candidate for licensure. He was also appointed chairman of the Conference executive committee. As chairman of the committee on education, he reported, "that a college worthy of the Christian Church, South, cannot be established without an adequate endowment, because the advanced classes in college are not able to pay their teachers, who must be highly educated and who cannot be obtained by small salaries." He was serving Hanks' Chapel, Shallow Ford, O'Kelly's Chapel and New Providence as pastor.

At the Conference at Pleasant Hill, in Chatham (now Alamance) County, in 1860, he was still treasurer of the Conference. The committee on itinerancy report him to preach on Haw River circuit—Shallow Ford, Damascus, Hanks' Chapel, and O'Kelly's Chapel. He was appointed on the committee to examine candidates for ordination or licensure who may apply at the next Conference. He was appointed on the presbytery to ordain those recommended at this Conference, namely: C. A. Apple, W. S. Long, and W. D. Moffitt.

In 1864 he was elected vice-president of the Conference at Antioch, in Chatham County. He served on the committee on memoirs, and on the committee of elders, to which were referred the character and standing of certain ministers. At Oak Level, in Franklin County, in 1865, he was re-elected vice-president. He was chairman of the committee on ministerial supply and was elected a delegate to the Southern Christian Convention. In 1866 he attended the Southern Christian Convention at Mt. Auburn, Warren County, N. C., which he called to order, being the oldest minister present. He also attended the extra session at the same place in 1867. At the Conference at O'Kelly's Chapel, in 1866, he was again vice-president, and chairman of the committee on religious exercises. In 1867, at Union, Alamance County, he was appointed a fraternal messenger to the Deep River Valley Conference, and was pastor of O'Kelly's Chapel and Hanks' Chapel. At Salem Chapel, in Forsyth County, in 1868, he was on the presbytery, composed of Revs. T. J. Fowler, A. Iseley, J. N. Manning and W. B. Wellons, to ordain Revs. D. A. Long, R. C. Tuck, W. T. Walker and J. W. Hatch. He was at the Conference at Union, Halifax County, Va., in 1870, and was chosen fraternal messenger to the Deep River Valley Conference. At Mt. Zion, in Orange County, in 1871, he is reported as pastor of Hanks' Chapel and Martha's Chapel. In 1872, at the Conference at Shallow Well, in Moore County, he resigned the office of treasurer, which position he had held consecutively for a number of years. He attended the Conferences at New Providence in 1873, and at Hanks' Chapel in 1974, and in these latter years preached at Hanks' Chapel, Morrisville and Lockville. In 1877, the Conference, in session at Pleasant Grove, Va., ordered that a letter, "expressive of Christian salutation and regard," signed by the president and secretary, be sent him. He died at his home in Orange County while the Conference was being held at Damascus, in the same county, November 20, 1878.

There was unanimously adopted the following: "Resolved, That we hear, with deepest grief, of the death of our beloved brother and co-laborer, Rev. T. J. Fowler, who breathed his last this morning at 3 o'clock, in the seventy-eighth year of his age. That in the death of this venerable man of God, the Christian Church has lost one of its ablest and most faithful ministers, one who spent his long and active life in earnest advocacy of the cause of Christ and the principles of the Christian Church."

LIMITATIONS OF THE PESSIMIST.

Nothing to do but work,
Nothing to eat but food,
Nothing to wear but clothes
To keep one from going nude.

Nothing to breathe but air—
Quick as a flash 'tis gone;
Nowhere to fall but off,
Nowhere to stand but on.

Nothing to comb but hair,
Nowhere to sleep but in bed,
Nothing to weep but tears,
Nothing to bury but dead.

Nothing to sing but songs—
Ah, well, alas! alack!
Nowhere to go but out,
Nowhere to come but back.

Nothing to see but sights,
Nothing to quench but thirst,
Nothing to have but what we've got;
Thus through life we are cursed.

Nothing to strike but a gait;
Everything moves that goes.
Nothing at all but common sense
Can ever withstand these woes.

"What makes the radio squeal so, Johnny?"

"Well, mother, if you must know, what you call squeals are really the self-oscillations of the thermionic valves brought about by altering the potentials of the high and low tension batteries and varying the relations of the capacitative and inductive quantities in the receiver."—Life.

Why You Need Iron—

To Make You Strong and "Brainy" and Put the Power Into Your Blood To Overcome Disease Germs

The food you eat contains carbon. When your food is digested it is absorbed from the intestines into the blood. When the carbon in your food comes in contact with the oxygen carried by the iron in your blood, the carbon and oxygen unite and by so doing they give off tremendous energy, thereby giving you great force, strength and endurance. Without iron your blood carries no oxygen and without oxygen there is nothing to unite with the carbon in your food, so that what you eat does you no good—you do not get any strength from it—it is like putting coal into a stove without a fire. You cannot get any heat unless the coal unites with the fire.

Impoverished blood corpuscles highly magnified.

The only way with which to prevent and overcome colds, pneumonia, kidney trouble, rheumatism, nervous prostration, in fact almost any disease or disease germs is plenty of good rich, pure blood, strength, energy and endurance and the greatest energy carrier in the body is organic iron, not metallic iron which people usually take, but organic iron like the iron in spinach, lentils and apples, and like the iron contained in what is known as organic Nuxated Iron, which may be had from almost any druggist. Nuxated Iron often increases the strength, energy and endurance of weak, nervous, run-down folks in two weeks' time.

It has been used and highly recommended by former United States Senators, Members of Congress, Judges of U. S. Courts, many physicians and prominent men.

Healthy blood corpuscles highly magnified.

Over 4,000,000 people are now using it annually. Satisfactory results are guaranteed or the manufacturers will refund your money. Sold by all druggists in tablet form only.

Building a Country Sunday School

By E. L. Middleton.

Mr. Middleton possesses definite qualifications for the preparation of this work. For twelve years after leaving college, he was a day school and Sunday School teacher in a village that had "once-a-week" preaching, with half the membership of the Sunday School living in the open country; while for fourteen years more he has been a State Sunday School secretary in rural State. Mr. Middleton urges the adoption of no novel or revolutionary ideas or methods. He recognizes the place and the value of recognized Sunday School policies and methods, and has prepared a digest of the essentials in a manner plain enough to render it adaptable for use in any rural school. Methods, administration, organization and development are each and all discussed in this book in an eminently practical way.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By Rev. S. M. Lynam.

More from Egypt.—

For a long time, Egypt has held the attention of the world as precious ruins have been uncovered. Now it is reported that recent excavations near Cairo have uncovered two royal tomb chapels of the third or Memphite dynasty. These date from about four thousand before Christ. They stand near the great Sakkara pyramid, and are believed to be the earliest stone buildings in Egypt. It has been interesting and instructive to learn of Egyptian history through their ruins.

Minister Wins Legion Prize.—

Rev. E. E. Merring, pastor of the Hedding Methodist Church, New York, won the first prize offered by the American Legion post at Elmira, N. Y., with his essay on "Defense Day." In announcing the prize contest, no limitation was placed on the point of view to be taken, and the committee awarded the prize to an essay condemning the day. The award was announced at the Defense Day meeting of the post, but the real import of Mr. Merring's paper was not announced. So we see that the prize of the Legion brought forth good fruit, even if they did seek a champion for the Defense Day. We hope that the Elmira post will give the essay to the public. It would show that the Legion officials were good sports.

Ghandi Ill.—

Mahatma Ghandi, the non-co-operationist leader of India, is critically ill at Delhi. Ghandi is in the midst of a three weeks' fast, doing penance for the Hindu and Moslem riots. The condition of the great leader is serious, it is said. Ghandi has been recently released from jail for leading the Hindus in a campaign of passive resistance against the British government. He believes that peaceful non-co-operation can and will accomplish more than would an appeal to arms. Against non-co-operation, machine guns are powerless. It seems, as one contemplates the work of Ghandi, that the Christian world must go to India to learn the way of peace. Though professing no leaning toward Christianity, Ghandi is described as much like the Christ. Certain it is that he has brought a message to which Christianity should give heed.

Another Aid in War.—

Speaking before a gathering of scientists recently, while they were in session in honor of the centenary of the Franklin Institute, Philadelphia, Major-General Squier, signal corps' expert, described a method by which enemy powers might put an entire nation to sleep for forty-eight hours. This could be done by administering a new combination of chemicals similar to an anaesthetic used in a surgical operation. The combination has been recently discovered, and would be administered by radio-controlled, manless airplanes. Major-General Squier was describing another aid to war. It has no doubt its peace value, and why not apply it so? We, as Christians, must arouse ourselves against war. With so many instruments of death and destruction, we cannot again permit the earth to be scourged by war. "Peace hath greater tests of manhood than battle ever knew."

Some Facts About Taxation.—

The National Industrial Conference Board has recently put forth some statistical matter that will be of interest to our taxpaying citizens. It appears that in 1923 the aggregate of taxes paid in this country reached the enormous sum of $7,718,000,000. This was an increase over the year before of $755,000,000. The statement shows that taxation has risen in ten years over $5,500,000,000. In 1890, all taxes represented 7.2 per cent of the national income; in 1903, it amounted to 6.7 per cent; in 1913, it went down to 6.4 per cent. The war came, and the doubling of the ratio in six years, the proportion of taxation to the national income being 12.1 per cent in 1919. This went up to 16.7 per cent in 1921, and then decreased, indicating 12.1 per cent, in 1922, and 11.6 per cent in 1923. It is in spite of these figures true, that the American people are taxed more lightly than are the people of any other major country, and still we grumble about taxes.

An International Golden Rule Dinner.—

George W. Wickersham, Henry Morganthau, and Albert Shaw were prominent Americans who attended the first international Golden Rule dinner, which was held under the auspices of the International Near East Association at the Hotel Des Bergues, Geneva, Switzerland, on August 31st. Most of the Western countries were represented. The representatives partook of the same menu that is the daily fare for the orphans cared for by the Near East Relief. During October and November, similar dinners will be given in many American and European communities, the income from which will be given to the care of children in the Near East. This movement deserves the hearty co-operation of every American home. It will bring every home which serves a Golden Rule dinner into vital contact with the children of the East. Then, too, those children's hands are forging the chains of peace for the world far more powerfully than is the League of Nations. By serving a Golden Rule dinner and giving the income from it to the Near East Relief, you are helping to build into the hearts of children the principles of Jesus, which alone can bring His peace to mankind. Remember that, inasmuch as you do it unto one of the least of these, you do it unto Him.

Righting the Department of Justice.—

Attorney-General Harlan F. Stone has done a good piece of work when he discontinued the whole system of espionage, and dropped William J. Burns from the Department of Justice. The anti-Socialist and anti-radical work of the bureau of investigation is ended. Also the pernicious practice of certain "patriotic" societies which have sought out all citizens who were not of their special brand of "patriotism" and have tried to ruin the reputation of these, has ended. Over sixty employees of the Department of Justice have been dropped, detectives have been replaced by lawyers, who will protect the legal rights of the people. The American Defense Society and the men and women who made a vain attempt to prevent the holding of the Woman's International League's biennial meeting in Washington and their summer school at the University of Chicago last May, can turn no more to the spies of the Department of Justice for aid in their work. Now that the war is over, it is well that men and women be given the right to think and to give utterance to their thoughts. The American people cannot and will not stand for suppression by Russian police systems. We are a free people, and we thank Attorney-General Stone for his recognition of this fact.

Mr. Wilbur has an Interview.—

Curtis D. Wilbur, who succeeded Edwin Denby as Secretary of the Navy, after describing the progress and strength of the American navy in an address before the Chamber of Commerce and Commercial Club of San Francisco at a luncheon, closed with these remarks: "It has been a great personal satisfaction for me to come down the coast with fourteen thousand sailors wearing the American uniform in ships adequate for their own protection and for the protection of our coast, both East and West, from the aggression of any people influenced, as all people may be, by some extension of the mob spirit, some outburst of passion, or some real or fancied insult. There is nothing so cooling to a hot temper as a piece of cold steel. There is nothing so conducive to calm and cool deliberation as the contemplation of adequate means of defense of our opponent."

These were unfortunate words on the part of Mr. Wilbur, and immediately following their utterance, and the reviewing of a copy of what Mr. Wilbur purposed to say in Denver, Col., just a few days later, President Coolidge called the Secretary to Washington posthaste. He wished ostensibly to discuss the navy budget. What was said will probably remain a secret, but Mr. Wilbur had an interview. He should know that the day of cold steel is fast passing into twilight, and his words should be better chosen, lest they mar the good fortune of his party next November.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Mr. J. W. Price, of the First Christian Church, Richmond, Va., recently underwent an operation for appendicitis at the Retreat for the Sick. The operation was successful, and we are glad to say that Deacon Price is able to be out again at the post of duty

---

At the regular quarterly Conference of the First Christian Church of Richmond, the following were elected delegates to the Eastern Virginia Conference, which meets in Norfolk: D. J. Kelly and Mrs. A. E. Pierce; alternates—D. W. Darden and J. L. Carr.

There are two or three young ministers of ability, consecration and experience in Elon College who would be glad to serve as pastors of Churches in reach the coming year. Such pastorates help the young men, and, as a rule, in turn, are helped and built up by them.

Rev. L. E. Smith, D. D., of the Christian Temple, of Norfolk, Va., on his return from Dover, Del., made THE SUN office a visit while in Richmond. He had been to the dedication of the People's Christian Church, of Dover. This is one of our best Churches in the East, having cost some $150,000 at this time.

Conference secretaries and others interested will bear in mind that Rev. I. W. Johnson, D. D., Suffolk, Va., long-time secretary of the Southern Convention, is editor of the "Christian Annual." All copy and all matter and remarks intended for the "Annual" should be sent to Dr. Johnson. It seems most fitting that the secretary of the Convention should be the editor and compiler of the "Annual," and no man amongst us is better fitted or equipped for that task than the present capable and efficient secretary.

THE SUN's editors have received, and express their gratitude for, a beautifully arranged invitation bearing the following: "The pastor and members of People's Christian Chureh, of Dover, Del., cordially invite you to be present at the dedication services on Sunday, October 5th, and during the program of the week from October 6th to 10th." J. O. Atkinson, of our staff, attended the dedicatory services and is to tell SUN readers in an early issue of the great day and the wonderful plant dedicated at Dover on October the 5th.

Rev. W. L. Wells, writing under date Portsmouth, Va., September 30th, states: "I closed my work with the Portsmouth (Washington St.) Church last Sunday, and my plans are to reach the city for school about the first of next week." We congratulate Bro. Wells on his decision and ability to further pursue his studies at a theological seminary, and wish him well in realizing that fine opportunity. His going, however, leaves one of our important Churches without a pastor. We trust that a worthy successor for this important point shall soon be secured.

The great building program of Elon College goes along apace. Three of the buildings—the Alamance Building, Whitley Memorial, and the Carlton Library—are all fully complete and occupied. The Duke Science Building is practically completed and is to be occupied in about two weeks. This will be one of the most complete science buildings in the State, and likewise the other buildings of the program are a wonderful contribution to our equipment. The Orban Religious Activities Building is the last one to be completed, and will possibly require six or eight weeks yet for finishings, decorations, etc. It will be a joy and a source of infinite possibilities to the religious life and activities, not only of our young people at Elon College, but our Churches throughout the Conventions, back to which our young people will go. We, who are here at the college, much less those at a distance, have not yet grasped the magnitude of this building program and its meaning to our Church and its meaning to our Church life and activities. It is difficult indeed to realize that in so short a time such a program has been brought to such a conclusion. The comprehensiveness of the scheme and the magnitude of the achievement will have to grow upon us as we realize more and more its benefits and blessings to our people.

Conducted funeral services of Bro. and Sister Mitchell's little child here yesterday. Baptized the son of Bro. J. A and Ruth Kimball, and the daughter of Bro. and Sister W. H. Hilliards at 4 P. M. yesterday, and received them into the Church today.

The missionary society has $90.00, and expect to add $10.00 more this month. The Saturday before the second Sunday in October, 3 P. M., Church conference. On Sunday, October 12th, two sermons: 11 A. M. and 2:30 P. M., Communion meeting. Dinner in the grove.

D. A. L.

HOLLAND, VA.

The Holland Christian Church experienced a most gracious season of revival and ingathering September 7th to 14th, under the guidance of Rev. McD. Howsare, of the department of evangelism and life service. The department terms its seven days' effort "Kingdom Enlistment Week," and the program as carried out at Holland was as follows:

Saturday—Arrival of Bro. Howsare; consultation with pastor after inspection of Church.

Sunday—Visit to Sunday School classes; blanks given out for names of legitimate prospects; morning sermon, subject "The Divine Agency in Soul-Winning"; establishment of headquarters and chapel of prayer; evening sermon, subject, "The Human Agency in Soul-Winning."

Monday—Consultation with workers 9 A. M.; dinner in Church for small group; 3:30, service; 8 P. M., parent teachers' service.

Tuesday—Consultation; dinner at Church; 3:30, afternoon service; 8 P. M., consecration service; call for volunteers to do personal work and a training meeting with them following the evening service.

Wednesday—Consultation; final checking up and proper listing of prospects; 3:30, service; 8 P. M., service, "Changing Our Attitude Toward Christ"; 9:30 P. M., service of volunteers and calling out of names of prospects by pastor Thursday—Volunteers at work; consultations; 3:30, service; 8 P. M., service.

Friday—Volunteers at work; consultations; 3:30, service; 8 P. M., service, young people.

Saturday—Volunteers at work; consultation; 8 P. M., service.

Sunday—Sunday School; 11:15 service, sermon by pastor and invitation by pastor; reception of members; 8 P. M., service; reception of members and baptismal service.

In explanation of the above, we would state that headquarters consisted of a seven-foot table, a typewriter, a liberal supply of pencils and scratch-paper, chairs, flowers, a clerk, a stenographer, and the departmental material supplied by Dr. Howsare. Dr. Howsare lives at headquarters from 9 A. M. until 10:30 or 11 P. M.

The listing of the prospects was a most interesting work. It was wonderful how the list grew.

Tuesday night was the anxious night, the hour when the call for volunteers for personal work was made. The period of instruction that followed was rich.

On Wednesday night the names of the prospects were called, and the volunteers signified their desire to go to certain ones—loved ones perhaps, or friends. This was a beautiful service, and the Holy Spirit was manifested in many and deeply touching incidents.

Beginning with Thursday morning, the workers visited the prospects. What a glorious time it was to me to watch my flock at work, to see them return to headquarters happy even when unsuccessful. Some great work for the kingdom was done in those four days, and confessions for Jesus Christ were won in offices, stores, homes and even in the fields.

On Sunday morning, Dr. Howsare kept in the background. The pastor preached and the pastor gave the invitation. Outside, the rain was falling steadily, but inside forty-eight persons had come forward to unite with our Church. In the afternoon, more work was done, and two more were received. At night, Dr. Howsare preached, and, at the pastor's invitation, six more united with the Church. The pastor then gave the invitation for baptism, and after a class of seven had been sprinkled, Dr. Howsare whispered a farewell and quietly left the Church for an automobile ride to Suffolk and his train. The pastor then went down into the baptistry and immersed a class of twenty-six.

The results of the meeting that can be tabulated are as follows: total received to date, 63—by confession, 38; by transfer, 25; adults 42, children 21; by confession and not joining our Church, 4.

We wish to observe before closing—

First—That the Holy Spirit was richly and powerfully with us from the very first.

Second—Dr. Howsare's sermons were peculiarly practical in character.

Third—The responsibility for the success of the meeting was put upon the membership from the very first.

Fourth—The reactions to the meeting have been excellent. On the 21st, it rained, but our Sunday School had the largest attendance in its history, exceeding by 18 the previous record, made on the 14th.

Fifth—That it was the happiest revival of my active ministry of seven and one-half years.

J. H. LIGHTBOURNE, Pastor.

PROHIBITION IN THE PHILIPPINES.

While the eighteenth amendment applies to the Philippines, the Volstead act does not, under rulings now in force, and as a result the liquor situation has been decidedly unsatisfactory. An attempt has been made to prevent the importation of liquors by having American consuls refuse clearance papers to vessels carrying intoxicants, but this has not worked out well, and officials believe it will be necessary for Congress to declare the Volstead act specifically applicable to the Philippines in order to make prohibition effective.

A Boer farmer in 1863 took a number of young wild ostrich chickens, tamed them, and, to the surprise of many, successfully reared them as he would have reared cattle. Others followed his example, and they are now reared in inclosures, a couple of acres to a bird, and fed like fine stock on alfalfa or lucerne, a rich clover, easily cultivated.

FIELD NOTES.

Our revival meetings began with our Bennett Church, July 1st, Sunday, and continued until Friday night following. Rev. C. E. Gerringer was with us and did the preaching, and did it well. The Church was very much revived, and two new members were added.

Our next revival was at Shallow Ford, beginning the second Sunday in August and closing the following Friday night, with ten accessions to the Church. At this point, the pastor did the preaching, except Bro. J. F. Apple preached one time and Prof. John T. Cobb conducted one service for us. Prior to the meeting we had received three members, making a total of thirteen members up to date of this year.

This Church is to be commended for the splendid interest and work done during the year in improving the Church grounds and addition of three nice Sunday School rooms to the Church; also some nice seats for the choir.

We held our protracted meeting, beginning the third Sunday in August, at Parks Cross Roads, Bro. C. E. Gerringer again coming to us and doing the preaching in a very plain, appealing and forceful way, insomuch that there were about twenty reclamations and conversions, with three additions to the Church. We were rejoiced to have a committee of three representatives of the Business Men's Evangelistic Club of Sanford conduct services for us on Sunday afternoon. This was a splendid service, filled with interest from start to finish. This committee consisted of Bro. Joe W. Stout, one of our former members; Bro. June Gunter, and Bro. Pardo. We trust this great movement will continue to do its work until it shall be felt throughout our country.

Our next meeting was at Pleasant Ridge (R). Bro. J. E. McCauley was with us and did the preaching in a very acceptable manner, he being a former pastor and the people were glad indeed to hear him again. Bro. O. C. Johnson was with us also at this point to conduct the song service, which was an important feature of the meeting. The children, the young people—in fact, all—were happy to have him. At this meeting there were a number of reclamations and conversions. Eight connected themselves with the Church.

Beginning the first Sunday in September, we held our meeting at Pleasant Grove, assisted by Bro. G. R. Underwood, former pastor, taking turns in preaching with the pastor. Bro. Underwood was at his best, and did splendid preaching. Bro. John Kidd, of the Baptist Church, preached for us once, giving us a splendid sermon. The meeting resulted in twenty reclamations and conversions, with eight accessions, and prospects good for several other members.

Besides these, it was our pleasure to be with Rev. J. W. Knight at New Lebanon; Rev. C. E. Gerringer, at Hines Chapel, and Rev. J. E. Franks, at Mt. Gilead, where we enjoyed ourselves much with the brethren and in the Master's service.

"Thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." Amen.

Ramseur, N. C. T. J. GREEN.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

REACHING OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

It was noted editorially in these columns recently that practically every Church these days, in casting about for a new pastor, puts it down as a prerequisite that the new pastor, if he is chosen, shall be a man interested and skilled in winning the young people to the Church. A good brother-pastor writes his commendation of that editorial, and then proceeds to put a question that we most heartily commend to the attention of our Churches who seek pastors "that will be sure to reach the young people." The idea of our brother is best presented by quoting his words: "I told my folks in a recent Sunday sermon I did not know that they were not one of the Churches writing you about a (prospective) man (pastor) that can hold the young people. So I asked them what they were willing to do as a Church. I brought up a few instances in which I had called on them to work with me in programs built about the young people and to which they did not respond very magnificently. So am going to suggest an editorial in that phase of it. What are the Churches willing to do for the young people? In what ways are they willing to co-operate with the preacher in his work with and for the young people? I have a notion that the zeal of more preachers is dampened by the unwillingness of the membership to co-operate than from any other one cause."

This pastor has certainly given our Churches something to think about. It is not sufficient, it does not carry us anywhere to complain that our young people are not interested in the Church and Church work. How much is the Church, as such, not the pastor only, interested in the young people, and what is the Church giving the young people to do? To what extent is the Church, as such, willing to co-operate with the pastor in finding something for its young people to do in the name and for the sake of the Church?

One may reply that the Church is giving its young people something to do when it affords them a place of worship and invites them to its service of praise, prayer and sermon. However, it may be said in reply, that worship is a dual term, and, as such, implies two elements. Jesus told Peter that in a most emphatic manner.

Just before going away, Jesus questioned Peter: "Lovest thou me?" And this query, for the sake of emphasis, Jesus repeated three times, and each time to the same effect, namely: Prove it—Feed my sheep! feed my lambs! feed my sheep. That is, if you really love me it is in no manner satisfactory for you just to come here and say so—go and do something in my name; prove your creed by your deed. Words are not sufficient. Worship implies both creed and deed, word and work, love and labor, prayer and practice, song and service, devotion and duty.

If the world seems to have our young people going its way, is not the cause largely to be found in the fact that the world, the flesh and the devil are ever and always finding something for the young people to do—something to engage their thought, time, energy, practice? "For the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light."—Luke 16:8.)

When has your Church planned something definite, active, vigorous and specific for its young people to do—to engage their energy, activity, strength?

Pastor and Church co-operating can plan for and can grip their young people. And many of our pastors and Churches are doing this very thing. In such instances, there is every reason to believe that the young people are as ready and willing now as they have ever been to reach and be reached, save and be saved in His name and for His sake.

THE CHIEF FUNCTION OF THE CHURCH.

In founding the Church, Lord Christ declared "that the gates of Hell should not prevail against it." By this saying, the Master Teacher evidently signified that all the organized forces of sin and evil should not prevail against His Church.

This power has been most manifest from the time the Church was founded until now, not by bringing into the Church new ideas and those contrary to the teachings of its Founder, but by carrying to their unmistakable conclusion the very ideas which the Saviour had in mind when He founded the Church and when He taught while here on earth.

Martin Luther, in starting the Reformation, which revolutionized the thought of the world, did not bring new ideas into the plans and practices and purpose of the Founder of the Church. Luther only followed to their unmistakable conclusions ideas laid down and ideals plainly pointed out by our Lord.

John and Charles Wesley, in beginning a movement that was to sweep the currents of human thought and influence the life of millions, did not import into the Church, nor superimpose upon the teachings of the Christ newly invented or newly discovered thoughts and ideas. They simply emphasized and brought into clear light plain and unmistakable truths already taught and enunciated through the life and teachings of Christ.

Revs. James O'Kelly, Abner Jones and Barton W. Stone did not invent new ideas of religious liberty and freedom and access and of expression. They simply brought out treasures, new and old, from God's storehouse. (Matt. 13:52.)

According to a recent brilliant thinker and writer, this, in fact, was the method that Jesus Himself pursued. I quote from "The Christian Church in the Modern World," by Raymond Calkins, page 77:

"Some time ago, a distinguished New Testament student, in a paper entitled 'The Radicalism of Jesus,' took the position that the contribution of Jesus to the moral and spiritual life of the world lay not so much in the announcement of new ideas as in carrying out to their ultimate consequences ideas already in the possession of the Jewish people. Doubtless, much of the originality of Jesus lies in the fresh revelation of truth that results from the radical application of familiar ideas. And it may safely be said that the chief function of the Church today is not to evolve new ideas, but to carry out to their ultimate consequences ideas with which it has long been familiar. This is the kind of radicalism that is needed in the Church today, and the only kind. To this degree, every Christian preacher and disciple should be a religious radical in our modern world, for it constitutes the unique and distinct contribution which the Church has to make to the social problem.

Consider, for example, the simple, undeniable teaching of Jesus concerning the supreme value of every human life. That idea may be found, perhaps, in the latest pages of the Old Testament. It is brought out with startling clearness in the teachings of Jesus. Human life, any human life, the most insignificant apparently or the most hopeless, is literally a pearl of great price for which the Son of Man gave all that He had to give. Silvester Horne has well called this 'a romantic creed.' It is equal to an affirmation 'that the soul of every forced laborer on the Amazon is of more value than all the diamonds of Kimberly, all the millions of all the magnates of America. In God's sight, all the suns and stars that people infinite space, it declares, are of inferior worth to one human spirit dwelling, it may be, in the degraded body of some victim of drink or lust.'

"A Church which takes this one principle of Jesus in earnest cannot survey with complacency a procession of one million children marching out of their homes, not to schools or to playgrounds, but to the grimy interior of factories or other forms of gainful occupation, a sheer immolation of childhood on the altar of industrial greed. It must also put forth its fully mobilized strength to modify an economic system which kills thirty-five hundred miners and thousands of railroad employees in a year—a proportion far in excess of that of any other civilized land. And slowly, it may be, but none the less surely, it will adopt a unanimously hostile attitude toward the war system as a means of settling the international quarrels of the world."

A REMARKABLE STORY TOLD BY TITHING.

Our Seventh Day Adventist brethren teach tithing, and the system is practiced, we believe, by practically the whole membership of that Church. One of the most remarkable stories told about the effect of tithing is one just brought to light by a bit of history from the records of these people. Before the figures are given, bear in mind that all the home and foreign missionary work of this Church is supported by gifts made in addition to and independent of the regular tithe paid by the members. Statistics show that there are now 104,000 Seventh Day Adventists in the United States and Canada. During the first three months of this year, this membership gave to their Church $1,451,750, or about $14 per member. Of this amount, the tithes total $898,000, while $350,000 was given to missions. These figures will explain to some extent how Adventists are doing such tremendous work in the world and now hold property valued at $34,000,000 as a Church.

There are as many members of our Christian denomination—more, in fact—than there are Adventists. What if we were to give in a whole year, much less one-quarter of it, $350,000 for missions? We would, in such an event, soon double our forces and plant Christian Churches in hundreds of places now needing and demanding them in the home and foreign fields. One wonders if we Christians will ever, of our own volition, adopt the plain law of giving so emphatically given in the Book, and use a plan which every person and body that tries it finds so helpful and so wholesome.

MORNING AND EVENING DEVOTIONALS.

James Pott & Co., publishers, 214 East Twenty-third Street, New York, have made our Christian homes their debtors by publishing a volume in handy and substantial form entitled "Daily Light on the Daily Faith." It is a devotional textbook for every day in the year, and the entire volume is in the words of Scripture. Two subjects are given for every day in the year—one for the morning devotionals, the other for the evening—and under these topics are gathered scriptures which serve as a daily reading for any family desirous of holding daily worship. The readings are purely from Scripture, but instead of following a chapter, verses are chosen which fit into each other and make a compact scriptural treatment of the topic for the day.

Every Christian home should have one of these little volumes of Scripture readings. There is no comment whatever, but at the bottom of each page there is a footnote giving citation of where the verses of daily readings may be found in the Bible. It is an admirable arrangement from the Bible for any family having daily Bible reading and prayer.

The book, of course, looks like a Bible, which it is, and is put in convenient shape and form. The size is 4 inches long, 2¾ inches wide, and ⅞-inch thick, and is printed on Bible paper. The prices range from: blue cloth with square corners, $1.25; lamp, gilt edge, $1.75; French seal, limp, gilt edge, $2.00.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN feels grateful to the publishers that they have put out such a convenient selection of Scriptures and daily Bible readings for family worship. We could wish that many of our subscribers would order a copy for their home direct from the publishers, whose address we have given above, or from THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Richmond, Va.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TO THE FORE.

BY A. B. KENDALL.

The annual meeting of the board of trustees of the United Society of Christian Endeavor was held in the World's Christian Endeavor Building, Boston, Mass., July 31st. It was my privilege to attend that meeting as a trustee from our denomination. It was a most inspiring meeting. The reports from the different officers showed that in all its history Christian Endeavor was never so flourishing as at the present time.

We occasionally hear it intimated that Christian Endeavor is just about breathing its last; that just a few more feeble struggles and all will be over. If some of these self-appointed undertakers for Christian Endeavor had been present at this trustee meeting, they would have doffed their crape at once, as there passed before their mental vision, not a wasted cadaver born by its friends to its last resting-place, but instead, Christian Endeavor radiant with spiritual power and life, growing by leaps and bounds, and never so strong in all the years of its phenomenal life.

From the reports given, I have gleaned these few impressive facts and pass them on for the encouragement of the Endeavorers of our beloved Church. There were 3,085 new societies reported last year, and the indications are that there would have been at least 5,000 new societies had the reports from all the States been in at that time. There are more societies of Christian Endeavor now than at any time in its history. A report from the general secretary since that meeting says that "Every State in the Union but two made decided gains last year. Ohio alone had a net increase of 10,800 members.

The last year in Christian Endeavor has been the banner year because of the great State conventions held. The record of attendance at some of these sounds like the report of regisrrations at an international convention. Pennsylvania set the high mark with an attendance of 12,250 registered delegates; Ohio had 3,214 at Cincinnati; Connecticut had double the registration of any year in its history.

Another heartening fact was brought out in the report of the treasurer, which showed that the united society had closed the year with all bills paid and a balance in the treasury. The past year was pronounced the most successful year financially in the history of the society. The contributions for the year ending May 1st were twice that of the preceding year.

Secretary Vandersall made a nice little speech at the close of this report, calling attention to the splendid and highly appreciated gift of $100 from the Board of Christian Education of the Christian Church and heartily thanking them for the gift.

Some forward-looking steps were taken. I am sure all friends of Christian Endeavor will be interested in the following:

1. It was unanimously decided that evangelism be especially stressed this year in the promotion of the Friends of Christ Campaign.

2. The formation of classes for the study of stewardship, in connection with the C. E. prayer-meeting topics for November 9 to 30, 1924.

3. The executive officers were instructed to give special consideration to the promotion of world peace and world fellowship, and to plan for the production of a textbook on this subject for the young people's societies.

4. A national essay contest on world fellowship was authorized, and $100 was appropriated for prizes.

5. A national oratorical contest on world fellowship was planned for the International Endeavor convention in Portland, Oreg., July 4-9, 1925.

6. A fine step was taken in the way of Christian social service, when it was decided that a nation-wide effort would be made through Christian Endeavor societies to remember every inmate of every institution at Christmas, and that a portion of Scripture be included in the remembrance.

7. All interested in Christian Education will rejoice in the fact that instruction was given the executive officers to prepare a Christian Endeavor reading course based on a carefully selected list of Christian Endeavor books; and also in the fact that instruction was given the general secretary that he, in consultation with other officers of the united society, compile and distribute a list of worth-while books for young people.

8. A recreation department was established, and each State union will be urged to appoint a recreation superintendent.

Plans were also adopted for a nation-wide citizenship campaign to bring out a 100 per cent vote of the Christian citizens of America.

These are some of the outstanding features of the future plans as promulgated by the trustees of Christian Endeavor at this meeting.

One of the pleasant features of this meeting was the banquet provided by the united society for its trustees and officers in Young's Hotel, in the same room in which the original trustees of the united society held their meetings forty years ago.

One thing that made this delightful gathering of unusual interest and added pleasure was the privilege of having with us as our toastmaster Dr. William Shaw, who owing to ill health had been laid aside from the active work of the board for some time. He staged a come-back with apparently all of his old-time enthusiasm and vigor.

The only sad note sounded during this happy meeting was the one when it was reported that our beloved leader, Dr. Clark, was unable, owing to a weakened heart, to be present with us.

The point toward which all Endeavor eyes turn as they look toward the future is the great International Christian Endeavor convention to be held in Portland, Oreg., July 4 to 9, 1925.

OLD LEBANON MEMORIAL.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN SUN:

I note the last issue of THE SUN shows there has only been $23.00 donated and collected towards erecting the "marker" of the old Lebanon Church lot, near Surry Courthouse, Va., which is to designate the spot on which our dear denomination was born in this country.

As you know, I had the pleasure of being invited to go with the committee to examine the title and define the lines, etc., of this lot. I enjoyed this day very much, and when the committee decided to erect this marker I felt confident that the Christian denomination would rally to this great cause. In my judgment, it should appeal to every member of the Christian denomination, first, because it will brighten this lonely spot and will ever remain a sacred place in the memory of those who are to follow; and second, because it is on the national highway, between Smithfield and Petersburg, where millions of people will travel by and stop to see this piece of granite and the inscription thereon.

I do wish that the denomination would rally to the effort of this committee to raise this money. That the amount of money raised up to the present time is small, I do not believe is the fault of our dear people, but I believe it is a matter of the people not knowing of the efforts of the committee to raise the money with which to buy this "marker." I would like to see some member of our denomination bring this before the people in every issue of THE SUN, so this "marker" may be erected at an early date, and thereby brighten and beautify this once-forgotten spot.

Let each of us do our part to mark the spot of the birth of our denomination.

Yours very sincerely,

J. M. DARDEN.

The Sunday Schools of Greensboro (First Church) and Oakland Church, Nansemond County, Va., are now in the list of our wide-awake loyal schools to vote one Sunday's offering each month to missions. It is doubtful if our Convention ever planned or adopted any financial schedule more wholesome and helpful to school than this—one Sunday's offering each month to the Orphanage; one Sunday's offering each month to missions; the other two offerings each month to buy literature and pay current expenses of the school. The most progressive, loyal and active of our schools have now adopted this wise plan, and it works well for the school adopting and helps to create interest in, as well as supports, two of the vital enterprises of the Church—caring for the fatherless and carrying Sunday Schools and the gospel to those who have not had these blessings.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The most unfriendly thing is to be unfriendly. Friendliness may be a sham. One may be friendly for commercial, political or social reasons. Such friendliness is unfriendly. To be a friend is to be that for friendship's sake. To be honest is, first of all, for one's own self. "To thine own self be true." In other words, friendliness must be genuine. Unfriendliness will break up family relations, social relations, and national relations. At heart, it is war. Real world friendliness would "beat swords into plowshares, and spears into pruning hooks," and set the world forward on unparalleled progress. But such friendship is higher than the world, for "a friend of the world is the enemy of God." All unfriendliness is a mark of irreligion; our real friendship is based upon the love of God.

Friendliness is not concerned so much about the feelings and attitude of others as its own feelings, for it is largely a matter of feeling—it is in the heart. David had his enemies as well as his friends. He said: "Mine enemies speak evil of me;" "yea," more, "mine own familiar friend, in whom I trusted, which did eat of my bread, hath lifted up his heel against me." He did nothing but pray for self-healing. The generation in the day of Jesus said of Him: "Behold, a man gluttonous, and a winebibber, a friend of publicans and sinners." His enemies said the truth. He was the "friend of publicans and sinners," but it was the truth out of unfriendly hearts. But no criticism changed his friendly heart toward them, for He is "the same yesterday, today, and forever." "A man that hath friends must show himself friendly;" but even that will not make men friendly. Jesus had His enemies and Christians have their enemies.

The criticism of enemies does two things for us: it drives real friends closer to us, and it attracts those who did not know us to us. The two reports about what Jesus was doing and who He was, led the multitudes out to see Him and to hear Him, and many believed on Him." "When He was reviled, He reviled not again; when He suffered, He threatened not—but committed Himself to Him that judgeth righteously." And Jesus says to us: "Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely for my sake."

Criticism is what I call free advertisement. If no one said anything about you or your business, you would be little known. The countercurrents present you from both angles. Unfriendliness never benefits the one who is unfriendly; it may benefit the other party or parties, but real friendliness benefits all parties. An unfriendly feeling is a heavy load for any mortal to carry. Enmity is a burden on the soul. The Jesus feeling is more than wealth, learning, position, or power; it is all these in one. Unfriendliness disrupts the family, the Church, the neighborhood, the nations. Try to be friendly not only toward friends, but toward enemies, if you have enemies. Enemies are powerless against us if we are true ourselves. The worst enemy is an unfriendly self. "Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life."

ELON LETTER.

September 27th will go down in the annals of Elon College as a great and memorable day. On this day the Carlton Library Building was formally presented to the college by the family of Bro. J. W. Carlton, of Richmond, Va., and dedicated to its high and holy purpose of service to the cause of Christian education through books. The college to which this splendid gift is made accepts it as a sacred trust and will ever, we hope, think of this great benefaction as a sincere desire on the part of the donors to exemplify the truth of the idea in Scott's mind when he said, "There is but one Book." This library will house nearly 200,000 books, but every one of them will in the ultimate sense shed light and illumination on the one Book. Our whole civilization is in the final analysis, but a commentary in action on the ideals of this Book. The Christian college exists to incarnate this Book in its ideals and in its product. The library, then, must ever hold a large place in the program of the college that aspires to be Christian. The Carlton Library fills a long-felt need in Elon's life, and will, through the years, prove a benediction to the young life that gathers here for instruction and for inspiration.

This is certainly the hope of its donors. Placed in the corner-stone of this magnificent building, besides a copy each of the Holy Scriptures, of the principles and government of our Church, of the "Elon College Catalogue," of the "Christian Annual," of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, of Maroon and Gold, and of the Herald of Gospel Liberty, is an engrossment on parchment, setting forth the high purpose that induced Luther Eugenius Carlton, Herbert Anderson Carlton, Pleasant Joseph Carlton, and Nannie Carlton Parrott to make this great gift to Elon College. This engrossment begins with this note of deep and reverent piety and of Christian devotion: "This library building is humbly erected to the glory of God." Elon accepts it in that spirit. May she ever prove her purpose so to use and preserve it!

A large and impressive group of students and friends attended the dedication services, though held on Saturday, a very busy day for most people. Inclement weather was not able to daunt their purpose to attend. Governor Morrison, State Superintendent of Public Instruction Allen, and Dr. Charles S. Macfarland, of the Federal Council of Churches, sent words of greeting for the occasion. All four of the donors were present, a circumstance that added satisfaction and lustre to the event.

Dr. W. S. Alexander read a highly appropriate Scripture lesson, and offered the dedicatory prayer, following the singing of the doxology. Dr. J. W. Wellons, the life-long and beloved friend of the family, told of his intimate spiritual relations with them, beginning with their grandfather, Deacon Archer Farmer, and on to the present day. This grand old veteran of the cross had to be supported as he arose to speak. He has so often and so effectually supported the writer with his prayers and strengthened him with his wise counsel, that it was a rare pleasure for him to stand by Uncle Wellons and support him during his words of spiritual reminiscence. Every one felt as this saintly man of God told of his association with the family of the donors, that this building had come as the natural fruitage of reverent and godly parentage and grandparentage. This is the only kind of gift that eventually counts with God. The donors of the Library Building gave generously out of generous Christian conviction. Their purpose in giving was and is humbly to glorify God. Uncle Wellons showed this to be a family characteristic, not by labored arguments, but by the citation of example. All regretted that the aged father of this noble family could not be present. He was too feeble to come, being now in his eighty-fourth year, and who may be truly described as one who worthily wears the "white flower of a blameless life." Death made absent two other members of the family circle—the sainted mother, Mrs. Flory Ellen Carlton, and the oldest son, a man of sterling character and great endowment, Edgar Samuel Carlton—but, as one of the speakers remarked during the service, they were both present in spirit. Assuredly, their hearts rejoiced in the spirit world over the great thing their loved ones were doing that day for God and the Church.

Following Uncle Wellons' tribute to the family of the donors, Dr. J. O. Atkinson presented the building on their behalf to the college. Having known the piety and godly life of the donors and of their family for many years, he feelingly portrayed their great generosity as the normal fruitage of their daily walk and life. He never spoke to better effect.

Trustee D. R. Fonville accepted the building on behalf of the trustees and the Church. He accepted it in the spirit in which Dr. Atkinson had presented it and pledged that the trustees and the Church will use it for the high purpose the donors cherished for their gift and in the fine spirit in which they had given it. His audience caught the contagion of his own high resolve and responded visibly to his lofty sentiments.

The next item was not on the program, but all the more appreciated and appropriate on that account, coming as the spontaneous expression of heartfelt gratitude. No sooner had Bro. Fonville ceased to speak, than Rev. W. B. Terrell, a member of the senior class, was recognized and granted permission to speak the appreciation of "those who would be most especially benefited by this great donation—the students." It was a finely conceived and feelingly delivered message that he brought, and, in concluding, he proposed that Prof. O. W. Johnson lead the students in singing the college anthem, "Here's to Dear Old Elon," as an expression of their appreciation. Some of us were deeply moved by this act, remembering, as we did, that other and dismal day when, in the first assembly following the fire, the students greeted the writer as he entered the assembly-room with this same stirring melody. We could but thank our God and Father for what He had made possible since January 18, 1923.

Dr. Louis R. Wilson, librarian of the University of North Carolina, then gave the dedicatory address on "The Place of the Library in College Life." His address was a masterpiece, and added to his reputation as one of the nation's leading librarians. The college will preserve this address in the "Library Number" of the Bulletin that is shortly to be issued.

Following Dr. Wilson's address, Dr. Alexander pronounced the benediction, and the curtain fell on a most historic scene in the drama of Elon's life—a scene and an event never to be forgotten, and that, under the blessing of God, presages great achievement in the years that lie ahead.

The Carlton Library Building has cost, furnished, slightly less than $100,000. Just before our fire, this family had given Elon $25,000 for endowment in memory of their mother. Truly are they Elon's friends. The donors have erected the building and furnished it completely, sparing no expense to make it thoroughly modern in every detail. Only one floor of the stack room is now installed. The other four will be installed as needed. When these four additional floors are installed, the building will represent a total cost to the family of $125,000. They were ready to install the five stack floors complete at this time, but the building committee felt it unwise to tie up that large sum of money in equipment for which for many years there would be no need. Each floor of the stack room will accommodate 37,500 books, or 187,500 in all, and it will be some time before we will have enough books for the first floor of the stack, which is steel and of the standard Snead & Co. design.

The building is 120 feet in length, 64 feet wide, three stories high, and constructed of brick and re-enforced concrete. This makes it fireproof, but Bro. P. J. Carlton desired it to be doubly so as to its stack room, where the books are to be kept. So this room is itself in the form of a fireproof vault, which will stand, should the building around it burn or for any reason be destroyed. There are two other unique features in the building—the studies, or offices, of the professors, one for each head professor fully equipped, and the research or seminar rooms for the several college departments. Library experts have pronounced it one of the finest libraries in the country. The Christian Church and Elon College are under lasting obligation to the great-hearted donors, who have made this magnificent structure possible for the aspiring youth of our Church and nation. It will rapidly become the active center of the college's intellectual life. Already the Southern Christian Convention has made it the repository of its records. As the years come and go, this great gift will entwine itself with the life and thought and aspiration of our college and of our Church in ways which we can now only dimly forecast. These princely givers have chosen well their avenue of service to God and brother-man, and may the events of the years that shall come but confirm them in the wisdom of their choice!

BETHLEHEM LETTER.

The Way to Success.

Under this head, we shall offer, in a few short articles, some suggestions on how to achieve success—for to do more, to be more, to love and be loved by your fellow-man you must keep a-plannin', an' a-diggin', an' a-lookin' straight ahead." Today you are weaving the carpet you walk on tomorrow.

In order to become a true scholar in the highest sense it is necessary, first of all, to cultivate those cardinal virtues so beautifully expressed by St. Paul, in the words faith, hope and charity. And to these must be added the essentials of that other mandate of the great apostle when he said, "And besides this giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge, and to knowledge temperance, and to temperance patience, and to patience godliness, and to godliness brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness charity."

To these, let us add one more fundamental principle—honesty—for there can be no permanent education built upon any other foundation.

The qualifications essential in order to acquire a worth-while education can be classified as follows: energy, love for work, wisdom, common sense, perseverance, ambition, cheerfulness, enthusiasm, confidence and neat appearance. All of which can be acquired by any one who is desirous of equipping himself with the necessary tools to clear a pathway through the wilderness of indolence, ignorance and failure.

Generally speaking, everybody is endowed with an instinctive idea as to what the term "energy" means. Almost every child who has attained the age of ten can give you a pretty good definition of it. This is especially true of the great mass of people who are fortunate enough to have to work for a living. Everybody associates energy with work physically, but comparatively few connect energy with work mentally. Webster says energy means "inherent power; power efficiently and forcibly exerted; vigorous or effectual operation; efficiency."

It is something, when used in connection with ambition, that makes the hands and the feet active, and the mind alert. Energy is the motive power behind the work. It is the "electric current" that makes "live wires." Yop may wire your dwelling and equip it with modern fixtures, but unless you turn on the electric current there will be no light, so you may be ever so well equipped in every other respect, if you do not turn on the current of energy into your being there will be no success in your educational work. Bethlehem College offers a good opportunity for an education, but unless you are willing to work for it, it will not be yours. After all, it is not work that kills folks; it is worry—work is healthy!

MT. AUBURN CHURCH.

Report of Missionary Society.

It seems such a short time since the beginning of this year, and we read over the goals for 1924 of the Women's Missionary Workers of the N. C. Conference.

At our first meeting we reviewed our work for the previous ten years and found our society, with its auxiliaries, had raised a little more than $800. Some of us were gratified and much encouraged. Then we took stock and determined to accomplish larger things for our Lord. They say "confession is good for the soul," so here goes. Our attendance at missionary meetings had fallen so low that for the year 1923 our receipts for the W. H. & F. M. Board amounted to $27.48, Willing Workers' Society included. Our women decided to mend their ways. We did not feel quite able to reach the goal set for us at Conference, but resolved to raise $100, including that raised by our auxiliaries. The following annual report proves "where there's a will there's a way:"

W. W. S.	$ 29.60
C. R. Supt.	5.00
W. M. S., dues	43.65
Specials	25.00
Total received and paid out	$103.25

The women more than trebled their offerings; also very few women in our Church failed to contribute something to our collections. It is the Lord's work, and not ours, and we are determined to do better next year. We send our sympathy, interest and prayers, along with this money, that God may multiply its power for good, even as seemeth good in His sight. SEC'Y.

Report of Willing Workers' Society.

We, the Willing Workers of Mt. Auburn Christian Church, though small in number but great in spirit and name, are trying to go forward with honest, faithful hearts, believing that "we can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth us." So we are herewith submitting our report for the year 1924.

Our apportionment for the year was $15.00. The Young People's Society was asked for $10.00 —a total of $25.00. There being but one society in our Church, the Willing Workers' Society decided to raise the entire $25.00. We did it, and $4.60 besides this amount.

Our society raised $12.00 for a thanksgiving offering. We gave each child a small bootee made of colored cloth, and asked for pennies to the number of years of his age. Of course, many gave more. This we found to be a very attractive way to raise money for the society, and it created interest among the members. We were surprised we had such old members. After we counted the collection, it was more than the amount assessed. But, of course, some gave more than the number of their age. We were proud of our collection, and as this token of love and devotion of our Lord goes out, a prayer from our society goes with it. Our prayers, desires and aims are found in these few verses.

Lord, help us live from day to day
In such a self-forgetful way
That even when we kneel to pray,
Our prayers shall be for—others.

Help us in all the work we do
To ever be sincere and true,
And know that all we'll do for you
Must needs be done for—others.

Others, Lord, yes others!
Let this one motto be:
Help us to live for others,
That we may live for Thee.

BY HERMON ELDREDGE.

XIV. PARIS.

"Oh, London is a man's town—
There's power in the air;
And Paris is a woman's town,
With flowers in her hair."

Mark Twain once said that half the lies told about him were not true, and I surely was told a lot of things about Paris which I did not find to be true. I fear that much of her reputed extravagance and extremes in fashion and gay life are something like our Broadway's "white-light district" which you will find more largely patronized by outsiders and visitors to the great metropolis than you will by New Yorkers themselves. And so my limited observation of Paris would lead me to say that the native Parisian is not as extreme or as extravagant in manners or dress as he (or she) is widely advertised to be, but rather a very decent, sensible sort of a person, who is not in much of a hurry and smiles politely at the antics and hustle and extravagance of the ever-present tourist and takes his money as he smiles.

I was warned about trading in Paris, and told that every one was trying to "pinch" the American, and that prices were excessive; but I had been there only a few days when I found that it was one of the cheapest places in which to live and to trade of which I have any knowledge. Taxis are for the rich at home, but a taxi came to our hotel and took four of us to the Louvre, a distance of two miles, for four francs, or about twenty cents in American money. Of course, the driver wants his invariable tip—but that is only 10 per cent, and we make it an extra franc for good measure; and we have paid a little over six cents apiece for a taxi for a two-mile ride. The same in America would cost us from one to two dollars, depending on the city in which you found yourself.

Of course, we could have gone cheaper, as we found the next day that we could walk about two blocks and get the subway and go to the same place for 35 centimes, or an amount equal to about one and two-thirds cents in our American money. Board and rooms cost about one-half of American prices, but, of course, wages and salaries and everything is cheaper.

The common people of Paris are desperately poor, but they are cheerful and there are no slums such as we have in our large American cities. Each morning a woman with a cart came along the street under my hotel-room window and dumped out each garbage can on a piece of carpet or canvas she carried, and went through it for what she could use, and put the rest back. And she was a fine-appearing, healthly-looking woman under middle age. Another older woman gathered stray bottles and sold them. Their men were gone, as a rule, for France lost one million eight hundred thousand men by death in the late war, and twice that many were wounded or disabled by disease or exposure. Then, add to that the nearly seven hundred thousand men now in the French army, and you can see that there is a man shortage in France's work-a-day world.

But even more dreadful than this is the future that France fears. Its population is hardly holding its own, while its ancient enemy (Germany) is growing swiftly in its birth rate. Only last week there was a warning poster shown throughout Paris that for every child born in France, there were thirty-six born in Germany. I am not authority for these figures, but they were displayed, and whatever the figures are, they are a cause of national alarm. There is no doubt that the use of strong drink by fathers and mothers is a contribution to the situation. Wine and much stronger drink are common at all meals, and especially at the midday and evening meals.

Our very first pilgrimage is to Napoleon's Arch of Triumph, where the "unknown soldier" of France lies buried with a flame of fire at his head which is lighted at sunrise and extinguished at sunset every day. We visited the grave of the "unknown soldier" of Britain, in London, where men passing uncover, and of the "unknown soldier" of Belgium, in the great public square, who was buried with as great honors as was our own American "unknown soldier," in Arlington, by our President. But none seemed to grip you quite as much as this grave which is in the heart of this great city, where twelve avenues meet and where devotions of flowers and fire are rendered by a different society each day, and which is always surrounded with women in deepest black, and silent men with uncovered and bowed heads. France has a special deep interest in this "unknown" grave, for hundreds of thousands of thousands of French boys were never identified, and hundreds of stricken mothers gather day by day from some long or shorter pilgrimage to this spot and know not but this "unknown" boy may be their son who left and never returned.

Napoleon's tomb is a center of interest and is gorgeously enshrined in a wonderful Church dome in such a way that it is beneath the floor level as you come in. They tell us that is, so that any one looking at his tomb must bow their head as they look. But there seemed to me to be a better reason, for high up above his tomb in the Church was a full-size figure of the Christ, and I remember that where I stood that I had to look down on Napoleon and up to Christ. Surely there was never greater contrast in the world than Napoleon's ambition to win by the sword and by force, and Christ's way of love and sacrifice and service for others. How long will poor, deluded France and the world follow Napoleon, and when will they find that their only hope is in Christ?

Versailles Palace, with its art and grandeur and history, was a well-spent day. Here Louis XVI and his predecessors lived in luxury so extreme that its tax and tyranny on the people brought revolution. Think of paying a half-million dollars for a coach to be used but once in a procession and then to be too precious to use again! The King sensed the end of such things in his well-known exclamation: "After me, the deluge," and come it did—a deluge of blood such as France never had known.

It does an American's heart good to enter the halls where Woodrow Wilson sat with the world's leaders in the Palace of Versailles, and to go out and see the street they built for him and the avenue to which they gave his name. And then to see the statues of Benjamin Franklin and of George Washington in the public parks, and to see also the statue of Lafayette in the beautiful Tuilleries Gardens, with the inscription, "Presented to France by the school children of the United States of America." But the finest statue of the American soldier with cap held high in air coming to the relief of France. I could almost shout and weep in the same breath at the sight of it.

But there is so much that one might tell of Paris and which again must be another story in our Sunday School Herald, for the boat waits at the landing at Havre, and in our next and last article of this series we are "Homeward Bound."

Paris, France.

THE PERFECT MAN.

Four simple rules for attaining perfect manhood.

"And Jesus advanced in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and men."—Luke 2:52.

These fourteen words tell us that Jesus grew in all four important ways. He grew mentally; He grew physically; He grew spiritually; He grew socially.

When Jesus said, "My meat is to do the will of Him that sent me" (John 4:34) and "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God" (Matt. 4:4) He told us that He grew into perfect manhood because He did God's will in all things.

So to grow into perfect manhood, it is only necessary to follow God's directions.

Rule 1. Doing the will of God in my physical life. "Know ye not that your body is a temple of the Holy Spirit which is in you, which ye have from God? and ye are not your own: for ye were bought with a price; glorify God, therefore, in your body."—Cor. 6:19-20. When I disobey the laws of health, I am disobeying the will of God.

Rule 2. Doing the will of God in my mental life. "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honorable, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report—if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."—Philip. 4:8. "Set your mind on the things that are above, not on the things that are upon the earth."—Colos. 3:2. When I fill my mind with dirty jokes, foul words and impure and evil thoughts I am disobeying the will of God.

Rule 3. Doing the will of God in my social life. "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; even as I have loved you, that ye also love one another."—John 13:34. "And if I have the gift of prophecy, and know all mysteries and all knowledge; and if I have all faith, so as to remove mountains, but have not love, I am nothing."—1 Cor. 13:2. Love in its best, purest, truest meaning. Not only must I love my fellow-men, the dumb beasts and the beauties of nature, but I must so live as to have all things love me. It is a well-known fact that flowers bloom better for one who really loves them than for those who do not. Even they repay the love given them.

Rule 4. Doing the will of God in my spiritual life. "Teacher, which is the greatest commandment in the law? and He said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind."—Matt. 22:36-37. When I let anything, either business or pleasure, interfere with my worship of God, I am disobeying the will of God.

"But seek ye first His kingdom, and His righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto thee."—Matt. 6:33.

Seek in the right spirit and read the fourteen verses preceding this to see what shall be added. All I can desire.

"But abide thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them; and that from a babe thou hast known the sacred writings which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus."—2 Tim. 3:14-15.

OUR PLEDGES
Men and Millions Sacred, Solemn and Binding.

These obligations were made through the Church to the Kingdom of God and to all that pertains to building up that Kingdom in the world, so far as our Christian Church is concerned. As Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., has so pertinently pointed out: "A Christian can no more drop his pledges than he can drop his prayers or his Church membership. Misfortune may make it impossible to meet financial obligations--'When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both' (Luke 7:42)--but not till 'they had nothing to pay.' Obligations to God are as binding as obligations to men, and God will help those who try to keep their pledges."

Many are making great sacrifices to meet these obligations and pay these pledges. Is your Church on this list? If not, let's do our best to get it there. If there, let's get it in first place.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

"Study to shew thyself approved of God."—2 Tim. 2.

Of all created things on earth, the soul lives a charmed life. It alone is immortal and imperishable. All else must fade and fall and cease to be. Everything else is passing to decay and death. Only the soul survives. It will never pass away. Revelation tells us that earth will melt with fervent heat, the stars shall fall, and all creation totter to ruin. The entire universe shall be gathered up like a scroll, but in the midst of this destruction and universal change, the soul will blossom into perfection and beauty and never know corruption.

It is a part of our every-day life to build up our souls in the likeness of God.

Prayer.—Our Father, help us to lean hard on Thee for our guidance and our grace, and help us to make each day count for more of Thy likeness in us. In His name we ask it. Amen.

TUESDAY.

TO BE HAPPY, RESPECT THE PROPERTY OF OTHERS.

Are you willing to have others think that you are not accustomed to nice things? Then respect the property of others.

Are you willing to have others think that your parents have never had anything beyond the barest necessities? Then respect the property of others.

Are you willing to have others wish that you did not exist in your neighborhood? Then respect the property of others.

Are you, by your conduct in the community, going to make it possible for those with whom you come in contact to say and feel "what a relief" if you are ill or out of the city? If you are this sort of man, woman or child you are going to regret it.

The roughest and toughest finds a time when friends are necessary. You cannot keep friends unless you respect the property of others.

Is it too much trouble for you to teach your children to respect the property of others? To respect the property of others is the open door to a successful life. Cultivate it yourself, and do as you would have others do to you. (Copyright, 1924, International Feature Syndicate, Inc.)

WEDNESDAY.

REJECTING HOME TALENT.

"But Jesus said unto them, A prophet is not without honor, save in his own country and in his own house."—Matt. 13:57.

That was what Jesus said, and it was true. But it ought never to have been true. If there is any place on earth that a prophet should have honor it ought to be in his own country and in his own home. It is a sad reflection upon the country and home whenever it is necessary to make such a statement, and no reflection upon the prophet. Nazareth should have been proud of their young man, Jesus, and should have listened to Him. It would have madeNazareth great. But they threw away their greatest asset by rejecting Him. There are Churches and towns, and even homes, that are making the same mistake. If one of their boys or girls undertakes something worth-while, they, too often, have to leave home. It ought not so to be. Our own boys and girls ought to be dearer to us than to any one else, and we ought to appreciate them and give them a hearing at home.

Prayer.—Our Father, bless our home and our Church. Give us the proper spirit of appreciation of the talents of those who are our very own. In Jesus' name. Amen.—T. E. White.

THURSDAY.

WANTED—MANTLED MEN.

"And cast his mantle on him."—1 Kings 19: 16-21.

The history of service for God has been the same throughout all the ages. It has been a story of called into service, passing through trials and tribulations, enduring tedious troubles and tests; but, with faith fixed, always coming out triumphant and victorious.

The Church has had many mighty men whom God has ordained for His tasks. The Church needs mighty men today to perform the tasks that God has now for the world. There is no call of the world that is greater. All righteousness pleads for leaders who will step out for the kingdom of God. Not leaders who may be pushed off the road and become as so many wooden soldiers; but leaders who are anointed with the Holy Spirit, such as was Elisha when the mantle fell upon him; for men who will wear this mantle without fear or falter, who will press on to the goal indifferent to the criticisms of others; men with love in their hearts for God and their fellowman; men who will put first things first; men who will be willing to live or die for their Lord; men whose hearts are in fellowship and sympathy both with God and humanity; men who will be loyal servants of Christ straight through.

Let us consider God's call for us. Have we any call to bear a mantle for Him? May God bless us all for service.

Prayer.—Pray today that if the Lord has anything for us to do, He will call us and make it plain what it is, and then pray for the power to lay the soul open to that call. In His name. Amen.

FRIDAY.

GLIMPSES OF EDEN.

"A flaming sword which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life."—Gen. 3:23-24.

The truth behind this great picture of Genesis with its divine steeds of the cherubim, and the revolving sword of unquenchable fire, is: man can never go back to his physical life, never rethink his thoughts or re-enact his deeds. He is forced out and on by invisible powers. Invincible divine forces stand sentinel about the gates of yesterday, and a flaming sword turns every way about his past.

Careful we should be how we live, how we think, and remember that every day is critical. Every evening we shut the gate behind us, the gate these hands can never open again.

The cherubim did not destroy Eden, nor did the flame consume the tree of life. The divine ones guard it to keep it open. The past is not destroyed. All sweet memories which lie out in the midst of the years are guarded. Faces and forms of loved ones; fancies too delicate for time and flesh left back in the years, are still kept by the angels. There were noble aspirations and lofty ideals which we were forced to abandon by the stern call of duty. These are not lost, but kept as treasures of the heart, where none break through and steal.

We may return to this guarded way, this Eden of the soul, if not by flesh, then by spirit. There is a name which opens the Eden of God to the seeking soul, a name before which the swift cherubim fall, and the flaming sword is harmless—it is the name of Jesus.—Rev. A. E. Gregory.

Prayer.—That we should ever seek to remember that, to earnest souls, the highest blessings God can bestow are still open, and that the Father's love has prepared a greater Eden, where there is neither sorrow nor parting.

SATURDAY.

THE LORD IS COMING.

"Behold, I come quickly."—Rev. 22.

How careless we are about Christ's coming! We get up in the morning and never think that He may come to us that day. We lie down at night and never think that we may never awake again in this life. We go to our business and never think that it all may suddenly end and call us to our judgment before we return home again.

Certainly that we should not spend all our time thinking that we are going to die soon. But we should take life seriously enough to make every moment of it, day and night, count for character, in ourselves, in others, for the happiness of the world, and for the complete life.

Prayer.—Our Father, however much there may be scoffers, and however many doubters and apostates from the God-given way, hold us fast in Thy embrace and give us the desire to do things that make for God and glory. In His name we ask it. Amen.

SUNDAY.

"I WAS IN THE SPIRIT ON THE LORD'S DAY."—Rev. 1:10.

Alexander Whyte testified to this effect: "I have had a lifetime's experience of a scrupulously kept Lord's Day, and this day, so kept, has been one of my chief blessings. I testify with the greatest integrity that from my childhood down to this hour I have greatly valued the seclusion and silence and rest, and proper reading on the Sabbath Day.

As I look back, I bless God for those who brought me up to such a legacy of Sabbath observance, and I would be very ungrateful were I silent or to do less than all that within me lies to secure such a Sabbath for my own household and also for every one else.

Prayer.—Our Father, make us so in harmony with Thy will that our Sabbaths may be sweet with religious thoughts. Turn us to the silent strengths of life. Forbid any wavering in our hearts and draw us into the everlasting laws of Thy life. In His name we ask it. Amen.

Kiddies' Korner

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT, Editor.

DEAR KIDDIES:

Last Sunday I went to Sunday School and found some children who didn't know about the "Kiddies' Korner"—and their mammas took THE CHRISTIAN SUN, too; but the dear Kiddies had just failed to find our "Kiddies' Korner."

Your editor has been so busy lately learning to drive a new Ford, and going to see a lot of my Kiddies with the new Ford; and one day the Ford just ran so fast that it 'most ran off the track, and 'most ran clean over a big ol' truck. Oh! my, gracious me! But we didn't get a bit run over—the truck or the little Ford either—so we just laughed and laughed at each other. And a big ol' policeman was there, too; and my! he didn't laugh at all. I don't know why that was, do you?

Your loving editor,
MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT.

THE SWING.

By Robert Louis Stevenson.

How do you like to go up in a swing,
Up in the air so blue?
Oh! I do think it's the pleasantest thing
Ever a child can do.

Up in the air and over the wall
Till I can see so wide,
Rivers, and trees, and cattle, and all
Over the countryside.

Till I look down on the garden green,
Down on the roofs so brown,
Up in the air I go flying again,
Up in the air and down.

JESSIE'S SURPRISE.

One day Jessie went out to play in her sandpile. Her father had shoveled the snow off from it. Her sister Charlotte, who was two years old, was with her. Jessie was five.

They played for fifteen minutes, then Jessie looked up. Charlotte had gone. The tracks were shown on the crystal white snow. Jessie followed the tracks and at last they led right into the woods.

Poor Jessie was frightened; she kept saying to herself, "Oh, where is she? where is she?"

Jessie didn't have any more time to think, for just then she fell into a hole. Down, down she went until she stood before the palace of the Fairy Queen.

The door opened. She went in, and the very first thing she saw was the Queen sitting on the throne, with a little girl on her lap. Who do you think it was? Why, it was Charlotte! But Charlotte did not look natural, for she had delicate pink wings and a pink dress to match. When the Queen saw Jessie she summoned a fairy to put a beautiful dress on her. At once the Fairy obeyed her.

When Jessie came back, the Queen took her and put her on her lap by her sister.

"I will wave my wand over you if you want to be a Fairy," said the Queen.

"That would be just what I would like to be, but may I have at least five minutes to see my mother and give her the last kiss?"

"You won't ever be able to see your sister or my palace again," said the Queen. "Your sister is my Fairy, and unless you want to be one, you never will see her again."

The Queen kissed her, and said, "You little darling!"

Just then she woke up. Her mother was by her side. "Why, have I been sleeping in the sand?" said Jessie. "Hurry up, dear," said her mother, "come into the house and get warm."—Alice Clough, Raymond, Minn. (Age 10 years), in Child Life.

Mother so loving,
And father so true;
Sister and brother,
And wee baby, too—
All love each other,
And each does his part
To show by kind actions
The love in his heart.

DADDY TARFOOT'S CORN ROAST.

By the Nyces.

Daddy Tarfoot had the very finest patch of corn in the whole neighborhood—and he was mighty proud of it, too. It was Yellow Bantam and sweet as sugar.

Daddy Longears said he could actually see it growing, and one day—well, along in September—he told Daddy Tarfoot that he ought to give a party—"roasting ears and baked potatoes—mm-mmm!"

"Just the thing!" And Daddy Tarfoot slapped his knee jovially. "Let's see—tonight's moonlight—and the corn's in the milk—we'll fly around and get every one here to help—half the fun in a party is getting ready for it."

No sooner said than done! Daddy Longears lippety-lipped over to the Cottontail's and told Pa Cottontail to tell all his neighbors that they were invited to Daddy Tarfoot's corn roast that very night, and be sure to come early.

And Daddy Tarfoot lippety-lipped to the Hopover's and asked Henry Hopover would he invite the Silvertails and the Twitchets and any one else he could think of. "And don't forget Zip Coon and his folks—they've been eyeing that patch for some time."

In less than an hour the little folk of the woods came streaming from all directions—chattering gaily, each trying to reach Daddy Tarfoot's first.

Granny Wobblenose carried her own little knife—no one could husk corn as neatly as she; and Sophia Silvertail had acorn cookies.

Jemima Hopover set the Cottontail bunnies and the Hopover bunnies and the Silvertail squirrels to gathering cones to start a blaze.

By the time the big moon (honey-colored) was peeping through the pines, Daddy Tarfoot had a great pile of corn ready and waiting; and he rubbed his hands and said: "Well, folks, I'm hungry as a bear; and if the ladies don't mind it I'll roast the corn—for I'm a fine hand at the business."

"Mind!" exclaimed Susan Cottontail, "I'm sure I, for one, should be thankful to sit down to a meal that I didn't cook myself!"

So! Simon Silvertail kindled the fire, bright and clear, and Daddy Tarfoot put his ears to roast; and Hendy Hopover kindled another fire and Daddy Longears put the potatoes to bake.

Well! Everything was going beautifully when Uncle Strapleaf Turnip came up with a great armful of dried moss and without so much as saying "by your leave" flung it full on Daddy Tarfoot's fire.

Up shot the blaze; and the ladies screamed, and the corn scorched, and poor Daddy Tarfoot burned his arms dreadfully. But Uncle Turnip laughed sort of nervously and said he liked his corn scorched—and they could give him all of the first lot.

And he ate every bit of it—and became so ill that they had to call Doctor Pedley. So he had his lesson.

Mrs. Zip Coon did up Daddy Tarfoot's burns with a strip torn from her old work apron; she had her best apron with her.

The ladies waited on Daddy Tarfoot so that he had a good time in spite of his burns and he felt sorry for Uncle Turnip and told him he could carry an armful of corn home with him—to eat when he felt better.

Well—the party was a great success. Granny Wobblenose roasted the corn, and it was done to a turn—so were the potatoes.

Then Bob Cricket and his folks piped up—"Crik-crik-crik!" And the little bunnies and the little squirrels and the little Zip Coons played games in the silvery moonlight. So one and all they thanked Daddy Tarfoot for their lovely party. Then they bade one another good-night and went happily home and to bed.—The Farm Journal.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

October 19, 1924.

Subject: "The Parable of the Sower."

Golden Text: "The sower soweth the word." —Mark 4:14.

Lesson: Mark 4:1-20.

Devotional Reading: Psa. 1.

Reference Material: Matt. 13:1-23; Luke 8:4-15.

The Master put great truths in simple words. And He often did this in very informal ways. On this particular occasion, the roof of the Church was God's blue sky, the pews were the fields by the seaside, and the pulpit was a small boat. His congregation was a "very great multitude" of humble folk who had come out to hear Him. His passion for teaching the truth, His simple way of teaching, and the note of authority in His teaching were elements that caused the "common people" to hear Him gladly. The Master never had any trouble in getting a crowd, for never a man spake like He spake.

The lesson is called the parable of the sower. It might just as well, perhaps even a little better, be called the parable of the soil, for in this particular instance the Master was not concerned so much with the content of the message or the truth, but with the reception which it received by His hearers. And He impressed this fact indelibly upon the minds and hearts of His hearers by a simple story. It is quite likely that the "text" was suggested by the sight of a sower at work in one of the near-by fields or upon a hillside. In any case, Jesus was talking in terms the people understood.

The story is familiar enough to all of us—how the man went forth to sow; how some seed fell on the hard, well-beaten path and was eaten by the fowls of the air; how some fell upon rocky ground, which had no depth, and which offered no reserve strength for the growing plant; how some fell on good ground, but among thorns, which grew faster than the plants and choked them out; and how some fell on good ground and brought forth in varying proportions. This is the story in brief.

The Master then interpreted the parable. He said that He, or any other earnest teacher, was the sower, and that the truth or "the word" of God was the seed. The hearers were the soil. And those hearers were of four kinds:

1. The stolid hearer. He is the man who is unmoved by truth. Through hardness of heart, inattention, indifference, or willful disobedience to recognize duty, the truth never gets into his life. Even as the birds of the air eagerly seize upon the seed on the beaten path, just so does the "evil one" steal away the truth. And the last state of that man is the same, or worse than the first.

2. The sentimental hearer. He is the person who at least gives heed to the truth and even responds with more or less emotion. But religion, while undoubtedly a matter of emotion, is more than mere emotion, and should be made of sterner stuff. After the first burst of enthusiasm has died down, after the excitement of the "big meetin' " has passed, when the time of testing and ridicule and persecution has come, this type of hearer "withers." He has "no root in himself." His religion dies, for religion, like life, is a matter of growth, and it never thrives in the thin soil of mere sentimentalism and emotionalism. The religious graveyard of the world is full of cults that embodied this type of religion. "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear."

3. The sordid hearer. He is the man who may have many fine qualities and may do many good things, but "the cares of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches, and the lusts (or desires) of other things—things, things, things: when will we learn that souls do not thrive on things, and that a man's life does not consist of the abundance of things that he possesses—crowd the truth and the finer things out of his life, even as the coarse and tough thorns crowd and crush the tender plants. All too many of us belong to this class. Let us beware lest we put first things last, and last things first.

4. The sincere hearer. Thank God, all hearers are not stolid, or sentimental, or sordid. There are some who hear the truth and try to live it. They try to become doers of what they hear. And in the lives of such hearers there springs up fruitage that bears some thirty, some sixty, and some an hundredfold in the finer qualities of life and service. "Go thou and do likewise."

Some Suggestive Teaching Points.

1. Great truths can be put in simple forms.
2. The world listens to the man who has a message.
3. The fault is not always with the messenger; it is sometimes with the hearer.
4. The heart of the hearer determines in large measure the value of the truth heard.
5. Environment is a vital factor in character formation.
6. Even sincere hearers differ in their fruitage.
7. It is our business to sow the need.
8. Preoccupation is a menace to spiritual growth.
9. Hearts are hardened by hearing and not doing.
10. "Every duty we omit obscures some truth we might have known."
11. What we hear in Church depends in large measure upon what we bring to Church.
12. Teachers and preachers should see to it that the truth is put in simple ways.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

By Wm. T. Scott.

October 19, 1924.

Topic: "My Denomination—Its Organization and Aims."

Scripture Lesson: 1 Cor. 12:1-13.

The Christian Church is "an agency organized for the purpose of helping to win the world for Christ." Our aim is to promote Christian brotherhood, and we as a body recognize the brotherhood of man and the fatherhood of God. We, with all of our concerted efforts, are endeavoring to promote that principle.

The largest body of the Christian Church is the General Christian Convention, which meets every four years. There are five regional or district Conventions. Each regional Convention is composed of Conferences, and the Conferences are composed of local Churches.

The Christian Church has five general secretaries for the different departments of its organization. Rev. W. P. Minton is secretary of foreign missions, and our missionary fields are principally in Porto Rico and in Japan. Rev. O. S. Thomas is secretary of home missions. This work is carried on among foreigners, negroes and the mountaineers. Hon. O. W. Whitelock is secretary of publications. Dr. W. A. Harper is secretary of Christian education. Rev. R. C. Helfenstein is secretary of evangelism, and Rev. W. H. Dennison is secretary of stewardship and finance. Dr. F. G. Coffin is president of the General Convention, and Dr. J. F. Burnett is secretary.

If we would inform ourselves of the plans of our Church for the care of the program which she is undertaking, there would be more love and loyalty to her. Our Church is that of ministry, and we, as followers of that banner, should not simply render services to the Church as an institution, but our efforts should be "through the Church, to Christ, for humanity."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

The history of the Christian Church is unique in its making. Almost every Protestant sect can trace its origin to some individual reformer. The Lutherns have their Luther, the Presbyterians their Calvin, the Quakers their Fox, the Methodists their Wesley, the Disciples their Campbell. The Christian Church never had such a leader, neither can we trace our origin nor principles back to any one man or Conference. The Christian Church in the South, East and West arose almost simultaneously without either of the particular leaders knowing of the work of the others. Rev. James O'Kelly, who withdrew from the Methodist Church in 1792 with many others of his same convictions, began the movement in the South. He and his followers met in Lebanon Church, Virginia, August, 1794, and chose the name Christian to the exclusion of all other names. Rev. Jones organized his first Church in Lyndon, Vt., 1802. Rev. Elias Smith began publishing the Christian Magazine, 1805, and he founded the Herald of Gospel Liberty at Portsmouth, N. H., 1808. Rev. Barton W. Stone, who was born near Port Tobacco, Md., December 24, 1772, became a candidate for the ministry in the Presbyterian Church in 1793. He withdrew from the Presbyterians in 1804 and became a leader of the Christian Church in Kentucky.

The Christian Church does not have a creed, and its members worship God according to the dictates of their conscience.

There are five principles upon which the three divisions of the rising Church agreed. They are scriptural, and are as follows: The Lord Jesus Christ the only Head of the Church; Christian, a sufficient name for the Church and for the members of the Church; the Holy Bible, a sufficient rule of faith and practice; Christian character, a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership; the right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience, a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

The Christian Church published the world's first Christian magazine, and offered the first educational institution to both young ladies and young men on the same basis.

We have a great deal to be proud of; we have a great challenge thrown out to us by the world. The policies of the Christian Church are those that Christ planned, and we must see to it that we, guided by His spirit, will carry on the kingdom's work in a definite way, making the kingdom for which He prayed a reality in the hearts of men.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

On Tuesday, September 30th, the Sells Floto Circus gave their show in Burlington and extended an invitation to fifty of the Orphanage children and their attendants and allowed them to attend free of charge. In their letter inviting them, they made this statement: "It gives us one of the greatest of pleasures to have the Orphanage children as our guests." The taxi people of Burlington gladly offered their service free of charge to carry the children to Burlington and back after the show was over. This invitation was gladly accepted, also the services of the taxis, and we went down fifty strong.

It was a joyful afternoon for our children, and they took a look at the animals and then went in the big show, where trained horses, all sorts of animals and trained folks entertained for two hours. The beautiful horses waltzing took the eye of the children, the trained animals attracted them also, but one thing that took them to wonderland was the actress who hung in the top of the tent and did one hundred and twenty-three different stunts. It was a happy occasion for them, and we are very appreciative of the courtesy shown us by both the show people and the taxi people.

LIVESAY—GRIFFIN.

A beautiful home wedding was celebrated at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Griffin, of Waverly, Va., September 3, 1924, at 4:30 P. M., when Mr. William Hinton Livesay led their daughter, Miss Mary Nancy Griffin to the marriage altar of the home. The ceremony was preceded by a beautiful solo, "Constancy," rendered by Miss Mary West and accompanied on the piano by Miss Elsie Wilcox, who also played the wedding marches as the bridal party entered to and retired from the ceremony. The attendants were Mrs. Lois Upton, of Norfolk, Va., sister of the bride, and Mr. Moss D. Livesay, brother of the groom. The ring ceremony was used, Rev. Jas. L. Foster, pastor of Waverly Christian Church, officiated.

A large number of family kindred and friends witnessed the happy occasion and joined most heartily in good wishes for the happy bride and groom. The groom is a member of the firm B. E. Livesay & Sons, of Waverly. The bride is one of Waverly's most popular and lovable young women. The writer has known these young people since they were children, and feels that the sentiment of the whole community is "God bless Hinton and Mary" as they journey life's highway. The bride and groom will spend some time on a pleasure trip North, and will return soon and make their home at Waverly, Va. JAS. L. FOSTER.

VAUGHAN.

God, in His great wisdom, saw fit to send the death angel into the home of Mr. Frank Vaughan, of Epson, N. C., and claim the spirit of his faithful and devoted wife at the age of thirty-four, on Saturday A. M. September 27, 1924.

Mrs. Vaughan was the youngest daughter of Deacon L. W. Lassiter. She had been confined to her bed for four weeks, but bore her suffering patiently, never complaining. She preferred faith in Jesus Christ and united with Liberty Christian Church in her early 'teen age, where she remained a member until death.

The seventeen years of her married life were spent as a devoted wife and mother. Her mother was called to her dying bedside on September 26th, but was stricken with paralysis and died nine hours before the daughter. The two white caskets were indeed a sad scene to behold.

Bennie was known as a good woman. Her husband said if there ever was a Christian, she was one. His people said her name should have been "Patience"—a good testimony for her. Besides her grief-stricken husband, she leaves to mourn their loss six children, age from 16 months to 16 years; father, one sister, one brother, and a host of relatives and friends.

The double funeral was conducted from her Church on Sunday at 2:30 o'clock by her pastor, Rev. J. E. Franks. In spite of the rain, there was a large number of friends, with many beautiful floral tributes that was an evidence of the high esteem in which she was held.

Fifteen young ladies carried flowers for her, and fifteen aged ladies for her mother. They were laid to rest in the Christian family physician, with a heart cemetery to await the coming of our Lord.

This was a sad scene, but soon some joy was to follow. In less than six hours after the funeral, we had the pleasure of seeing this young husband dedicate his heart to God. He took advantage of Mr. Ham's last call to the unsaved in Henderson, and the good of love, invited him to go give his heart to Jesus He went at once, and by this act started on the road that leads to a better home, where there will be no more parting.

May God bless the bereaved ones. May the dear husband and children trust in the Lord with all their heart, and in all their ways acknowledge Him, and He will direct their paths.

MRS. R. J. NEWTON.

MOST PITIFUL SIGHT IN LIFE

is a man or woman who has no "will-power" as a result of nerve force exhaustion

All the physical suffering which may be caused by nervous irritability, headaches, backaches, indigestion, heart palpitation, etc., as a result of nerve force exhaustion, are nothing as compared with its awful effects upon the mind and "will power."

The most pitiful sight in life is a man or woman who has "no will"—who has noble impulses and desires but not enough "will power" to carry them through. The memory also fails, the judgment is bad and everything therefore seems to go wrong.

In such cases, do not take mere stimulating medicines nor narcotic drugs (which only further injure your delicate nervous system), but what you need is something to put more nerve force into your nerves and more iron into your blood to help make new nerve force with which to feed your starving nerve cells. This is most effectively accomplished by the free use of Nuxated Iron. This valuable product contains the principal chemical constituent of active living nerve force in a form which most resembles that in the brain and nerve cells of man. It also contains strength-giving organic iron for the blood and may therefore be said to be both a blood and a nerve food. Millions of people are using it. Satisfactory results are guaranteed to every purchaser or the manufacturers will refund your money. Beware of substitutes. Look for the word 'Nuxated" on every package. Sold by all druggists

GUNTER.

Snoda Brown Gunter was born May 10, 1878, and died August 29, 1924, age 46 years, 3 months and 18 days.

In 1894 she was married to J. L. Gunter. To this union were born ten children, eight of whom are living. Surviving relatives are her husband, J. L. Gunter, and children—Mrs. A. C. Williams, of Ramseur, and George, Walter, Otis, Myrtle, Ruth, Woodrow and Frances, all of whom are at home—her parents, J. C. and Ellen Brown, of Asheboro; six sisters—Mrs. A. C. Ward, of Burlington; Mrs. A. L. Womack, of Liberty; Mrs. J. G. Gray, of Asheboro, and Misses Vella, Isa, and Fleta Brown, of Asheboro—four brothers, Messrs. Willard, Walter, Jacob and Ernest Brown, of Asheboro, and two grandchildren, Ruby Gordon and Lois Williams.

In early life, she became a Christian, and for a number of years was a member of Ramseur Christian Church. For the last fifteen years she was a member of Pleasant Ridge Church. She was a faithful, devoted wife and a loving mother. Burial services were conducted by her pastor, Rev. T. J. Green.

A FRIEND.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas, it has pleased our Heavenly Father to call to his eternal reward our brother deacon and fellow-worker in the Lord, Otis Scott Boyd;

Therefore, it seems fitting that we, the Board of Deacons of Pleasant Grove Church (Va.), who were actively associated with him in life, should express their esteem of him in death.

That his life among, and his services with, us has left us a Christ-like example of loyalty and unselfish devotion to his Church and to his home; be it resolved:

First, That we record our profound sorrow at the loss of this honored and worthy member, realizing that we have lost a beloved friend.

Second, That we extend to the bereaved family and friends our deepest sympathy and earnest prayers. May the love of God be their comfort and sustain them in this hour of grief.

Third, That a copy be sent to his family, the same recorded on the minutes of the Church, and a copy be sent to The Christian Sun.

Building a Country Sunday School

By E. L. Middleton.

Mr. Middleton possesses definite qualifications for the preparation of this work. For twelve years after leaving college, he was a day school and Sunday School teacher in a village that had "once-a-week" preaching, with half the membership of the Sunday School living in the open country; while for fourteen years more he has been a State Sunday School secretary in rural State. Mr. Middleton urges the adoption of no novel or revolutionary ideas or methods. He recognizes the place and the value of recognized Sunday School policies and methods, and has prepared a digest of the essentials in a manner plain enough to render it adaptable for use in any rural school. Methods, administration, organization and development are each and all discussed in this book in an eminently practical way.

The price of the book is $1.25. You can order it through "The Christian Sun," 1536 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By Rev. S. M. Lynam.

A Novel Drawing-Card.—

The Men's Bible Class of the Highland Presbyterian Church, Pittsburgh, Pa., has a new way of bringing men to Sunday School. A tempting breakfast of ham and eggs, served by the men in the social hall of the Church just preceding the class period, has proved a great builder. The man who said that the best way to a man's heart was by way of his stomach was not so far wrong after all. Napoleon said that soldiers would not fight with empty stomachs, neither can they pray, or will they pray much when hungry. It is not so much the food which draws the men to the Church as the fellowship of the breakfast period. The Church needs to provide more wholesome fellowship, man is essentially a social being.

Buys New Equipment.—

New locomotives, freight and passenger cars, costing approximately nine million dollars, have just been purchased by the Southern Railway Company for delivery during November and December of this year and the early months of 1925.

Included in the purchase are 3,000 box cars, 250 flat cars, 250 stock cars, 25 passenger coaches and 10 baggage-express cars, 6 dining cars, 25 heavy Mikado-type freight locomotives, 15 heavy Pacific-type passanger locomotives, and 10 eight-wheel switching engines.

All of this equipment will be of the latest type, the passenger and flat cars of all-steel construction, the box and stock cars with steel underframes, and the locomotives being similar in design to locomotives recently built for the Southern.

A Great Church Dedicated.—

With two bishops, the Mayor of the city, and other prominent men participating, the Methodists of Chicago held the dedication service of their seven-million-dollar skyscraper Church, known as the Chicago Temple, on September 28th. It is the tallest building in the city, and is surmounted by a gigantic spire on the summit of which is a golden cross which stands 566 feet above the street. No other Church building in Chicago is in such close proximity with so much of the city's commercial life. In 1831 the first Methodist Church in Chicago was organized, with four members, who built a log Church six years later at a cost of $580. During the same year, the congregation acquired a wooden warehouse which stood on the site of the present magnificent Church. This is the fourth Church to be built on that site.

Germany May Enter League.—

Germany has been unofficially notified that the necessary two-thirds vote required to insure her admission into the League of Nations when she may apply is certain. The question of a permanent seat for Germany on the council, however, is somewhat disturbing. Either another seat will be created or Spain or Brazil will be asked to cede its seat to Germany. Spain and Brazil are suffering much uneasiness on this account, and it presents a very real difficulty to the League. The other course of creating another permanent seat on the council will probably be followed. The League is now in session at Geneva, Switzerland. Some Germans, however, hesitate to enter the League until the accusation of war guilt has been withdrawn. It will probably be withdrawn, since the League desires members at any cost. And so a criminal will become a judge, having been absolved from all guilt.

Negro Migration Northward.—

During the last seven or eight years, tremendous changes have come in the relations of the white and negro people in America, due largely to the migration of the negroes from the South to the North. The negro population in urban cities has increased greatly until today 40 per cent of the negroes, or about 5,000,000, live in towns or cities. They have largely given up the farm for the factory, and rural service for city service. The negro as a class is becoming more ambitious and is discovering in the North that he has industrial and political power.

If the negro is not educated in Christian principles and habits he will be a menace. He is naturally emotionally religious and needs well-trained pastors and leaders to make him practically Christian. Then he will be an asset rather than a liability in any community. For this he needs Churches, schools, Christian community centers, good housing facilities and fair, courteous treatment by his white neighbors.—Exchange.

A Message from Ghandi.—

E. Stanley Jones, a missionary, whose work among the educated people of India has called forth much favorable comment, brings to American audiences a message from Mahatma Ghandi, the great reformer of India. Mr. Jones asked the great Indian leader how Christians might make Christianity more appealing, and Ghandi responded: "First, practice your religion without adulterating it or watering it down; practice it in its rugged simplicity. You must emphasize love, as love is the central thing in Christianity, and you need to study non-Christian religion more thoroughly, so that you may have a more sympathetic approach." A great message this, from a man who makes no pretenses to Christianity; but Ghandi has been frequently compared to the Christ, and these words from him would remind one of the simple Teacher of the Christian faith. The Church of Jesus does need to emphasize love, which is the center of Christianity, and the reason for the large element in America today who have no part with the Church is that we have failed to emphasize love. When we lay the emphasis on love instead of doctrinal dogmas, the world will hear our message, and not until then.

Mobilization for Peace.—

The proposal of the Federal Council of Churches to celebrate a peace mobilization day on the Sunday preceding Armistice Day is denounced as worthless by Dr. Edward Laird Mills, editor of the Pacific Christian Advocate. Dr. Mills says: "The suggestion is worse than worthless. Nobody cares what peace-lovers may do a week after election. There is distinct concern over what they may do at election. Able and competent men are running on all three major tickets. The government will go on no matter who is elected. The political campaign will not be one primarily of personalities, but of issues and attitudes. Let the people who want war, vote for the candidates who are most inclined to give them war. Let those who desire peace cast their ballots for the men who are likely to help the world to achieve organization and co-operation. This is fair to all, and it is utterly and frankly American. Mobilize for world peace on November 4th!" This is good advice which Dr. Mills is giving to Americans. We need not mobilize for peace after the election. It will be useless then; but on election day, every citizen must seek to measure up to the highest and best that is within him.

S. Parker Gilbert to Wed.—

On October 9th, S. Parker Gilbert, who has succeeded Owen D. Young as agent-general of reparations, was married to Miss Louise Todd, of Louisville, Ky. On October 11th, Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert left this country for Paris, where they will be a month attending to duties relating to Mr. Gilbert's new position. They will then go to Brussels for a stay of about a year.

S. Parker Gilbert, who has been chosen to fill probably the most important position in the world as agent-general of reparations, is only thirty-two years old. He is to see to the execution of the Dawes plan as agreed upon by the countries concerned at the London conference. The agreement reached by Germany and the allies at the London conference has been approved by the various governments. Mr. Gilbert will have charge of the reparations plan in full.

S. Parker Gilbert is a graduate of Rutgers College. He served as Under-Secretary of the Navy at the time when the United States was making loans to the allies, and is thoroughly familiar with the details of the new work which he is undertaking. There is a feeling that, despite his youth, Mr. Gilbert is admirably suited to the work which is his.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Citizens of Australia who do not vote at federal elections must pay a $10.00 fine for their negligence.

The secretary of our Reidsville, N. C., Church writes that their pastor having resigned, they are on the lookout for a successor.

Telephone calls are numbered as they reach the exchanges in France. If a subscriber loses his temper and rattles the receiver-hook, his turn is placed at the end of the list.

P. J. Kernodle, the managing editor of THE SUN, is attending the Alabama Conference. He will also attend the Georgia and Alabama Conference before returning to Richmond.

Rev. D. M. Helfenstein, D. D., father of Rev. Roy Helfenstein, Dover, Del., has gone to Dover to spend the winter in the home of his son there. But Bro. Helfenstein's hand, heart and pen will be engaged in some good and worth while work for the kingdom.

Bro. Elisha Bradshaw states that he is now open for work on the second and fourth Sundays, and would be glad to receive communication from any one interested in securing his service for either or both of those days.

Rev. A. H. Sheppard, of Columbus, Ga., is making a canvass in the Georgia and Alabama Conference in behalf of Men and Millions, endeavoring to see all who subscribed to the movement and giving them an opportunity of making a payment on their pledges. Bro. Sheppard, we feel, is the right man in the right place, and that our good friends in Georgia and Alabama will aid him in the good work he is doing.

Our good friend and dear brother Rev. F. C. Lester is neither dead nor asleep—unless that momentous and overwhelming pounding by the good Franklin, Va., people has rendered him so. It is positively great to be a beloved pastor—sometimes. Just read what they did for Bro. Lester, and then let your eyes grow green with envy. What would happen on this earth if an editor of a religious paper, or some mission secretary, were to get pounded like that? It is a delight to hear from Bro. Lester, even if a pounding did have to shove him into print.

Mr. James Bradford, Broadway, Va., has kindly consented to assist the mission secretary in the good work of Men and Millions in the Valley of Virginia Conference. The Mission Board, in its recent session, decided to secure a person for each Conference, so that between now and December 25th, all who have pledged to Men and Millions may have an opportunity of knowing just how their account stands and be given the privilege of making some payment on these pledges where and when possible. Mr. Bradford made a fine worker for Men and Millions in his own Church, and we are sure subscribers in the Churches of the Valley Conference will be glad to welcome him and speed him on his way in the good work which he has so generously consented to do. This is the fifth year of our Men and Millions Movement, and the feeling is everywhere prevalent that the people should be fully informed as to amounts pledged and amounts paid and amounts due. We are anxious that all shall have an opportunity.

THE PRINCE OF WALES.

The recent visit of the Prince of Wales, informal and unofficial though it was, gave opportunity to accentuate the friendly feeling among the great English-speaking nations. The warmth of his reception by the crowds that greeted him on every public appearance was evidence of the depth of popular feeling. There seemed to be no indication of any sentiment save that of hearty enthusiasm.

Unquestionably, these ovations were a personal tribute to the shy young man who, with becoming dignity and a certain pleasing diffidence, carries the unique responsibilities of his position. As the heir-apparent to the throne of the greatest empire the world has known, he occupies, next to the King himself, a most conspicuous position. The fierce white light that beats upon a throne is trained upon him, although many years may elapse before he actually assumes the scepter. His every act is appraised, his every word subject to most searching judgment.

The vociferous welcome that he has received, however, was not only a tribute to a personally popular young man around whom shines the glamour of pomp and ceremony; it was a splendid recognition of the solidarity and community of interests of the great English-speaking group of nations. There is a growing sentiment in favor of closer fraternal relations between the United States and the British Commonwealth of nations. With a common racial origin, a common language upon the common law of England, and with similar ideas and social vision, there is a community of interests that brings us very close together.

The time may never come when an actual treaty of alliance may exist. Many of the foremost statesmen of the English-speaking nations agree that such a treaty would prove disastrous, but there should exist an intelligent sympathy among the peoples of the English tongue that would enable us to realize our common heritage, common life and common destiny.

Such a mutual understanding would do much for the peace and prosperity of the race. The English-speaking democracies have the power to command the peace of the world. Therefore, every event and occasion that serves to promote good will between Great Britain and the United States is to be welcomed as one more step in the direction of universal concord. This is the deeper significance of the visit of the Prince of Wales.

RECENT ELECTIONS AND PROHIBITION.

The results of recent elections in many States are gratifying to the friends of prohibition. In no State were advantages secured by the wets. In Maine, the pioneer prohibition State, all officials elected are men pledged to the enforcement of prohibition laws. In Michigan, the drys held their own, though Senator Cousins, who favors 5 per cent beer, was renominated. In Louisiana, Joseph E. Randell, nominated for Governor by the Democrats, has with one exception supported dry legislation, as has also Mr. Kemp, member of Congress from the Sixth Louisiana District. Colonel Bleese, former Governor of South Carolina and nominated for United States Senator, made a declaration during his campaign in favor of law enforcement. The nomination of McMillan, dry, to succeed Congressman Logan, wet, was a complete victory for the dry forces in South Carolina. The State of Georgia nominated W. J. Harris, a dry candidate, to succeed Senator Hardwick, wet, while Congressman W. D. Upshaw, of Georgia, a strong leader of the drys in the lower house, carried every county in his district. Returns from Washington State are most encouraging. The four congressmen renominated have long records in support of dry legislation. Other officers have expressed themselves as favoring law enforcement. Other States report equally favorable returns in support of dry laws, and every where the dry forces are on the alert to gain ground. An editorial in the Washington Times says that prohibition is guaranteed in the Constitution, and "that won't change in this generation or the next." Other newspapers are admitting the same truth. Prohibition is assured as long as the dry workers and Church people in general remain on the alert to elect officers who are pledged to law enforcement.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

N. C. CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

The Raleigh Christian Church has invited the North Carolina Christian Conference to meet with them at its next annual session, and the invitation has been accepted.

Conference will open Monday, November 24th at 8 P. M. The program is in process of preparation and will be published in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. All committees and speakers are urged to have their work in proper shape when it appears on the program.

The outstanding obligations of the Conference may be met at this session if each Church will do its full duty in raising the home mission apportionments. We are anxious to meet all these obligations at this session.

Every Church is urged to send in a full report, either by a person delegated or through the mail, by the opening session of Conference, so that the several committees may be able to do their work when they appear on the program.

Fraternally yours,

W. C. WICKER,
President.

REV. EDWIN WILLIAMS BEALE.

By Rev. W. C. Wicker, D. D.

Rev. Edwin Williams Beale was born in Southampton County, Va., January 1, 1834, and died in Suffolk, March 6, 1881. His father's name was John Spratley Beale, and his mother's name was Jane Williams, both of whom were devoted members of the Christian Church. His mother was twice married. He had one sister, Martha, and one half brother and one half sister, Joseph and Eliza Williams. He was converted at the early age of thirteen years and connected himself with the Christian Church at Union, in Southampton County, Va. The early part of his life was spent in attending school and clerking. In 1853, he entered the Graham Institute, at Graham, N. C., which was then conducted by Revs. John R. Holt and Albert G. Anderson. He was a close student, and his mind developed rapidly.

Rev. E. W. Beale was a lay delegate from the Eastern Virginia Conference to the Southern Christian Convention at Union Chapel, in Alamance County, N. C., in 1856. Liberty Church, in Norfolk County, was received into the Conference at Bethlehem, in Nansemond County, in 1856, and he was one of its delegates. At this Conference he was its assistant secretary, and was licensed to preach, and was also appointed an itinerant to the "Lower District," composed of Liberty, Jerusalem, Providence, and Pleasant Ridge Churches. He says, "In the Church at Liberty was the place where I first attempted to say a word of warning to sinners." In 1857, he was a fraternal messenger to the North Carolina and Virginia Conference at Bethlehem, in Alamance County, N. C. At the Conference at Antioch Church, in Isle of Wight County, Va., the same year, he was ordained by Revs. W. B. Wellons, Mills Barrett and R. H. Holland as the presbytery, to the work of the gospel ministry.

Rev. E. W. Beale was united in marriage to Miss Eliza Jane Faucette on the 7th of January, 1858. Of these parents were born eight children. For a time, he resided near Suffolk, Va.

In 1859, he was assistant secretary of the Conference at Providence, in Norfolk County, and was appointed a fraternal messenger to the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, which met at Pleasant Hill, in Chatham County, N. C., in 1860. In 1861, he united with the North Carolina and Virginia Conference at Hanks Chapel, in Chatham County. At the Conference in 1862 he offered a set of resolutions from the committee on the state of our country, which will be given later and which shows the deep sympathy of the true man that he was. The committee on ministerial supply announced him to have charge of Haw River district. He had charge of New Providence, near Graham, N. C. He was chairman of the committee on statistics. At the Conference at Antioch, in Chatham County, in 1864, he was appointed to deliver the next annual address before Conference. This year he had served Union, New Providence, and Shallow Ford Churches, and was elected secretary of the Home Missionary Society of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference.

At the Conference at Union, in Alamance County, in 1867, Rev. E. W. Beale served on the committee on education and as chairman of the committee on periodicals. As chairman, he says: "That the liberal views entertained by the Christian Church render it doubly necessary that our people be fully instructed in doctrines and purposes of the denomination; otherwise, they are subject to misrepresentation and abuse, the very principles which constitute our chief virtues are turned to hurtful purposes before our face." In 1868, at Salem Chapel, in Forsyth County, he served on the committee on Church letters and Church records, and on the executive committee. The home mission committee announced him to have pastoral charge of Mt. Zion. He was chosen secretary of the Sunday School Convention organized at this Conference. At Wake Chapel, in Wake County, he was on the committee on Sabbath Schools, and was appointed on the presbytery that ordained Rev. W. C. Clements. At this time he resided at McRay's Store, in Alamance County, N. C. He was assistant secretary of the Conference at Union, in Halifax County, Va., in 1870, and on resignation of Rev. J. N. Manning; he was chosen standing secretary and was appointed a fraternal messenger to the Eastern Virginia Conference, which met at Berkley, Va., in 1871. This same year the North Carolina and Virginia Conference met at Mt. Zion, in Orange County, N. C.; he reports: "Had five appointments; attended seven protracted meetings, at which more than one hundred souls were converted; received twelve into fellowship; tried to preach about sixty sermons, and received in way of pecuniary compensation about $400.00. My prospects are cheering." He records in his diary, Saturday, November 9th, "I have decided to labor another year in the bounds of the Eastern Virginia Conference." At the Conference at Shallow Well, in Moore County, N. C., in 1872, he resigned the place of standing secretary, and was granted a transfer to the Eastern Virginia Conference.

In 1873, at Cypress Chapel, in Nansemond County, Rev. E. W. Beale was received as an elder into the Conference. To this Conference he reported, "I have had the pastoral charge of the Churches at Cypress, Damascus, Berea, and Oakland; have preached seventy sermons, held three protracted meetings, received twenty-four members into the Church, married three couples, and have attended four funerals. I have received from the Churches of my charge and private individuals about $850." At this time he resided at Aspen Grove, near Chuckatuck, in Nansemond County, Va., but before the end of the year he had moved to Suffolk. He attended as a delegate the General Convention at New Providence, near Graham, N. C., in 1874. He preached at Burlington (formerly Company Shops). May 8th he visited "the old home of his wife's childhood." The Church at Damascus having been burned down, he preached at Philadelphia M. E. Church, while it was being rebuilt. The new Church was dedicated August 2d, the sermon being preached by Rev. W. B. Wellons, D. D.

At the Conference at Holy Neck, in 1874, he served on the committee on temperance and as chairman of the committee on Church records. The second day of the Conference he preached from Matt. 9:37-38, an "impressive sermon." In 1875, at the Conference at Berea, he was elected a fraternal messenger to the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, which he attended. The annual address was delivered, in 1876, before the Conference at Suffolk, Va., by Rev. E. W. Beale. He was a fraternal messenger from the Eastern Virginia Conference to the North Carolina and Virginia Conference in 1876, at Salem Chapel, in Forsyth County, N. C. At the Sunday School Convention of the Eastern Virginia Conference this year at Oakland, in Nansemond County, the subject, "The Lesson in the Closet and in the Study," was discussed by Rev. Mr. Beale "with much earnestness. He showed the great necessity of close study and prayer. He thought the more prayer, the more success."

At the Conference at Mt. Carmel, in Isle of Wight County, in 1872, Rev. E. W. Beale served as chairman of the committee on home missions, and also on the committees on education and on grouping the Churches for district meetings on fifth Sundays. He preached from Gal. 6:10. In 1878, he attended the Valley of Virginia Conference at Bethlehem, in Rockingham County, as a fraternal messenger; the Eastern Virginia Conference met this year at Barrett's Church, in Southampton County. This same year, Rev. E. W. Beale was elected superintendent of the Suffolk Collegiate Institute, which position he filled successfully two years and gave an impetus to the educational interests of the Eastern Virginia Conference. Years before this, he was an instructor in the Graham Institute, Graham, N. C. He served also on the executive and educational committees of the Conference and was chairman of the home mission committee. And he also attended the North Carolina and Virginia Conference as a fraternal messenger, at Damascus, in Orange County, N. C.

At the Conference at Windsor, Va., in 1879, Rev. E. W. Beale was chairman of the home mission committee and served on the executive committee and on that of education. He was pastor of the Churches at Antioch, Bethlehem, Berea (Nansemond), Oakland, and Windsor. He attended the North Carolina and Virginia Conference as a fraternal messenger. And in 1880, he was chairman of the committees on home missions and on education, of the Conference at Bethany, in Southampton County, Va.

At Damascus, in 1862, the "report on the condition of the country," referred to above, was adopted as follows:

"Whereas, the present deplorable condition of our beloved country calls for sympathy and efforts of both Church and State in order that she may be preserved amid the perils which threaten her on every hand; and whereas, our prosperity, national as well as religious, depends upon the help of divine Providence—therefore:

"1. Resolved, That, though we have no desire to interfere with political affairs, yet we claim the common privilege granted to all citizens of expressing our views in a manner becoming Christian men.

"2. Resolved, That the cause of the Confederate States is in every sense our own cause, that her destiny is our destiny, that we will fall or stand with her, and that to the achievement of her independence we will devote everything which we hold dear on earth.

"3. Resolved, That we will endeavor to impress our people with the importance of looking more earnestly in this matter to the help of Almighty God.

"4. Resolved, That in order to secure divine assistance, it is necessary that we should set our faces against the many corruptions which are being practiced in this land; and especially would we enjoin upon our ministers and brethren generally the importance of using their influence and example against the fearful sin of extortion.

"5. Resolved, That we recommend every Church to meet at least once every month for the special purpose of invoking God's blessing upon our arms, and of entreating that He would soon cheer us with the smiles of peace.

"6. Resolved, That our thanks are due the Great Disposer of events for the mercies He has shown us in days past, and that in His wisdom and goodness we will humbly confide in days to come. Respectfully submitted, E. W. Beale, Chairman."

When the war was over, he joined in resolutions for the support of, and obedience to, the laws of the land. His heart and life were in unison.

Corn with stalks so short that the ears appear to grow directly out of the earth and that mature in seventy days is now being grown at experiment stations in the United States.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE CHURCH PAPER.

Every organization must have some organ through which it speaks to the public and to its own members. In this age of the press, that necessity is increased beyond measure. THE CHRISTIAN SUN is the "organ" of the Southern Christian Convention. This paper is supposed to represent the principles of the Church and all of its departments of work. It is also the channel through which Conferences express their official acts, their spiritual progress, and their numerical and financial growth. THE SUN is as essential to the normal service of the Convention as the organ of speech is to the individual. A dumb Church would be as silent as a dumb man.

The printed page speaks to the eye as truly as the voice speaks to the ear; and it is much more universal than wireless or radio. The press speaks in more languages and to more people than any other method of human intercourse. Prophets, apostles, preachers, speak to few compared with the Bible in hundreds of languages. Even Jesus Himself spoke to few compared with all; but what He spoke, printed in the New Testament, is read by millions over all the earth. That is one reason why He said to His disciples: "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do, because I go unto my Father." The organ of speech is a wonderful gift, and the organ of the Church is a wonderful gift, too. Both are essential to progress, and even life itself in this age.

The religious and denominational value of THE CHRISTIAN SUN is measured by the number of families that subscribe for it and read it. It would be safe to challenge the opinion of one who thinks of any disloyal family to the Church that is a regular subscriber and reader of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. THE SUN family is, no doubt, loyal to the Church. Disgruntled Church families read something else, or do not read at all. The Church paper is like a member of the family coming into the house. Reading the Church paper is like everything else—it has its largest claim upon us when reading it becomes a habit. Most things are enjoyed most when they become habits. The habit of plants are their characteristic growth. This is largely true in the growth of Christians. The habit of prayer, of reading the Bible, of going to Church, of giving, of visiting the sick, become sources of satisfaction as the habit in these activities grows. Good habits develop good people; bad habits develop bad people.

Every Church family in the Southern Christian Convention should be a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN SUN; and no family can plead poverty as an excuse for omiting this plain duty and high privilege. Think of 4 cents a week—two postage stamps a week. Think of the money spent for useless things by even the poorest families; and then think of the flimsy excuses made for not taking THE SUN. Every family is able, and every family in the Southern Christian Convention should take THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

SOME PRINCIPLES OF BUSINESS CONDUCT.

It is a good thing that Christians do not need now-a-days to apologize for being business men. The Church does not recognize as valid the old view that business is necessarily a secular pursuit. Any undertaking is sacred or secular according to the spirit in which it is undertaken. Callings, as such, are neither sacred nor secular. Even the ministry may be desecrated into a secular pursuit. When it can be truly said of a business man that he sells goods or manufactures nails or shoes to make a living, but his real business is serving the Lord, that man's daily work is a sacrament, his service a ministry to God.

The Chamber of Commerce of the United States is a voluntary organization of big business men who have the spirit of Christianity ingrained in their program. Recently it has adopted and caused to be widely published some fifteen principles of business conduct. THE CHRISTIAN SUN is glad to print them, with its commendation. They are as follows:

1. The foundation of business is confidence, which springs from integrity, fair dealing, efficient service, and mutual benefit.

2. The reward of business for service rendered is a fair profit plus a safe reserve, commensurate with risks involved and foresight exercised.

3. Equitable consideration is due in business alike to capital, management, employees, and the public.

4. Knowledge — thorough and specific — and unceasing study of the facts and forces affecting a business enterprise are essential to a lasting individual success and to efficient service to the public.

5. Permanency and continuity of service are basic aims of business, that knowledge gained may be fully utilized, confidence established and efficiency increased.

6. Obligations to itself and society prompt business unceasingly to strive toward continuity of operation, bettering conditions of employment, and increasing the efficiency and opportunities of individual employees.

7. Contracts and undertakings, written or oral, are to be performed in letter and in spirit. Changed conditions do not justify their cancellation without mutual consent.

8. Representation of goods and services should be truthfully made and scrupulously fulfilled.

9. Waste in any form—of capital, labor, services, materials, or natural resources—is intolerable, and constant effort will be made toward its elimination.

10. Excess of every nature—inflation of credit, overexpansion, overbuying, overstimulation of sales—which create artificial conditions and produce crises and depressions, are condemned.

11. Unfair competition, embracing all acts characterized by bad faith, deception, fraud, or oppression including commercial bribery, is wasteful, despicable, and a public wrong. Business will rely for its success on the excellence of its own service.

12. Controversies will, where possible, be adjusted by voluntary agreement or impartial arbitration.

13. Corporate forms do not absolve from or alter the moral obligations of individuals. Responsibilities will be as courageously and conscientiously discharged by those acting in representative capacities as when acting for themselves.

14. Lawful co-operation among business men and in useful business organizations in support of these principles of business conduct is commended.

15. Business should render restrictive legislation unnecessary through so conducting itself as to deserve and inspire public confidence.

A PRESSING NEED.

(The following, from the Wesleyan Methodist, applies to our own situation as well, so we print in full.)

There are many pressing needs that claim the attention of God's devoted followers just at the present time. In fact, there seems never to have been a time when the need in every direction we turn was so great as now. The work of Christian education calls loudly for attention and support, the home missionary claims are certainly worthy and pressing; and so we might go on down the list. The need is certainly a challenge to the very best of which we are capable as followers of the Lord Jesus Christ.

But the need which is especially upon the heart of the writer just at this time is our foreign missionary work. This we feel certain is dear to the heart of every true Christian. The pressing need of our own missionary work is well illustrated by something that has just come to our attention.

A man who has labored earnestly in India under the missionary board of the Methodist Church, and who returned to this country in April of this year, makes the statement that upon his return one of the bishops of that Church said to him in New York, that "The missionary society is two millions in debt, two millions in deficit over last year (in income), so that an actual shortage of four millions faces us. Unless there is some miracle of giving before the fall conferences and the fall meeting of the missionary board, we will have to recall missionaries, keep some from returning who are now on furlough, and will have to order a twenty-five per cent retrenchment of all our work."

And this is the comment of the missionary whose heart is burdened for the lost in India: "I have just come out of the greatest missionary situation the world has ever seen. I have seen whole nations turning in thought toward Jesus Christ; lines that we have sapped for decades actually giving way in the greatest spiritual movement toward Christ of the centuries. I speak the sober truth when I say it. In India, from national leader to outcast, there is a facing toward Christ all along the line. And yet we are being compelled to face retrenchment at an hour like this; and at our moment of greatest material wealth. Please do not speak to me of hard times and poverty. I am not impressed. I have seen them both—stalking before me with gaunt figures. No, we are blessed with material resources as no other people of any age has been blessed. During this time of our falling income, that is during 1923, the savings bank deposits increased $1,140,000,000, or at the rate of $3,000,000 a day; one of the great banks of the country estimated that during 1923 the total gain in the invested wealth of the country was approximately $12,000,000,000."

In further comment upon the situation, he says: "I would not be alarmed if I felt the Church was realizing the situation and intended to meet it. But I see no widespread determination to do so. I have been in many places and in many sections this spring and summer, and if I have sensed the situation at all, I am correct when I say that there is little or no movement to meet it. We are drifting."

In a measure, the situation described above in one of the largest denominations is the same that faces our own work in foreign lands. The prospects in these fields in which we have been sowing the seed these many years was never brighter than just at the present time, and if we can but man the fields without serious retrenchment, we are sure of a gracious harvest. We too have been, and are at present, faced with a missionary debt, contracted in order to keep the work on these fields going; we also have been facing a decided decrease in the missionary income from our Churches and people.

But these are insignificant when compared with the figures given above. Both of them could easily be wiped out if every member of our connection felt his individual responsibility and came to the assistance of our foreign missionary secretary-treasurer with a generous contribution. In addition to this, we can each of us give ourselves to prayer anew for our missionaries, both at home and abroad, many of whom have been, and are now, sorely pressed in body, and some of them incapacitated for further service; and also for the success of the great work that has been undertaken in the name of the Lord of hosts. Let us not permit further retreat, for such would mean disaster, both to us as a people and to the kingdom of our Christ.

In closing this presentation of the claims of our missionary work, we employ the words of the missionary brother referred to above in seeking to arouse the Lord's people to a sense of the need and their obligation, simply substituting the name of our own Church for that of His:

"Wesleyan Methodism, to your knees! Let the Wesleyan Methodist Church face in prayer this situation. Let every congregation in Wesleyan Methodism clearly understand the situation and just what will be involved if we fail at this hour, and then let it give itself to prayer. If we will, then we shall rise up in Christ's name, take care of deficit, and more—we shall order advance into these dead-ripe harvest fields."

"PRINCIPLES AND GOVERNMENT."

A committee of the Southern Convention recently placed in my hands for sale 375 copies "Principles and Government of the Christian Church." This is the revised edition, and any who may wish a copy may now secure one by sending the request, with the price (50 cents per copy), to the undersigned. The books are kept in the vault of the Library of Elon College, where, by the way, other valuable printed matter and records of the Convention have been deposited for safekeeping.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The cast of collegiate education has often been an excuse for not sending young people to college. To analyze the subject will reveal an error in such conclusion. It is true that it costs money and time to spend four years in college; but statistics prove that subsequent years more than repay for the time and the money spent in college. The only way to get at the net cost is to estimate the cost at home and the cost at college, and then subtract the cost at home from the cost at college. This difference will give the cost of four years in college. The way young people dress and spend at home in these days is no small matter as to money cost. When you count clothes, company, parties, trips, fuel and board, the expense, in many cases, will be above reasonable college expenses. In fact, it costs more to care for some young people at home than to send them to college. The cost of education is about the cost of seed to sow or plant for a crop. In both cases, the harvest surpasses the seed in such degree as to surprise those who have not thought the matter through. One has only to compare educated nations with uneducated nations to see the difference. It is unsafe to compare individuals in such matters, though that reveals splendid results. One cannot estimate a corn crop by comparing individual stalks of corn, for one stalk may have two good ears, and the other no ear at all. One must compare acres to determine the crop. So we compare benighted nations with enlightened nations to determine the value of education. The conclusion is inevitable, that it pays mentally, morally, and commercially; and, when the education is Christian, it pays spiritually.

Where parents are able to send their children to college, it is as obligatory upon them to do so as to feed and clothe them. Public education recognizes this in the voluntary creation of public schools by the suffrage of the people or their approbation. It is such an inherent duty that public sentiment supports public schools. It is not only a privilege, but a duty, to educate children, not in public schools, but in higher schools —colleges. The State recognizes this in making the university the head of the public school. Society is coming more and more to appreciate the importance of education, and the Church must realize its obligation to its colleges. Secular education has its secular value, but the Church needs education under religious control and example. The Church college is organized and conducted on a different line from other colleges. The atmosphere, the social life, the class-room work, the religious devotions, the tone of the institution, all manifest the Christian life and character.

One other thing. Conditions are such in this country, and in this age, that young people whose parents are unable to send them to college, they can go themselves. It can be written as well as said that young people, in this day, who cannot educate themselves are not worth educating. It takes longer and harder work to pay one's own way through college, but it pays.

ELON LETTER.

During thirty-five years now, Dr. Martyn Summerbell has been making, with but few exceptions, annual pilgrimages to Elon. He comes not only to get an impression of the college for the Francis Asbury Palmer fund, but to give expression to thoughts and sentiments in his chosen field of Christian history and biblical literature. His annual visits are regularly scheduled events in the college calendar.

Dr. Kerr, writing in the Herald of Gospel Liberty respecting Dr. Summerbell's proposed annual visit to Elon, referred to him as "one of the institutions" of our Church. Maroon and Gold, our college paper, described him in its announcement of his coming as "the sage of Lakemont." These are great characterizations, but they fit. Dr. Summerbell has won these appellations by a long life devoted to scholarly research and resourceful Christian living. It is an inspiration to be in the presence of this noble Christian gentleman and learned divine.

As is his custom, he preached at the Sunday morning hour preceding his lecture course. His subject was "The Sorrows of Job," which he properly attributed to the devil. Dr. Summerbell believes in a personal devil. His existence, as he sees it, is required if the spirit world is a real world, and if freedom of the will is an attribute of its inhabitants. This provokes many important questions for meditation and thought. It is hoped he will print his discourse, so that a larger company may share the opportunity of knowing his views at first hand.

His lectures followed on Monday and Tuesday, and treated the general theme of "Europe in Transition"; not modern Europe, but Europe emerging from the sway of Roman domination into the era of free and independent notions. There is no subject with which he is more familiar than this period of human history, nor is there any period of history more generously misunderstood or misinterpreted than this. The "Sage of Lakemont" piloted the mental navy through this tangled maze in three masterly lectures, to which he gave the titles of "The Dark Age," "The Middle Age and Faudalism," and "The Rise and Influence of Chivalry."

Following his third lecture, on Tuesday, Dr. Summerbell left for his home, with the blessing and benediction of Elon accompanying him.

BETHLEHEM LETTER.

If we would be successful in our college work, we must love our work. There are those who think work is undignified; that work was intended for the other fellow; that they are only expected to sit around and use every means to avoid doing their share of the world's toil. They are the "drones" of the "hive," and you know what the busy bees do with the drones. We could learn much from the honey bees that would help us in solving our educational and sociological problems of our day. To be a good student, you must not only work, but you must love your work. Every genius loves to work. It can be truthfully stated that one's success can be measured in advance by noting the amount of energy he manifests, the love he has for, and the estimate he puts upon, his opportunity to work. Lazy brains are responsible for more failures than lack of brains.

The teacher, to be successful, must know what he has to teach, then use his wisdom with common sense. For, as Webster says, "Wisdom is knowledge, and capacity to make use of it; discernment and judgment; discretion; the use of the best means to attain the best ends." Like the salesman, the more complete the knowledge of his wares, the better he is equipped to explain their merits and virtues. You cannot explain to another that which you do not know. When you display a mastery over, and a familiarity with, the details of your work, the students will assume that you know what you are trying to teach, and will have respect for you and will be your loyal students. Wisdom also includes the ability to read human nature, to observe the tastes, the wants and characteristics of the student. If the student fails to be interested in his work, fails to get a credible grade in his monthly tests and final examinations, more often the teacher is to blame than the student, for he has failed to interest the student in his work.

None but the persevering and ambitious will succeed. Here is the "rub," as Shakespeare would say. It is easy to start a thing; the real test is whether you have the "backbone" to stick to it until the desired end has been attained. It requires perseverance to overcome the many counter-influences, opposition and discouragements that befall every one seeking an education. It is so easy to let little things swerve one from the straight course. It has been well said that "A dead fish can float down, but it takes a live one to swim upstream." There are very few students who make much of a success without some opposition. The fellow who has a "thousand and one" obsticles to overcome—and the more he is combated, the more persistent he becomes—is the one on whom reward sweetly smiles.

The prayer of the persevering man is not "Dear Lord, lessen my work," but rather, "Dear Lord, make me equal to my task," and he goes about his work with a determination that knows no defeat.

WHAT IS "AMERICANIZATION"?

The word "Americanization" has fallen under a shadow because it has been used too frequently as a cant phrase, but it is too good a word to be relegated to the limbo of discredited terminology.

What does it mean? Not merely an ability to read and write the English language and to understand all the modus operandi of the American government, with a smattering of the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution. There are unnumbered American citizens of both native and foreign birth who know all these things, and more, and yet fall far short of being good American citizens.

To be an American in truth is to have an understanding of American tradition and American history, whereby there has been developed upon this continent a new social order different from and better than any social organization that history has known, distinctive because, for the first time, here is a social order dedicated to justice, liberty, brotherhood and righteousness. It means further, a profound appreciation of those principles and of that spirit that has made this nation great, not only in populations, but in moral force and spiritual ideals.

When a man of foreign birth or ancestry assumes the obligations of the American citizen, he, by that act, specifically repudiates the culture and ideals of his fathers insofar as that culture and those ideals conflict with the spirit and purposes of the American Commonwealth. There can be no divided allegiance—no other country, no dual love.

Alan P. Pleve, addressing the Jewish Federation in Indianapolis, is reported to have said that he is "opposed to attempts to force foreigners to adopt American customs and abandon their native traditions and habits." Very well, then, if those native traditions and habits are antagonistic to the traditions and spirit of America, people who hold that belief have no place in our country, and certainly have no rights to the benefits and privileges of citizenship.—The New Age.

FRANKLIN, VA.

Believing that at least a few readers of THE SUN will be interested in knowing what has been going on in Franklin Christian Church since the writer arrived here and became pastor, on August 1st, the writer sets himself to the task of telling a few of those things.

Dr. Chas. H. Rowland, who was pastor of this Church for twenty-three years, left the work in good shape, and went away with the good wishes of his members and the love of the whole town. Dr. Dowding, minister to the Church from February until July, bringing great messages to the people on the Sabbath Day, but not being able to do pastoral work during the week, attendance at Church and Sunday School kept up well, while the prayer meetings on Wednesday nights were led by the members, to the profit of all present. The writer had nothing to do on arrival but put on his working clothes and fall in line. The Church was at work.

The parsonage has been made new. The back porch was inclosed, a bath-room built upstairs, the floors reworked, the walls papered, and the outside painted. Not being content with making the house new, the Church has made it possible for the pastor and his mother and sister to live there and have something to eat.

Before the other members of the family arrived, the pastor was invited to come to the ladies' parlor of the Church one afternoon. Not knowing what was to happen to him, he went with fear and trembling—the only man in the midst of three dozen ladies! With due ceremony, they presented him with more than forty pieces of cooking utensils, most of which were aluminum, and urged the necessity of having a lady to take charge of the parsonage.

On September 16th, mother and sister arrived to take charge (the best I could do). Several of the ladies came that morning, and by their magic touch transformed a bachelor's quarters into an inviting home for the new arrivals. At the time for the evening meal, waiters began to arrive with such appetizing "eats" as smothered chicken, sliced ham, potato salad, hot rolls, etc., and our new table was consecrated with a delicious meal prepared and given by our new friends. That same day, a Virginia ham came to our house to stay.

And that's not all! Last Thursday, strange things began to happen. Mystery filled the air. Men were seen passing in and out of the Church kitchen. Afternoon, women began working in the Church, and notified me to stay out of the Church until 8 o'clock, when the family was invited to come over. Arriving at the appointed hour, we were greeted at the door by friendly hands and smiling faces. Only a few minutes of friendly conversation were permitted until we were ushered into an adjoining room for the second degree. Here the mystery was solved, for in the center of the floor stood a long table almost groaning under its burden of things that belong in a pantry rather than the primary department of a Sunday School. Mr. E. L. Beale, in a few well-chosen words, stated that the contents of the table were the gifts of the Church to the pastor and his family. An inventory later showed that among the gifts were 130 pounds of sugar, a bushel each of apples, sweet potatoes, Irish potatoes, meal and flour, and a half-barrel of pears, a ham, a middling and four shoulders of meat, canned fruit, preserves, coffee, eggs, soap, a half-dozen linen napkins, and a number of other things. After some stammering remarks of appreciation, we were served with coffee or tea and sandwiches. It was a delightful evening of fellowship. The parsonage pantry is filled for many a day, and the pastor and his family are deeply grateful.

RANDLEMAN, N. C.

The Randleman Christian Church closed a two weeks' revival last night, with Rev. John M. Allred, pastor of the Church, assisted by Rev. J. W. Knight, of Stokesdale, N. C., and V. D. Sheppard, of High Point, N. C. It was one of the largest revivals in the Christian Church in twenty years. The house was taxed to its capacity each night, while standing-room on the outside was at a premium. People came from miles around High Point, Asheboro, and many other towns nearby. There were seventy-two converted and several united with the Church.

The people of the Randleman Christian Church have remodeled their Church, and the spiritual interest has increased considerably. We have a large Sunday School, with 150 on the roll and an average attendance of about 125. Prayer meetings are well kept up in the Church.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

DR. W. H. DENISON ANSWERS QUESTIONS.

As many SUN readers know, Dr. W. H. Denison, Dayton, Ohio, is the secretary of stewardship for the Christian Church. THE SUN'S editors feel that our people are interested in stewardship, and want to know more about it. On this account, we are calling upon Dr. Denison to answer a few vital questions. In a personal letter, we submitted to him the following questions, to which he very graciously gave answers as printed herewith:

First.—Dr. Denison, please tell CHRISTIAN SUN readers briefly, but pointedly, what is meant by "Christian stewardship."

Answer.—It is that we are entrusted with life—time, talent, property, business ability, powers, never for selfish use, but ever for the service of God and humanity. It is the putting at God's disposal our life, energy, time, talents, influence, possessions, personality. A Christian steward is one who accepts the management for God of all that is entrusted to him, acknowledges God as the owner of all that he possesses, and faithfully administers his life and possessions for the kingdom of Christ.

Second.—What are the accepted stewardship principles?

Answer.—(1) That God is the owner of all things; that by creation and redemption, He is the actual owner of all material and spiritual resources.

(2) That man is a steward, and must give an account of all that has been entrusted to him—how he has used it for God.

(3) That God's ownership and man's stewardship ought to be acknowledged.

(4) This acknowledgment requires, in material expression, the setting apart, as an act of worship, a separated portion of income. (The least amount mentioned in the Scriptures is the tenth.)

(5) The separated portion should be systematically administered for the kingdom of Christ, and the balance recognized as no less a trust.

Third.—Why teach children stewardship, and how may it be done?

Answer.—Stewardship is distinctly a truth for childhood. It is among the first truths of Christianity. It is embedded in the Scriptures. It is vital to the building of Christian character, therefore young children, as no others, are entitled to its truths. They easily grasp the message. Principles absorbed and habits formed in childhood continue through life. They should be taught tithing, as the primary object of the separated portion is distinctly not to get money, but to build character. "Train up a child in the way he should go, and even when he is old he will not depart from it." It should be taught definitely and carefully in all departments of the Bible school, each child should have his own box of duplex envelopes and make his subscription under the guidance of his parents. Stewardship Bible verses are plentiful. For fuller treatment of this subject by the writer, see the March and April numbers of our own Journal of Christian Education.

Fourth.—Is stewardship made prominent, plain and emphatic in the Scriptures?

Answer.—It surely is. There are as many references to stewardship of material possessions in the Scriptures as there are to prayer and faith together, and we believe that those are vital themes. Throughout the four gospels, one verse in every seven, on an average, deals with this topic. Sixteen of the thirty-eight parables refer to this subject. No other one theme has so many parables as this. Every one of Paul's epistles has some teaching on Church finance, personal finance, or ministerial finance.

XV. HOMEWARD BOUND.

" 'Tis fine to see the old world,
And travel up and down
Among the famous palaces
And cities of renown,
To admire the crumbly castles
And the statues of the kings;
But now I think I have enough
Of antiquated things.

"So it's home again, and home again—
America for me!
My heart is turning home again,
And there I long to be
In the land of youth and freedom,
Beyond the ocean bars,
Where the air is full of sunlight,
And the flag is full of stars."

So sang Henry Van Dyke, and so sing I as we come to the end of the way and face the day of return.

It has been twelve thousand miles and more, and it seems years, instead of months, since my last engagement in America, at Bethlehem College commencement. A panorama of sea, and sky, and mountain, and lake, and stone houses, and strange people, all of which seems at once very real and almost like a dream as well. The French-Canadian, the canny Scot, the stolid Britisher, the thrifty Hollander, the vengeful Belgian, the peaceful Swiss, and the smiling and polite Frenchman, all pass in review like the scenes in a "Pathe Weekly" on the screen, and in the foreground of this panorama of people is the never-ending sea, where I write, and cannot see the shore; and there passes within the picture the swift-flowing Clyde, the old castles of Edinborough, and Warwick, and Windsor, the gay gardens and trimmed hedgerows of England, the flat country and canals and windmills of Holland, the war-swept battlefields of France and Belgium, the resistless Rhine, the sublime beauty and majesty of the Alps, the farmers in the fields of France, and, last of all, the restful satisfaction of a week in Paris, that most beautiful city of Europe, although I love our Washington the more.

But farther back in the picture, and beyond all physical sight, there dwells in the eyes and heart of my memory those who live and died for us in those far lands; and, behold, they are alive forevermore to those who are more than mere sightseers in Europe. They move unseen, but are the real life of the picture to me. John Knox, in his pulpit at St. Giles, "fearing the face of no man, for he had seen the face of God." The Polmadie martyrs, who died rather than to recant; William Penn, who renounced both fame and fortune for the sake of his "holy experiment"; George Fox, still speaking from his lonely, plain Quaker grave in Friends' Churchyard; John Wesley, loving and fighting for the soul of the Church which disdained him; John Robinson, sending forth the Pilgrims on that far spiritual quest three thousand miles across a threatening sea and into a trackless wilderness.

And Grotos there was pleading in that fargone day for peace and law between the nations; Pestalozzi living for the larger life of the children of the world, and Sturm for its better youth and young manhood; Zwingli in awful deadly earnest as he proclaims, "Christ or the sword," and Luther, at Worms, with his historic words, "Here I stand; God help me, I can do no other." While over in Geneva, Calvin magnifies God and the State, and dies like a prince with his courtiers about him.

But time and space will not permit me of even the full list of outstanding heroes of faith which reads in my mind like the eleventh chapter of Hebrews and is equally inspiring. It was Principal Garvie, of Aberdeen University, who said to us that there was one book of the New Testament which surely did not close with an "amen," and that book was the Acts of the Apostles. Holy men of old and holy men of today carried on and carry on the gospel of the Son of God "through trials and tribulations and tumult of her wars," and the Acts of the Apostles will only be sealed with the sevenfold amen when the trumpet of God shall sound and the angel shall stand with one foot on the land and one on the sea and proclaim that time shall be no more.

But I fear that I am trying to carry you too far into the reverie which possesses me as I sit here on the good ship "Suffran," in midocean, a thousand miles from any shore, and have time to think of more than you have time to read.

But now my thought turns from yesterday, and its vision to today on the sea, and tomorrow and home and home folks. The sea, which is an endless circle to my sight on every side—east, west, north, south—as far as eyes can reach, and still the rolling white-capped waste of waters, with the dome of heaven bending over it all; the sea which divides us from our loved ones and divides and oft makes misunderstandings between nations which should be brethren! But the angel will come in that great day and say, "There shall be no more sea," and that which has divided us in life shall unite us in a life-eternal fellowship.

They tell me of the thrill I will have when I enter New York Harbor again and face the Statue of Liberty and the glorious Stars and Stripes! I am ready for that thrill, and it cannot come too soon now. On account of lack of state-room space and heavy travel, our party was divided at Havre, and Dr. Athearn's family sailed on the "Aquitania," while we are on the "Suffran," a French liner. We regret this very greatly, as there was so much we wanted to review and talk over this quiet week on the water. But our hosts have been in touch by wireless, and our greeting to him on a stormy, sea-sick day, and signed "From the Suffran Pilgrims," carried a double meaning, you may be sure. But the sun shines everywhere on the great blue sea today, and our spirits are renewed and the promenade deck is inhabited again.

But I save my last paragraph for a sight of New York and the good old U. S. A.

* * * * * *

Well, since I wrote the last paragraph, we have come down the coast and around Sandy Hook and into New York Harbor, and am now with my feet on good old American soil—and it feels good!

And I didn't have a "thrill of sight" at all at the Statue of Liberty, for two or three very good reasons, I suppose. First, it was a mighty foggy morning and the lady was pretty well veiled with the fog, and you never were just sure that you were looking at the Statue of Liberty or some masthead. Then, they held us so long fussing about our health and wealth and baggage in quarantine that it would take all the thrill out of anybody if they had one.

But I really did get a thrill, and an unexpected one, as the U. S. A. cutter drew up alongside of our big French liner, and I heard a clear-cut American officer's voice say, in perfect "United States language": "All right, captain, let her go," and I realized that I was in God's good country again. Of course I had heard English all the time in our company and about here and there, but the captain and the crew and the officers we had met every where, and the street cars and the taxis and the policemen and everybody that shouted for us or at us just shouted in some wild, strange tongue which we never knew. But here is a real, honest-to-goodness man, calling out as an officer, in a perfectly clear "United States language," just what he wants, and I looked at that U. S. army officer with a new sense of regard and appreciation. I was glad to see him, and gladder still to hear his voice—"All right, captain; let her go." My! but that sounded good and like home.

But we finally passed all the cables and quarantines and customs, and even got by Blackwell's Island, and here I am with both feet on the good old U. S. A., and so I must finish my Van Dyke song:

"Oh! I know that Europe's wonderful,
Yet something seems to lack—
The part is too much with her,
And the people looking back;
But the glory of the present
Is to make the future free,
We love our land for what she is
And what she is to be.

"So, it's home again, and home again,
America for me!
I want a ship that's westward bound,
To plough the rolling sea,
To the blessed land of room enough
Beyond the ocean bars,
Where the air is full of sunlight
And the flag is full of stars."

And in the spirit, if not in the exact language, of Tiny Tim, I say: "God bless us every one, and God be thanked for this wonderful few weeks and a safe return to the blest land on earth."

HELFENSTEIN REUNION.

DEAR COUSIN JABEZ:

Once more it is my happy privilege to write you about the Helfenstein family reunion. It was a source of regret to us all that you could not be with us at this time.

Lulu and I started from Dayton, Ohio, Friday evening, August 15th, and arrived at Bro. Jesse's Saturday afternoon.

Jabez, I have traveled through the States of Indiana and Illinois many times, but never did I see so poor a prospect for corn in Indiana as I saw last week. Corn was not up to the average in Illinois, but it was better there than in Indiana, or, so far as I have seen, in Iowa.

We found Jesse's family all well, and in the midst of preparations for the reunion. Everything has moved like well-oiled clockwork, for our host's three daughters, five sons and the sons' wives all gave most efficient help. As you know, the reunion was held on the 21st day of August. By Wednesday evening, all the three sisters and five brothers were here. Our eldest sister, Marcella Mouck, who is past eighty-one, came along from Seattle, Wash., to Tecumseh, Neb., where she joined sister Kittie Bivens and her husband, Charles, and came the rest of the way in their car.

You wonder how Jesse could manage so large a family! And I tell you that never has the reunion been cared for in a more satisfactory way than at this time. No one had to leave the home for lodging. A large tent was put up in the yard, and, Jabez, you know I have always had a liking for the hay mow when it is full of sweet new hay. Jesse's mow was filled with hay cured without rain, and there David, Watson and I found a delightful sleeping-place. Supplied with plenty of quilts and pillows, we slept the sleep of the just.

I am not going to try to describe the reunion dinner, more than to say it was a marvel of artistic beauty and gustatory delight. You can imagine, but you will never know, how much you missed by not being here to enjoy it with us. The daughters and the daughters-in-law of the home are adepts at cooking and serving a meal.

The occasion was a double feast, as our eyes feasted on the beautiful flowers that adorned the tables. Laura's flowers are a marvel of luxurient abundance. Jesse's apple trees are (were) full of fine apples, showing what spraying does for fruit.

The reunion exercises, held Thursday evening, were opened with song, Scripture reading and prayer. David was re-elected president; Watson, secretary, and Roy, Vernon and Anna were reappointed the historical committee. A fine program was rendered. I could not tell you all the good things that were said, and I do not want to encourage you in your absence from our reunion. You would have enjoyed the trio by Dorothy, Frieda and Doris, and the duet by Dorothy and Freida. Freida and Doris each recited for us, and Jasper gave several readings.

As the result of David's asking for voluntary contributions, some amusing incidents were recounted which made the house ring with laughter.

Roy responded to the words of welcome, and the meeting closed by all singing one of the hymns that our father and mother used to sing at family worship. So you see, Jabez, we are trying to keep alive and active as many as possible of the sacred memories and hollowed influences that bind our hearts together. These ties of love seem to grow stronger with the passing years. The sum of the combined ages of the eight brothers and sisters is five hundred and seventy, and over one hundred years of time are represented since last we met by those present here.

We can truly say, "The Lord is good." Our next family meeting is to be held with sister Kittie Bivens at Tecumseh, Neb. Remember, dear Jabez, that you have a standing invitation to meet with us, and we shall all be glad to see you at our next reunion. Sincerely yours,

Dayton, Ohio. S. Q. HELFENSTEIN.

OUR PLEDGES
Men and Millions Sacred, Solemn and Binding.

These obligations were made through the Church to the Kingdom of God and to all that pertains to building up that Kingdom in the world, so far as our Christian Church is concerned. As Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., has so pertinently pointed out: "A Christian can no more drop his pledges than he can drop his prayers or his Church membership. Misfortune may make it impossible to meet financial obligations--'When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both' (Luke 7:42)--but not till 'they had nothing to pay.' Obligations to God are as binding as obligations to men, and God will help those who try to keep their pledges."

Many are making great sacrifices to meet these obligations and pay these pledges. Is your Church on this list? If not, let's do our best to get it there. If there, let's get it in first place.

THE SOUL—OUR PORTION OF DIVINE NATURE.
Lesson: 2 Peter 1:1-10.

"In your patience, possess ye your souls."—Luke 21:9.

The soul! Who will tell us its worth, beauty and exquisite grace? Such a thing is impossible in this life! To understand its loveliness is to understand the loveliness of God, for it is that part of us that is divine and in His image.

All things, of course, babble in a very inarticulate manner, of the divineness of God the Father of all things. As we listen to and look upon the sea, it gives us a sense of His immensity; the soft Southern breeze speaks of His gentleness; the flowers testify of His sweetness and beauty; the twinkling stars of His glory, and the setting sun His magnificence. Yet not one of these, nor all put together, can tell us so much of God as a soul in its innocence and purity. In the light of this, all else is esteemed as nothing. It is almost terrifying to think of such a treasure carried about in such an unworthy and fragile vessel as these bodies of ours.

What a responsibility is ours to nurture this soul in the likeness of God until it shall become like Him! What a momentous destiny hangs upon our actions every day, upon every little decision we make!

Prayer.—Our Father, with the beginning of each day help us to bring ourselves unto a vital sense of all Thy promises unto us, and to renew our vows with Thee. Add unto us, moment by moment, the things that make for Thy likeness. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

TUESDAY.

THE SOUL—ITS TASKS; OUR COMMISSION.
Lesson: Luke 8:1-18.

"Preaching and showing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God."

Since the soul is the best part of us, it follows that the noblest, highest and best work one can engage in is that which nurtures the soul. This means to labor to realize the highest ideals not in ourselves alone, but for others. This is the highest type of service, and the highest type of love. In proportion as our love gains strength and power, will we increase and develop in His likeness.

The saddest fact of the present day is the extraordinary little interest the most of folks have in the salvation of others. The most of folks live and bask in the full brilliancy of the light of divine truth, in which they should be filled with apostolic inspiration and zeal for salvation, but apparently are indifferent to all the appeals of the souls of men.

Let us make a self case of this.

Prayer.—Our Father, forgive us of what we have lacked in the past and inspire us for the souls of men. Grant unto us to see the great tasks laid upon our souls for others, and send us forth to inspire and quicken for Jesus. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

SOWING AND REAPING.

"For whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."—Gal. 6:7.

The difference in the sowing time and the reaping time is seen in quantity, not in quality. We reap not only what we sow, but more than we sow. This truth ought to fill us with joy if we are sowing good seed, and it ought to beget within us a godly fear if we are sowing evil seed. We are all sowing. The minds and hearts of others are the fields, and our thoughts, ideas and actions are the seeds we sow. The reaping time comes sometimes very soon after the sowing, continues all through life, and the measure will be fully counted in eternity. A good farmer is very careful about the seed he sows, and a good man will be even more careful about the seed he sows in the hearts of men. As in new ground we expect our largest yield from the seed sown, so the most fertile of all fields in the moral and spiritual realms is in the hearts of the young.

Prayer.—Our Father, help us while we live to sow only good seed. Encourage us with the hope that in due season we shall reap, if we faint not. In Jesus' name. Amen.—T. E. White.

THURSDAY.

TELLING JESUS.

"And they went and told Jesus."—Matt. 14:12-14 (R. V.).

It was a splendid thing for the disciples to do, and is still a good course for the follower of the Master, but how few there are who really make the intimate confidante of Jesus that He would like to be.

What a different meaning life would have for us if we would form the habit of taking all matters to Jesus for His advice and help. Often that which may seem to us to be of small moment, may hold enfolded a matter great enough to make or break a life. And right here is where the grave danger lies, for we can only see the immediate issues, and even these with clouded vision; but Jesus knows them in all their details, even before we come to Him with the vexing problems.

"But," says some one, "why should we then tell Him if He already knows? Will He not work all things for our good without our having asked Him?" Have you not felt a great relief sometimes when you told a friend or loved one of something that was making a sore spot in your life? And as soon as you told him, it seemed that another was helping you to carry the load. And Jesus invites you to come to Him intimately, that you may experience the great spiritual uplift and joy of knowing what it is to have a "Friend that sticketh closer than a brother."—Rev. I. D. Lyttle.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

FRIDAY.

SUCCESS IN ONE LINE HELPS IN ANOTHER, IF YOU MUST CHANGE.

You think you should want a certain thing, and bend every energy to bring it to you, only to find that you can't use it.

You have struggled for years to accomplish a certain matter in business, only to find as it becomes an assured fact, that the market has changed.

You have studied for years to become a great artist, hoping to settle in a certain place and take your position at the head in your profession, only to find that many others had the same ambition for that place and competition is keen.

All this is discouraging, and you wonder if you were right in spending so much time to get to the top in that particular thing.

Remember that having become an artist in any line means that you will do better work in anything you undertake.

You have an artist's training.

To be an artist means simply that you can, and do, perform a certain thing the very best it can be done—doing things superlatively well is being an artist, whether it be bootblacking or window-washing or painting pictures or singing.

So whether you find your work is the particular thing you had expected to do or not, the fact that you have made yourself an artist in any one branch is bound to make you better in everything else you undertake. (Copyright, 1924, International Feature Service, Inc.)

PAUL'S CONCLUSION OF CHRISTIAN LIVING.
Lesson: 1 Thes. 5:1-28.

"Quench not the spirit." "Prove all things; hold fast to that which is good."—Vs. 19, 21.

The holiest Christian, when he ceases from effort, drifts away from Christ.

The epistle of the Thessalonians is remarkable for its praise of the Church. The apostle commends these Christians for their faith, love and Christian work, but in conclusion he warns them forcibly against being satisfied with the state of grace to which they have attained, and he exhorts them to "abound more and more."

There is always danger in moral attainment. That danger is self-satisfaction. After His baptism and that heavenly experience, Jesus was taken to the wilderness and the devil. After the victory of Carmel, Elijah became discouraged and prayed to die. After the solemn oath of allegiance, Peter swore he never knew Christ. "After the dove, the devil."

Our temptations come to us while yet the flush of success is still on our cheeks. We rise high and then we descend low. After the mountains, comes the valley. It is against this that Paul warns us, that we may fortify ourselves in the position we have attained, and find a way of escape from every temptation and trouble.

Prayer.—Our Father, so satisfy our souls that we may not rest on our past successes. Forbid that we shall be satisfied with attainments and achievements, lest effort and activity cease, and retrogression, retrenchment and defeat set in. In His name we ask it. Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE LORD'S DAY.

"I was in the spirit on the Lord's Day."—Rev. 1:10.

The Sabbath day, the Lord's day, kept in the spirit of the Lord, goes far to hallow all the other days. Christianity demands that we live right every day. Keeping the Sabbath holy lays claims upon us to that end. The sincere discharge of such a day on the Sabbath forbids that we stoop to anything less than a consistent Christian living on all the other days.

He who is "Lord of the Sabbath" does not surrender His lordship on the other days. He is Lord of the Sabbath, that He may interpret to the soul and bring heaven's meaning to the life, and that He may claim the first fruits of all the other days as holy.

The week days following in their train
The fullness of the blessing gain,
Till all hath rested and employ
Be one Lord's day of holy joy.

Prayer.—Our Father, if it be Thy will, teach us that no Christian can truly fight the battles of the week without a quiet Sabbath to do it in, like as in battle to clear the smoke and cool the guns. Help us to do all that is necessary to clear earth's lowering shadows, and replenish the soul with the stores of strength from the secret place of the Most High. Amen.

Kiddies' Korner

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT, Editor.

DEAR SUNSHINE BABIES:

What do you do on Sundays? Last Sunday, after your editor went to Sunday School and Church, she went home with one of her Sunshine Kiddies—and we had such a good, good time! We talked about the "Kiddies' Korner" a lot; and, oh, dear me! it makes me sad to know that I can't talk to each one of you. But I can write you a letter like this, and you can answer it—and, any way, that's almost as good as talking to you, and you, and all the dear other you's that never have written to your editor. But, listen, angels: I am not a magic reading machine, or a fairy godmother that knows everything, so please—please—write plainly and with pen and ink, then I can read every word, and that's what I love to do—and, yes sir-ee, I read your letters myself (the ones that are written plainly), and whoop-ee! I am sometimes 'most buried under all of them. But, see! I am still asking for more; so come on, little folks o' mine, and write me some more letters. Tell me what you want next week.

Don't forget it now.

Lovingly, your editor,

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT.

HALLOWE'EN WITCH NIGHT.

What is that? Just read on and listen to me while I tell you about a wonderful party one Hallowe'en not long ago.

Of course, there were lots of boys and girls there. They came with a witch dress on—boys, too; all exactly alike. Gee, it was fun, too. At 10 o'clock they had to unmask. After they had tried to guess who was who. That was hard to do, too, since they all looked alike.

And what was this big tub doing sitting in the middle of the floor? And there was another tub—two big tubs; I declare! And they were both full of apples, too—one with which girls' names pinned on the apples; the other tub was full of apples, and boys' names were pinned on these. Then over one bobbed for the name of his or her sweetheart. The apple each one caught told his fate.

Over a make-believe fire, in a secluded corner of the room, there hung a large iron kettle. It wasn't long before an old witch rushed into the room. The lights were so low that it was—oooh! so witchery and scary. Then we all had to have our eyes covered with a cloth. Then—ooh! ooh! —the witch began to stir the big iron pot. First thing you knew, something hot (just a hot potato) was put into our hand. We were all standing in a circle around the room, you see. Then came a chestnut burr passed down the line. And when all these things touched our hands we—oh! we were so squeally—and so scared of what we had to hand down the line next. But what fun it was, too. One other thing was a piece of ice, and an oyster, and a large grape, and an old glove filled with mush. Oh, my! they all had the horridest feeling! And when the last had been dropped into the witch's pot, our hostess untied the bandages from our eyes, and we all looked in to see these things we passed to each other. The old witch stirred and stirred, and then—oh, dear me!—she handed us our fortune out of the pot. Some were good; but mine was bad as could be. It said:

"In the front room, two steps to the right,
Your lover waits for you tonight."

And I ran, actually ran, to see who was my fortune. And there, pinned on the window, in front of my eyes, was not a really truly fortune, but a man cut out of a fashion advertisement.

But we had Hallowe'en sunshine cake after a while, and lighted ice cream—and, goody! we had taffy apples, and coconut pop-corn crisps; and we each took a tiny black cat home with us, and funny little goblins—and so now it's most Hallowe'en witch night again. Don't you hope you can go to this kind of a party? M. F. M.

ALICE AND THE BIRD.

Alice was fast asleep. A bird saw her. "Wake up! wake up!" sang the bird. "Wake up, Little Girl!" it sang. Alice waked up. She jumped out of her bed. She saw the bird in the tree.

Alice went to play with Patty. She took her Doll with her. Patty said, "I want the Doll!" Alice said, "No, I want it!" "Give up! give up!" sang the bird. Alice looked up into the tree. There sat the bird! "Give up! give up!" it sang. "I hear you, Little Bird," said Alice; "I will give up! I will give up! Patty, you may have the Doll."

Alice went home to dinner. Her mother was not there. "Oh, where is mother?" she said. "I want my dinner!" "Cheer up! cheer up!" sang the bird. Alice looked up into the tree. There sat the bird! "Cheer up! cheer up!" it sang. "I will cheer up," said Alice; "I will cheer up and be happy." She ran to play with her kitten. She sang and was happy.

After dinner, Alice went for a ride. Then her mother put her to bed. Her black eyes would not shut. "Shut them up!" sang the bird; "shut them up! shut them up!" "I will shut them up," said Alice. Soon she was fast asleep. How happy the bird was! It had helped Alice all the day.—Emily Rose Burt.

HOW THESE MODERN INVENTIONS DO SAVE TIME!

By More Evermore.

Jenny on the wire. Hello! Is this the Woodpecker Department Store? Mrs. Wren, of Clematis Corner, speaking. Please send me a paper of pine needles, assorted gold-eyed sharps; a pod of milkweed silk, letter A, white; a yard and a half of mullein leaf, good quality, suitable for little Birdie's winter coat; and a pair of those yellow lady-slippers that you advertised at 14 songs a pair (dear me, how high shoes are this year!) size 1½, please. I hope you can send them right away, for the dressmaker is waiting for the materials. Oh, yes, from the grocery department you may send me two buttercups of your best creamery cowslip butter, a dozen white moth eggs (do you guarantee them fresh?), a loaf of bee bread, and a jar of honeysuckle honey. Be sure to send your bill with the goods, Mr. Woodpecker.

(Ringing off.) How people ever kept house before the telephone was invented, I'm sure I can't begin to imagine. I believe I'll have to have an extension put into the kitchen. Yes, I will! Like this. Now, isn't that convenient?

"HOME."

DEAR MISS MOFFITT:

I would like to answer the question, "What is Home?"

I think home is a place where there is a family living in a peaceful manner. They should all be pulling to one goal—that is, the goal beyond the river. They should not be satisfied with anything besides the best. Your friend,

CLARINE PERRY.

THE NIGHTINGALE AND THE GLOW-WORM.

A Nightingale that all day long
Had cheered the village with his song,
Nor yet at eve his note suspended,
Nor yet, when eventide was ended,
Began to feel, as well he might,
The keen demands of appetite;
When, looking eagerly around,
He spied far off, upon the ground,
A something shining in the dark,
And knew the Glow-Worm by his spark.
So, stooping down from hawthorn top,
He thought to put him in his crop.
The Worm, aware of his intent,
Harangued him thus, right eloquent:
"Did you admire my lamp," quoth he,
"As much as I your minstrelsy,
You would abhor to do me wrong
As much as I to spoil your song;
For 'twas the self-same Power divine
Taught you to sing and me to shine,
That you with music, I with light,
Might beautify and cheer the night."
The songster heard his short oration,
And, warbling out his approbation,
Released him, as my story tells,
And found a supper somewhere else.

THE BELIEF TRIUMPHANT.

What is the belief triumphant
That shall lift us to the skies?
What is the faith victorious
That for e'er shall banish sighs?
What is the radiant vision
That our hearts with joy shall fill?
What is the gospel holy
That shall bid all strife be still?
What is the answer kingly
That shall take away all fear?
What is the heavenly message
That shall tell us God is here?

Listen, ye sick and lonely,
And ye who with doubt are sad,
List to the message hold
That shall make your life be glad.
Know that forever and ever
You and your God are one;
He is your Heavenly Father,
You are His beloved Son.
Nothing can ever divide you,
Heir of the ages you are;
Born of your God's own desire,
Child of the morning star,
Made to inherit His power,
That He among men might be known,
Made to inherit His glory
When this little life has flown—
Crowned with the choice of His friendship,
Strong with the life of His life,
Made in His image and likeness,
Victor in every strife;
Clad in the armor He gives us,
Naught can our courage subdue,
Lacking the words He has spoken,
Thinking and knowing them true,
Following close in the footsteps
Of Him who this message has brought,
Jesus, our great elder brother,
Believing as He has taught.

This is the great belief triumphant:
Man and his Maker are one—
This was the prayer of the Master:
Believe and it shall be done.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

By H. S. Hardcastle.

MISS PATTIE COGHILL, Field Secretary, 11 East Newton St., Boston, Mass.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

October 26, 1924.

Subject: "The Stilling of the Storm."

Golden Text: "Who, then, is this, that even the wind and the sea obey Him?"—Mark 4:41.

Lesson: Mark 4:35-41.

Devotional Reading: Psa. 107:23-32.

Reference Material: Matt. 8:18, 23-27; Luke 8:22-25; Mark 4.

The sea was troubled. It had been struck by one of the sudden and severe storms that rushed down upon it from the surrounding highlands, and which transformed it from a beautiful blue, inviting lake into an ugly, angry and hungry, raging monster. The Sea of Galilee was like "the little girl who had a little curl:" "when it was good, it was very good indeed; but when it was bad, it was horrid." And this was one of the times when it was horrid. References from the past, and observations from the present bear witness to the fact that a storm on Galilee was a thing to be feared.

And the disciples were troubled. They knew full well the treachery of that pretty lake when it did become angry. And here they were out in the midst of it at night, in the teeth of an angry gale and a hungry sea. And already the hungry sea was overleaping the sides of the small boat and playing with its prospective victims as a cat plays with a mouse. No wonder that, in spite of the fact that some of the men were experienced seamen, they were terrified.

But there was One in the boat who was not troubled. He had spent a full day teaching the multitudes—teaching is draining work, as a public school or a Sunday School teacher can vouch for—and now He was seeking relaxation and repose in the stern of the boat, asleep on a cushion. He had learned one of life's great lessons—the art of resting. Here, as elsewhere, the Master was our example. And He did not even know about the storm.

"And the other boats were with Him." Perhaps the men in the boat with the Master thought that they were the only ones in trouble. It is many times thus. We think that we are the only ones who are undergoing certain temptations, or trials, or sorrows. But there are "others with us." After all, we are all members one of another, and our problems are, after all, really one. As others are called upon to suffer and endure, so are we to play our part and bear our own burdens. When we think of the greater burden of others, there is little excuse for self-pity for ourselves.

The disciples arouse the Master with the question, and, in a sense, the reproach, "Carest Thou not that we perish?" They felt that He had left them in jeopardy all too long. But He that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep. And arising in all His divine dignity, He rebuked the wind, and said unto the sea, "Peace, be still." And the wind ceased and there was a great calm. It seems so strange on the face of it all. The idea of a man speaking to the wind and the sea, and having them to obey Him! Some people have been scandalized at this unheard-of thing, and they have tried to explain the thing away by saying that it was only a coincidence or that it was just a piece of human sagacity in that Jesus saw that the tempest would soon be past. And perhaps this is true. But we ascribe miraculous powers to Jesus in other spheres of life. We claim that He can take a human life, broken and ruined by sin, and make it a new creation. We believe that He has all power under heaven and earth. Why should it be thought a thing incredible that He who rose from the dead should have power over inanimate nature? Why should we think it a thing incredible that He who stills the human heart and speaks calm to the soul should still the wind and bring calm to the sea? He who believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God need have no trouble with this incident.

And then the Master, having rebuked the wind and the sea, rebuked the faint-hearted disciples. "Why," said He, "are ye fearful?" And there is a world of meaning in that word "why." It was "the why of disappointment in men who ought to have known by this time to trust Him and not to be afraid." And they marveled at one who could command even the wind and the sea to obey Him.

Some Suggestive Teaching Points.

1. Power often comes through repose.
2. He who would minister to multitudes must at times get away from the multitudes.
3. Our troubles and sorrows are the common lot of humanity.
4. Storms are often testing-times in life.
5. Jesus Christ is Lord and Master of nature.
6. "Fellowship with Christ does not insure outward calm."
7. "Fellowship with Christ does afford inward calm amid outward storm."
8. "Fellowship with Christ does insure against ultimate disaster."
9. Jesus Christ does care whether we perish.
10. Real faith is a vital thing.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

By Wm. T. Scott.

Topic for October 26, 1924.

Scripture Lesson: Isa. 1:16-20.

Daily Readings: M., Oct. 20—Weakness of anarchy.—Judges 17:6. T., Oct. 21—To prevent crime.—Rom. 13:1-7. Wed., Oct. 22—For social safety.—Ps. 122:1-9. T., Oct. 23—For social progress.—Ps. 125:1-5. Fri., Oct. 24—To curb Satan.—2 Thes. 2:1-12; S., Oct. 25—To encourage righteousness.—Prov. 14:34.

Thought for Study: "Why is law enforcement vital to our nation?"

God's universe is controlled by Him through His laws. There are laws of morals and righteousness as well as of gravitation. Law expresses an orderly way of doing things. The mob spirit is dangerous to society and to itself. A Christian society seeks to promote the spirit of interdependence. Christian Endeavorers should rally its forces with the others of Christianity and inculcate the principles of Christ into the hearts and minds of the radicals. An extremist in thoughts and deeds is an enemy to society, and the purpose of the Christian forces should be to promote principles of law and order which always make for a more progressive people.

Anarchy shows a weakness, and it is an enemy to civilization. Right enforcement of our laws will leave no place for the anarchist. The cure for crime is the prevention, and not simply dealing with the products. For the social safety and social progress of our nation there must be an understanding and enforcement of the laws.

NOTICE.

To the Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies of the Southern Christian Convention:

Since the organization of the Board of Christian Education of the Southern Christian Church, the South has been fortunate in getting the services of the field secretaries in helping frame our work.

Mr. Hermon Eldredge has spent over a month in the South; Miss Lucy Eldredge spent about six weeks here in connection with our Chautauqua and vacation Bible school work; and Dr. W. P. Fletcher spent a month in institute work in North Carolina. In addition to paying the salaries and expenses of these field workers, the Board has given scholarships to a number of our young men from the South. In the financial plan we have been following, the Churches of the South have contributed but very little to the support of this work. We feel that this is a mistake. The South is one of the most progressive sections in the Chrisatin Church, and we do not feel that we need, in any sense, to be objects of charity of our Northern and Western brethren, and we have not intended to be; it has come about through our financial plan of co-operation with the General Convention. Steps were taken at the last session of the Southern Christian Convention to remedy this condition, and a resolution was passed authorizing the Board of Religious Education of the Southern Christian Convention to call for an offering from all our Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies for the support of this work. The offering will be taken November 2d, and all contributions are to be sent to Mr. C. H. Stephenson, 214 South Wilmington Street, Raleigh, N. C., who is treasurer of the Board of Religious Education.

We hope to have a liberal offering from 100 per cent of our Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies. Literature and further information will be mailed to the officials of your organization.

EASTERN N. C. CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

The Eastern North Carolina Christian Conference will meet this year at Pleasant Union, Harnett County, Tuesday, November 18th, at 10 A. M., and will continue in session for three days.

All Churches are urgently requested to send a full delegation and to meet all their apportionments in full, if possible. Delegates and reports should be in Conference at the opening session, so that officers and committees may be enabled to complete their work on time. It is hoped that all delegates and ministers will be present at the opening of Conference and continue in attendance until the close. We need their assistance in working out the plans of the Church for the State, and they need the information concerning what is undertaken, that they may carry reports back to their respective Churches. This is the only method by which we can do efficient work and develop the cause of the Church in the most successful manner.

Fraternally yours,
W. C. Wicker,
President.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

In the beginning of the year we set our goal for the year at $27,000. By constant effort, we reached and passed the half-way mark in our report for this week. We must raise the other half from now until the end of the year. But by a united effort on the part of all our Churches, Sunday Schools and friends, we will be able to reach the goal. We cannot reach it unless we have the united effort of all our people.

It will soon be Thanksgiving, and it is time our Churches and Sunday Schools begin thinking and making plans to raise a large Thanksgiving offering. Have a get-together meeting, talk it over, and make plans as to how you will be able to make your offering one that you will be proud of.

It takes money to support one hundred and five children. Just think, in a few more days I will have to go to the store and buy shoes and stockings for one hundred and five children! Suppose you had my job, don't you think you would like to have the sympathy of every member in the whole Christian denomination, and then some on the outside? Then, think of suits for boys, and dresses and wraps for girls, books, pencils and tablets for this number of children and a thousand other things. We need your sympathy, your prayers and your help.

It would be easy to support the Orphanage and care for twice the children we do if we could get our people to realize it. We have in the Southern Christian Convention more than thirty thousand members. Now, suppose each Church would put on a campaign to raise for the Thanksgiving offering one dollar per member, and raise it. That would mean some would pay more, some less, and some not at all, but make the offering one dollar per member. On Thanksgiving Day we would raise thirty thousand dollars, and everybody would be happy. We would raise enough in the one offering to build and equip a new building. It could be done if our membership would get awake.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

LASSITER AND VAUGHAN.

On the night of September 26th, Liberty, Vance, Church and community were shocked because of the death of two of her faithful members—Sister Sarah Lassiter and her daughter, Sister Vaughan. Sister Lassiter, wife of Deacon Tom Lassiter, went to see her sick daughter, and while preparing dinner in the home, was suddenly stricken with paralysis and died at 9 o'clock that night. She was 63 years of age, had been married forty-three years. She leaves husband, two children, fifteen grandchildren, and five great-grandchildren. She had been a consistent member of Liberty Church for many years.

Sister Bennie Lassiter Vaughan had been sick for about four weeks, and died at 6 o'clock A. M. on the 27th. She was 34 years of age, had been married seventeen years, and leaves six children, the oldest being sixteen years, and the youngest sixteen months. She had been a member of Liberty Church since early 'teen age.

Sister Vaughan was a Christian of unusual devotion, a faithful wife, a loving mother, and a lightbearer for her Lord and Master. At Liberty Church, on Sunday, September 28th, a great crowd gathered for the double funeral. Thirty ladies carried flowers, fifteen for the grave of Sister Lassiter, and fifteen younger ladies for the grave of Sister Vaughan.

May God comfort and bless the bereaved ones, and may they resolve, by trusting Jesus, to meet their loved ones again some sweet day.

J. E. FRANKS.

The bride, Mrs. McDaniel, is a member of Leaksville Christian Church, of which Church and Sunday School she has been the organist for several years.

Best wishes to this happy young couple. R. P. CRUMPLER.

HOW DOCTORS TREAT COLDS AND THE FLU

To break up a cold over night or to cut short an attack of grippe, influenza or sore throat, physicians and druggists are now recommending Calotabs, the nausealess Calomel tablet, that is purified from dangerous and sickening effects. Those who have tried it say that it acts like magic, by far more effective and certain than the old style calomel, heretofore recommended by physicians.

One or two Calotabs at bed time with a swallow of water,—that's all. No salts, no nausea nor the slightest interference with eating, work or pleasures. Next morning your cold has vanished and your system feels refreshed and purified. Calotabs are sold only in original sealed packages, price ten cents for the vest-pocket size; thirty-five cents for the large family package. Recommended and guaranteed by druggists. Your money back if you are not delighted.—adv.

MOST PITIFUL SIGHT IN LIFE

is a man or woman who has no "will-power" as a result of nerve force exhaustion

All the physical suffering which may be caused by nervous irritability, headaches, backaches, indigestion, heart palpitation, etc., as a result of nerve force exhaustion, are nothing as compared with its awful effects upon the mind and "will power."

The most pitiful sight in life is a man or woman who has "no will"—who has noble impulses and desires but not enough "will power" to carry them through. The memory also fails, the judgment is bad and everything therefore seems to go wrong.

In such cases, do not take mere stimulating medicines nor narcotic drugs (which only further injure your delicate nervous system), but what you need is something to put more nerve force into your nerves and more iron into your blood to help make new nerve force with which to feed your starving nerve cells. This is most effectively accomplished by the free use of Nuxated Iron. This valuable product contains the principal chemical constituent of active living nerve force in a form which most resembles that in the brain and nerve cells of man. It also contains strength-giving organic iron for the blood and may therefore be said to be both a blood and a nerve food. Millions of people are using it. Satisfactory results are guaranteed to every purchaser or the manufacturers will refund your money. Beware of substitutes. Look for the word "Nuxated" on every package. Sold by all druggists

NUXATED IRON
For Red Blood, Strength and Endurance

Are You a Tired Out Housewife?

Many people do not realize that the most exhausting of all work is housework and the care of children. Many a woman who should be in the prime of life finds her strength gone, her nerves unstrung and is weak, worn out and run down with pale, thin, watery blood from the strain of housework.

In such cases, what you need is something to put more iron into your blood. Nuxated Iron contains iron like the iron in spinach, lentils and apples, and like the iron in your blood. You will be astonished at how much better you feel often in even a few days.

Try taking Nuxated Iron for two weeks, and you will see color come back to your lips and cheeks, you will not be so easily upset by trifles, and best of all, you will find that you have new strength and energy and endurance for your daily tasks. At all good druggists,

IN MEMORIAM.

Bro. Otis Scott Boyd was born April 26, 1871, and died August 18, 1924. He was the oldest son of John H. and Josephine Boyd. He is survived by mother and five sisters—Mrs. George Franklin, South Boston, Va.; Mrs. William Tune, Mrs. G. C. Talbert, Miss Lizzie Boyd, all of Halifax County, Va.; Mrs. William Dees, Freemont, N. C. He was married to Miss Lottie Anderson in 1900, and to them were born eight children, as follows: John A., Bessie, Carter, James, Catherine, Emaline, Elmo, and Henry, all living.

Bro. Boyd was made deacon of Pleasant Grove Church (Virginia) in 1905, to take the place of his father, he being the third generation of deacons—grandfather, John W.; father, John H., and son, Otis Scott.

What a godly and pious influence has been handed down to this family, and may that influence ever guide them through the coming generations, leading them onward and upward toward God.

Bro. Boyd was a kindly, courteous, Christian gentleman, always carrying the Christian graces into his daily life. In his home he was a devoted husband, a kind and affectionate father, a dutiful and loving son and brother. To his Church he was faithful and loyal to its every interest. For his loved ones, there is joy as well as sorrow—sorrow for his going in life; joy for the beautiful example he set and the priceless heritage of a stainless life.

Death for him held no terror; he was sustained and kept by that unfaltering faith in God, laid down the burden and went peacefully to sleep.

May the God of mercy and love bind up and heal the broken hearts and bring peace to their souls. Funeral services were conducted by the pastor, Rev. J. E. McCauley, with interment in the Church cemetery.

Done by order of the Church.

MRS. D. J. SIPE,
Secretary.

ALLEN.

Mr. George Allen, of the Snow Camp neighborhood, departed this life September 23, 1924, aged 71 years, 10 months and 23 days. He was a member of the Cane Creek Friends' Church. Mr. Allen was a very highly respected citizen, good neighbor and kind friend. He was twice married. His last wife, Mrs. Claudia E. Allen, and children by both marriages survive him. When death was near, he expressed himself as ready and willing to go.

The funeral services were from New Providence Church, Graham, N. C., conducted by the writer, and the interment was in the Church cemetery. Sweet be the rest of those who die in Christ.

Burlington, N. C.

Building a Country Sunday School

By E. L. Middleton.

Mr. Middleton possesses definite qualifications for the preparation of this work. For twelve years after leaving college, he was a day school and Sunday School teacher in a village that had "once-a-week" preaching, with half the membership of the Sunday School living in the open country; while for fourteen years more he has been a State Sunday School secretary in rural State. Mr. Middleton urges the adoption of no novel or revolutionary ideas or methods. He recognizes the place and the value of recognized Sunday School policies and methods, and has prepared a digest of the essentials in a manner plain enough to render it adaptable for use in any rural school. Methods, administration, organization and development are each and all discussed in this book in an eminently practical way.

The price of the book is $1.25. You can order it through "The Christian Sun," 1536 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

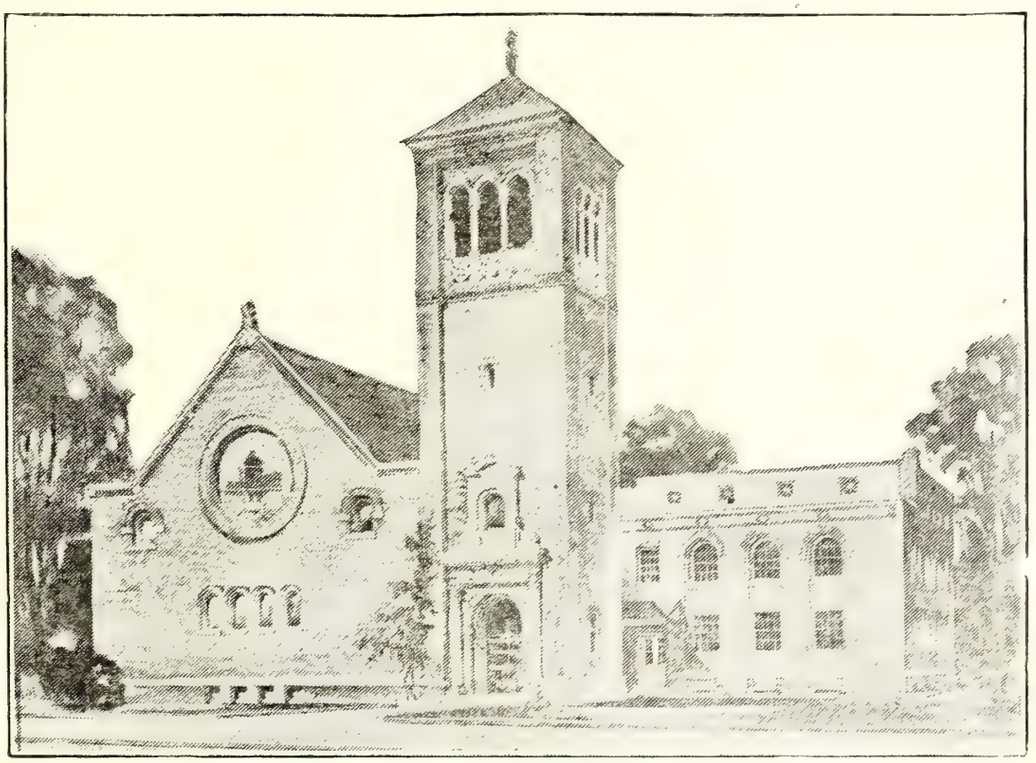
By Rev. S. M. Lynam.

Husband and Wife are Co-Pastors.—

Rev. and Mrs. James C. Hill divide the pastoral duties of Park Baptist Church, McKeesport, Pa. Mr. Hill preaches at the morning service on Sunday, and his wife, who is his co-pastor, preaches at the evening service.

Ghandi Favors Prohibition.—

In the first prohibition supplement of the Indian Social Reformer, Calcutta, leading space is given to this statement by Mahatma Ghandi: "Of the many acts of immorality for which the existing system of government is responsible, the policy regarding intoxicating drinks and drugs is not by any means the least. In my opinion, there should be immediate and total prohibition. It is a superstition to suppose that prohibition would be resisted by the people. The loss of revenue will be a serious matter, no doubt, but that can never be urged as a reason for sustaining an immoral source of revenue." These words from the lips of Mahatma reminds us of the words of a follower of Christ; but Ghandi is no Christian. From this prophet of the East, the nations who call themselves Christian may learn much of the spirit of Him who is the example of all good.



PEOPLE'S CHRISTIAN CHURCH, DOVER, DEL. (See Page 4.)

Prayer Week for Young Men.—

The Y. M. C. A. has set apart November 9th to 15th as a week of prayer for young men, and have requested the co-operation of other religious bodies. Many topics are suggested for the week, including thanksgiving for the young men who, in increasing numbers, are dedicating themselves to God in every line of endeavor and who are striving to rid the world of war, race prejudice, and intemperance. They also ask that prayer may be made for the men in international positions, that they may be filled with the unselfish spirit and wisdom of Christ, and that all men co-operate more in order to conserve Christian energy for a common cause. "Greater things are wrought by prayer than most men dream of."

Drink Question Ruled by Faculty.—

The faculty of Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn., has again, after two years' experience with student control of liquor on the campus, assumed the rule on the question. They officially expressed themselves favorably toward the student control of the matter, but, nevertheless, the change has been made. The Wesleyan faculty evidently had a reason for their action, and, judging from the fact that liquor is transferred across the State in ambulances, it would seem a good reason.

Where the Jews Live.—

It is interesting to note from the Jewish yearbook for the year 5685 that there are now 15,500,000 Jews in the world. More than two-thirds of these live in Europe. There are about 25 per cent of this number in the United States, while all the other continents have about 8 per cent. Most of the European Jews live in Central Europe. It is also an interesting fact that there are 83,794 Jews, constituting a little over 11 per cent. Many languages are found among this number, but the three chief ones are Arabic, Hebrew, and English, spoken in the order named. In the same year-book, there are many other interesting facts about the Jewish people which are thought provoking.

Calls Princeton Professor Insane.—

The Continent, the leading Presbyterian paper, declares its belief that Dr. J. Grasham Machen, noted fundamentalist, on the faculty of Princeton Theological Seminary, is insane. Commenting on a recent editorial in the British Weekly, which was inspired by a letter from Dr. Machen, the Continent says: "In his letter to the British Weekly, he (Dr. Machen) says that Dr. Fosdick 'uses the word God merely to designate the moral life of the man Jesus of Nazareth.' He classes Dr. Fosdick with teachers of anti-theism. Using words carefully and with no desire to be understood in a figurative sense, the Continent is obliged to say that such allegations are sheer insanity. Any sane man who ever heard Dr. Fosdick preach, knows better."

Children Use their Corner.—

The Episcopal Church of Our Saviour, Brookline, Mass., has set aside one corner of the Church for children only. The children may go to this corner at any time to read books of Bible stories or books dealing with the heroes and life of the Church, to look at carefully selected Bible pictures and to pray. There is no adult supervision; only a very small sign bearing these suggestions: "Be very quiet, please," "Touch anything you like," "Kneel for one prayer before you go." The corner is much used. This is an excellent suggestion for other Churches. The children and ourselves alike need a place where we may go to pray at any time.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Sam Davis is doing wonderful work where he is given the opportunity. Bro. Pastor, count him in when you plan for your next revival. Rev. G. O. Lankford, Burlington, will be glad to make arrangements for you if you will write him.

Rev. C. E. Gerringer changes his address from Brown Summit, N. C., to Jackson Springs, N. C. Bro. Gerringer has accepted a school, we are advised, at Jackson Springs, and will teach there the coming year. It is presumed, however, that if there are Churches in reach he will be glad to serve same while he is teaching.

Rev. R. A. Whitten, formerly of Columbus, Ga., is now located at Greensboro, N. C., with his family, and will be pleased to correspond with any Churches, for part or full time, desiring his services as pastor. Bro. Whitten is one of our consecrated and energetic pastors, and will serve well in any place to which he may be called. We trust that some of our Churches will be fortunate enough to secure him as pastor.

"The members and friends of the South Norfolk Christian Church will break ground for their new building on Saturday afternoon, October 25th, at 3 o'clock, corner Jackson and Guerrier Streets. You and your friends are cordially invited to be present at this gladsome occasion. (Signed) Rev. Olive D. Poythress, pastor; Mr. George H. Herbert, chairman building committee."

The above invitation, addressed to Prof. P. J. Kernodle, has been received at the office of THE SUN. Mr. Kernodle has not yet returned from Alabama, but we thank the South Norfolk Church for the invitation and wish them godspeed in their undertaking.

Some of our Sunday Schools are setting, as their goal this coming year, just double the amount they sent in the past year for missions. Mrs. R. E. Apple, treasurer of Apple's Chapel school, writes: "Your letter received. Our Sunday School has unanimously voted to meet the quota you ask for for mission work in Carroll County, Va. We took our first offering for the new year yesterday. Praying every dollar we send may bring many blessings to those less fortunate than we are." If all our schools will follow this fine lead we will easily put up that new Church and school building which is already so much needed, and we can also greatly enlarge the work. All the money from Sunday School offerings the coming year, unless otherwise designated by the school donating, will go to the Carroll County, Va., work. The need there is pressing, and the opportunity and outlook never so promising.
